The chief constable has informed me that she is considering the possibility of ending the current 24-hour status of Chorley police station. That is a matter for Mrs. Clare and the police authority.

Mr. Hoyle: Is the Minister aware that the chairman of the police authority did not know that the decision had been taken?

Mr. Clarke: I was not aware of that. My hon. Friend has put the matter on the record.

I was informed that the reason for the chief constable's decision is that surveys conducted by the Lancashire police have found that, on average, only one person visits police stations between midnight and 6 am. It is maintained that closing the station to public access does not affect the policing of Chorley precisely because of the availability of modern telecommunications. By ensuring that police are on the beat instead of in police stations, new telecommunications systems will result in a higher police profile. The chief constable has reached a decision on the basis of the limited need for public access late at night, which is why she is considering Chorley's future as a 24-hour station. She proposes to reduce its hours of business when the radio communications facility moves to headquarters. I should emphasise that she intends to consult the local community on the process before making a final decision. My hon. Friend—and his local paper—can therefore take some satisfaction that, in raising this issue in this Chamber and more widely, he has secured part of his ambition to ensure proper consultation on the matter before a final decision. However, I reiterate that, ultimately, it is an operational decision for the chief constable. That is the fact.

My hon. Friend also referred to whether restricted hours for Chorley police station would affect the force's involvement with partnership. The chief constable has asked me to inform this Chamber that there is no question of the police's commitment to the Chorley partnership being inhibited by such decisions. That is an important point.

I have answered a number of my hon. Friend's questions about consultation. He also raised the important issue of response times, with which police are wrestling throughout the country. Call centre systems are becoming more efficient at dealing with incoming calls, instead of a whole range of local calls in different circumstances. The purpose is to reduce rather than increase response times. I do not have the figures for Lancashire, but I can assure my hon. Friend that he should not be worried on that score.

On further resources, I cannot help my hon. Friend with his request. As I said, the Lancashire force is relatively well resourced in comparison with other forces and that is an operational matter for the chief constable. I know that the hon. Gentleman will discuss his concerns with her.

This has been a useful debate, which has raised several important issues. I emphasise that Lancashire is being well policed and that crime is falling.

Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed): The Berwick and Berwickshire areas received a bitter blow just over a week ago. As is often the way these days, we read the news in a newspaper on Monday morning, in advance of an announcement made in the House on Monday afternoon giving further details, that we were to be excluded from the assisted areas map. As speculation had suggested, the Berwick town wards of Edward, Elizabeth, Shieldfield, Seton, Spittal and Tower were excluded, with the rural wards of Belford and Beadnell, and the Islandshire ward, which includes rural and urban areas. A total population of about 17,000 was removed from the list of areas eligible for tier 2 status. In adjoining Berwickshire, the ward areas of Burnmouth, Foulden and Hutton, Eccles and Leitholm, and Edrom, Swinton and Whitsome were also dropped from the tier 2 map. Those areas, on two sides of the national boundary, are clearly connected—many people travel to work across the boundary.

We were pleased to be included in the draft map when it was published last year and assumed that we had been included because of the problems caused by the loss of more than 250 jobs with the closure of the Pringles textile factory. A total of more than 800 jobs have been lost from the town's textile industry since 1996. The over-reliance on the textile industry was acknowledged by the establishment of the Berwick task force, with the encouragement and participation of the Department of Trade and Industry. Berwick was also included in the last months of the European Retex programme, but that gave time only for studies and programmes to be prepared rather than for regeneration work.

The proposals of the Northumberland Strategic Partnership for assisted area status for Northumberland noted that > 20 per cent. of the workforce in Berwick on Tweed borough were employed in manufacturing in 1996... unemployment in Berwick shows a strong seasonal pattern... Berwick is a strategic site, being capable of attracting substantial inward investment.

Regional selective assistance is the main instrument of the Government's regional industrial policy. It is designed to create and safeguard jobs, to attract and retain mobile investment and to improve the competitiveness of disadvantaged areas. However, regional selective assistance is the key factor that is lost by removal from tier 2 status. The wards that are being removed include those that contain sites where just such selective assistance could be used—sites such as large factories, where substantial opportunities for promoting employment can be pursued.

Dr. Desmond Turner (Brighton, Kemptown): I offer the right hon. Gentleman my sympathy for the plight in which his constituency finds itself. I have an analogous problem in my constituency, where one ward that forms half of a new deal for communities pathfinder because it is in the top 5 per cent. of the local deprivation index and includes industrial sites capable of modernisation—where tier 2 status can be used to promote significant employment—has been replaced by a town centre ward that is so heavily developed with houses that not even a garden shed could be added to it. One could not possibly spend the money there. I am frustrated and puzzled. Does the right hon. Gentleman have an idea of what is going on?

Mr. Beith: I hope that the Minister recognises that that problem was brought about by the changes in the map. In several places, the very wards in which industrial development could take place have been taken out, while those in which it could not conceivably take place have been put in. That is the situation in Northumberland and other parts of the country.

Let us consider the index of deprivation, which includes factors such as unemployment and economic activity. There are 119 wards in Northumberland and three of the excluded wards—Edward, Tower and Spittal—are in the worst fifth. However, wards much lower down the index of deprivation have been added to the list.

One of the list's eligibility criteria is that areas should be "compact and contiguous". Berwick and the adjoining Berwickshire wards are, indeed, compact and contiguous and they contain the employment sites and the people who would benefit from the opportunities created by regional assistance. About 87 per cent. of people in the Berwick area who travel to work do so within the Berwick borough. That is a fairly unusual figure and it is far higher than elsewhere. Cross-border travel is primarily from the immediately neighbouring area of Berwickshire, which is represented by my hon. Friend the Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood). The area is, of course, isolated—that is part of its problem, not a reason for denying it the help that it needs.

The unemployment rate in Berwick town is 7.1 per cent., which is up from 5.7 per cent. in 1998. In some wards, it is dreadfully high—9.4 per cent. in Seton ward and 7.3 per cent in Elizabeth and Spittal wards. Those figures are well above even the north-east average of 6.8 per cent., let alone the UK average of 4.6 per cent. Two hundred and fifty jobs were lost at Pringles in 1998-99 and 50 jobs were lost at Libris Computing and other firms. Northumberland as a whole is unable to keep up with the job losses and more than 2,000 jobs have been lost, while only 800 have been gained.

Manufacturing accounted for 20 per cent. of the employment sector in Berwick in 1996. About 93 per cent. of women employed in manufacturing work full time. Equally, 16 per cent. of all the unemployed in Berwick were plant and machine operators—the largest group among the unemployed. However, the rate for the creation of new firms is well below national figures—6.09 per cent. as opposed to 8 per cent. for Northumberland and 11.6 per cent. for England.

We could also consider the decline of VAT-registered businesses in Berwick. The number dropped by 6.5 per cent. in 1994-97. The figures for vacant premises show that 23 per cent. of Berwick's industrial premises were vacant in 1998. The economic activity rate is in the lowest quarter for all English regions.

Let us, however, consider the future. The prospect of tier 2 status in July 1999, when the map was first published, led at least three local companies to draw up plans, which would have meant approximately 100 new jobs. Those proposals will not now be eligible for the reduced rate of assistance through tier 3 enterprise grants and are in jeopardy because of the revisions to the map. They were at the heart of the work of the regeneration task force. When a comparison is made with the incentives available in other areas, exclusion from tier 2 will weaken the case for relocating firms to Berwick. We have a single regeneration budget programme, but it cannot deliver enhanced competitiveness by itself. There will be a significant negative impact on the programme, which does not have the resources to deal with it.

I have concentrated on the problem in the Berwick town wards, where the major industrial expansion can take place. However, there are also problems in some rural areas. Seahouses, which has its own small industrial estate, has been excluded from the beginning. The Minister wrote to me on 11 August, before last week's announcement, to say that the Seahouses case could be re-examined if the map had to be reconsidered. Nevertheless, Seahouses has been left off the map and the community does not have access to the help that it needs.

In 1999, a harbour regeneration study called for extra funds to be targeted at the infrastructure of the harbour, which lies at the heart of the village's economic viability. In March, the harbour was refused a single regeneration budget grant. Now assisted area status is denied. A pile of reports and studies keeps showing the need for help, but not the means for its delivery.

Mr. David Crausby (Bolton, North-East): I understand the right hon. Gentleman's natural disappointment, but does he accept that my right hon. Friend the Minister had to do a difficult job as best he could? A reduction was required. The right hon. Gentleman may know that my constituency did rather well out of the redrawing. There will inevitably be some winners and losers. Is that not one of the points of a review?

Mr. Beith: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman's constituents will be pleased by that news, but I would like him to come to Seahouses to explain to a community that is desperately in need of such help why it should be denied to it. I appreciate the Minister's difficult task, but suggest that he could have handled the matter differently.

Mr. William Cash (Stone) rose—

Mr. Beith: I must limit the interventions that I allow, or I shall not be able to give the case that my constituency needs presented.

The Belford area became nationally famous a week or so ago with the closure of a Barclays bank. That community is engaged in active regeneration projects and has been dropped from the map this time round. I would like the Minister to suggest whether the third tier of assistance—more limited assistance for small and medium-sized firms—will be made readily available to those more rural communities. If it is not, I do not see how they can achieve the needed regeneration. That tier of assistance may be available on only a limited scale. The funds may not go round all the areas now dropped from the map and would not support the relevant industrial projects in Berwick.

I shall suggest some ways in which the Minister can consider the matter in the remaining consultation period. I am puzzled that the Government have not appealed against the refusal of the map that they first proposed. That may be because of the time—probably about six months—that it would take to appeal. The process itself will also take some time. The original proposals were subject to extensive consultation, involving more than 350 responses and 40 meetings throughout the country. When the Government proposed the original map, surely they were satisfied that it met the European Commission's guidelines and the local circumstances, so far as possible, on the basis of the consultation. Now the map is completely different. Some areas have been removed and others have been added that have not been subject to such consultation. Would it not have been better to have appealed against the European Commission's objections to the original map, as the Government had the power to do?

The Government's first proposals did not include the limit to populations of 100,000. Areas with populations of less than that figure could be included, with the penalty that they would be counted as having populations of 100,000 for the purposes of the overall figure. It is worrying that the Commission seems to be moving the goalposts. If its doing so excludes the Berwick area, the Government must deal with that.

If the Commission insists that the areas must have a population of 100,000, the logical consequence is to put all the border areas hit by the decline of the textile industry together and treat them as a single area. As the Minister knows, that decline has spread across the borders. What consultation has there been with Scottish Departments and those with responsibilities in Scotland about the implications? Berwick is part of a border economy more than a north-east economy, so it would have been logical to have joined it to the chain of wards that has been affected by the devastating decline in the textile industry. My hon. Friend the Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire will refer more to the matter in a moment.

There are two more weeks of consultation and the Minister will receive representations. In my view, a disastrous mistake has been made in an area in which the Department of Trade and Industry recognised that a task force and regeneration programme had to be implemented because there was a serious problem. If Ministers are serious about the regeneration of the Berwick economy, they cannot deny it the regional assistance that I described. I therefore plead with the Minister to restore the Berwick area to the map when the consultation period ends in two weeks' time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Nicholas Winterton): The hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) has sought the permission of the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, the Minister and I to take part in the debate. I call the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire.

Mr. Archy Kirkwood (Roxburgh and Berwickshire): I am pleased to be able to make a brief contribution to the debate. I am pleased, too, to support the eloquent and telling case made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith). He is absolutely right to say that throughout my parliamentary career he has been telling me that there is no national boundary between the economies of north Northumberland and the coastal communities and those further west, north of the border in Scotland. There is much social intercourse between the areas and many people travel to work across the national boundary—facts of which the administrative proposals take no cognisance whatever.

My right hon. Friend is also right to say that there is anger and confusion about the changes to the July 1999 map. The amendments are severely deleterious and prejudicial to the community served by Berwickshire and the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed. The area was recognised recently by the Scottish Office as a regional economy in dire need of special assistance. Indeed, a ministerial working party was set up to make cogent proposals to tackle some of the issues. If the amdts to the map are implemented, they will severely damage any prospect of development in places where there are real opportunities for doing so. My right hon. Friend is right to underscore that point.

The towns in Berwickshire in my constituency that will be particularly prejudiced are Eyemouth, especially the Gunsgreen industrial estate, and Chirnside, where there are substantial manufacturing employment opportunities. Further west, the electronics industries in wards 7, 11, 12 and 16 would benefit from significant and sustained future development. As my right hon. Friend said, in all those areas projects are in the pipeline—they were encouraged, worked out and are ready to go. The amendments to the map will put the kibosh on them and render the projects nugatory.

Competition is an important issue. As my right hon. Friend said, if Berwickshire is not eligible, firms there will suffer severely from competition from companies in other parts of the United Kingdom that are eligible for area aid.

I hope that the Minister will accept my right hon. Friend's offer of serious consultation with his colleagues north of the border to bring some coherence and sense to the proposals. I endorse my right hon. Friend's plea that the deletion from the map of the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed and its surrounding areas and areas in Berwickshire should be urgently and seriously reconsidered. Account must be taken of the long-term future and prosperity of the entire area.

The Minister of State for Trade (Mr. Richard Caborn): I have listened carefully to what has been said and will take it into consideration in the consultation period, which ends on 2 May. If right hon. and hon. Members want to submit further evidence, we shall consider it.

I commend the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) for the force with which he put his case. I know that he feels strongly about the matter. I am sure that he appreciates that in July last year, when the Government submitted the original proposals for the assisted areas and the structural funds objective 2, we recognised the needs of that area. Indeed, I know that the right hon. Gentleman and the people of Berwick are disappointed that we have not been able to deliver what we put forward in the July proposals. We listened carefully to the views of the local and regional partners and that included the regional development agency. We also worked closely with the Scottish Executive and the National Assembly for Wales.

We found it hard to maintain the July proposals in our negotiations with the Commission. Indeed, the amendments that we announced last week were solely to meet the Commission's concern about those proposals and not because we do not recognise the case that has been put forward today. As the right hon. Gentleman appreciates, the British Government do not have a free hand. Under the EC treaty the Commission has sole competence in this area. We cannot pay any regional state aid without an assisted area map approved by the Commission. We have, therefore, been faced with some hard choices.

Mr. Cash: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Caborn: No, I had better reply to the outstanding questions first.

Mr. Cash: Could the Minister just confirm that it is not simply a question of wanting another place to be given assisted area status? There are circumstances in which people, such as those in my Grindley lane investment area, would want themselves to be taken out, having examined the structure plan.

Mr. Caborn: I am coming to that matter. I am just explaining how the maps are drawn up.

We were first faced with hard choices because of the criteria that were applied much more stringently by the Commission. We could either make the changes to meet the Commission's concern about the July map or, as the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed said, we could take that challenge. We are trying to get clearance for these maps before the summer. That would then backdate to 1 January when a number of indicative offers were made to people who have made applications that we cannot pay.

Some of the Government's indicative offers have gone through the due procedure for regional selective assistance; others have not. If we delayed and went through the procedures of article 88(2) of the treaty the process would go on for at least another six months and the outcome would be doubtful. We therefore decided to submit the revised map to the Commission. We made those amendments to ensure that 16.5 million people who will be covered by the new assisted areas are not disadvantaged.

We have made two principal changes: we have had to reduce the population covered by our proposals by a third of a million people and we have had to show that the areas proposed are more compact and self contained. Both of those changes have had an impact on our proposals for Berwick and Berwickshire, but we could not simply extend coverage up the coast to Berwick-upon-Tweed and across the Scottish border into Berwickshire, as we did in the July proposals. The areas proposed in July were not sufficiently compact to secure the Commission's approval. Under the new constraints that the Commission has imposed, we would have had to include much of Northumberland to ensure coverage of Berwick, and most of the Scottish borders to include Berwickshire. That approach would have been expensive in terms of population and would have had to be taken for other parts of the UK.

Overall, the coverage of the north-east has increased by 10 per cent. on the July proposals and a further increase to allow the coverage of Berwick-upon-Tweed could not have been accommodated within the overall reduction in population coverage imposed by the Commission. The alternative would have been to exclude another area of the north-east to allow the inclusion of Berwick-upon-Tweed. Similarly, within Scotland, the inclusion of Berwickshire as part of the wider Scottish borders area could have been achieved only at the expense of other areas.

The Government are conscious of the needs and concerns of the people of Berwick and Berwickshire and I stress that the assisted areas are but one part of a package of measures that the Government have put in place to meet regional needs and tackle the problems of Britain's most needy areas.

We inherited an uncoordinated and disjointed set of regional bodies with no overall strategy to bring together regional activities and we have tackled that problem. With devolution in Scotland and Wales and the establishment of the regional development agencies in England, we have put in place a framework to ensure that all parts of Britain share in our future prosperity.

The regional economic strategies that the RDAs produced last October are a significant milestone and provide the basis for promoting development and competitiveness in the regions. The Government are working with the RDAs to ensure that those strategies are delivered. Indeed, we are committed to delivering an integrated package of support for the regions to tackle poverty and unemployment and to support regional developments. As the right hon. Gentleman will know, the Budget introduced a £100 million regional venture capital fund to help to finance small and medium-sized companies, a £60 million package to help small firms to get online, a new £50 million regional innovation fund to provide support for business clusters and incubators and an enterprise grant to offer assistance to small and medium-sized enterprises.

The right hon. Gentleman will be aware that £3.4 million from the Northumberland strategic partnership's award of £15.6 million under single regeneration budget round 5 has been allocated to Berwick district for its action for communities programme. The measures that have been identified for support include increasing the competitiveness of local companies, providing work space and developing Berwick docks.

The right hon. Gentleman will also know that, two weeks ago, the European Commission approved the UK's objective 2 fund map, which included Berwick and Berwickshire. That will ensure that many of the most needy areas in the UK benefit from the £3 billion of European regional funding for the next seven years. The north-east, including Berwick, will benefit from more than £400 million of objective 2 funding in the next seven years. In Scotland as a whole, the total value of objective 2 is about £500 million.

I assure the right hon. Gentleman that recognition of the amended assisted areas proposals, together with the new objective 2 maps, will mean that all but 1,000 people in his constituency are covered by tier 2 and tier 3. That cover has been achieved at a time when our assisted areas are being cut by a fifth and our objective 2 areas are being cut by a third. The right hon. Gentleman will agree that his constituency has got a pretty good deal.

Mr. Beith: I hope that the Minister will recognise that the largest industrial project that might be mounted in the wards of Berwick that contain the industrial estates is the one that I fear will fall between the spaces in the policies that he has described.

Mr. Caborn: We will consider those matters. The right hon. Gentleman must understand that we are acting under constraints that have been imposed by the European Commission, not Whitehall. Given that context, we have got an extremely good deal. I am sure that the right hon. Gentleman and many of his colleagues in Cornwall, the north-west and south Yorkshire understand that if my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister had not got the two thirds safety net in relation to objective 2 in Berlin 12 months ago, we would not have got such a good deal. Our coverage in terms of structural funds would have been considerably less—about 50 per cent. of what my right hon. Friend achieved. That coverage, the assisted areas map and what we are doing in the round for regional development agencies represent a mature approach to sustainable economic regeneration. The RDAs are considering the issue in a strategic way and that is the right way.

We could do what the previous Administration did, which was to chuck a few bob at the problem—a few crumbs off the master's table—and let areas scramble for them. However, those days have gone; our approach is about partnership and a sensible approach. We cannot deliver anything but, on this occasion, the north-east has probably got an extremely good deal. I know that it will use the resources effectively for longer-term sustainable regeneration.

The consultation is open to 2 May and we will seriously consider all proposals. We want to do the best that we can for UK Limited, within the constraints that the European Commission imposes on us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We move on to the last debate in Westminster Hall this morning. It is initiated by the hon. Member for Brent, North (Mr. Gardiner) and the title on the Order Paper is "Regulatory supervision of the transfer of domestic utilities supplies".

Domestic Utilities Supplies

12.29 pm

Mr. Barry Gardiner (Brent, North): One of the great privileges of being a Member of Parliament is our link with constituents. Constituency casework can be onerous, especially on top of Select Committee work, but occasionally the two come together in unexpected ways. In those circumstances, the experience of constituents can reinforce parliamentary investigation, grounding the statistics of Government Departments and the National Audit Office in the genuine experience of what it feels like to be on the receiving end of Government policy.

It was precisely such a coming together of theory and practice that prompted me to initiate the debate on the regulatory supervision of the transfer of domestic utilities supplies. I apologise for the length and clumsy nature of that title. I had originally suggested "Doorstep fraud in the sale of gas and electricity", but the Table Office thought it a trifle blunt.

Some 20 million domestic customers in Britain spend around £6 billion a year on gas. Between April 1996 and May 1998, competition was introduced to the domestic gas market and customers can now choose the company that they wish to supply their gas. By February last year, 25 new companies were selling gas and more than 4 million customers had switched from the old monopoly supplier, British Gas Trading. Since April 1996, British Gas Trading has cut its price to the average consumer from £348 to £300 at 1999 prices—a reduction in real terms of £48. That is before factoring in the present Government's reduction in VAT to 5 per cent. on domestic fuel. I welcome that good news.

New gas companies have done even better. Customers who switched saw their annual bills fall not by £48, but by £78 in real terms. That shows competition working to the public benefit. Once again, I welcome that. It has meant a global reduction in customers' bills of £1 billion per year. I should like immediately to acknowledge the role of Ofgas—or Ofgem, as it is now—in driving costs down, partly through price controls, partly by nurturing competition.

The House will be aware that on 12 May last year, the National Audit Office published a report—House of Commons paper 403, 1998-99—entitled "Giving Customers a Choice—the Introduction of Competition into the Domestic Gas Market". The report broadly welcomed the introduction of competition, but highlighted certain issues about quality of service. It reported that in 1998 Ofgas and the Gas Consumers Council received 45,000 complaints from the public about gas transfers from one supplier to another.

In paragraph 13, the Comptroller and Auditor General says:

> One of the main areas concerning customers in complaints received was certain aspects of doorstep selling technique. A number of customers complained that attempts had been made to trick them into entering into contracts and others complained that salesmen had provided misleading information.

The report continues:

> In the light of these concerns, Ofgas modified the suppliers' licences to include rules covering marketing, which they then enforced after earlier attempts to secure effective self-regulation by the industry failed.

That seems to be reassuring. Ofgas acted to modify the companies' licences and set minimum standards.

Not until 45 pages later do we read the more damning follow-up:

> We found, however, that Ofgas carried out very limited monitoring of the new gas companies' compliance with their licence conditions. Ofgas explained that they had given priority to rolling out competition and now this was achieved they would give more attention to monitoring companies' compliance with their licence conditions. The Director General of Ofgas has indicated that he is committed to increasing the attention that gas suppliers give to their social obligations and to improve Ofgas monitoring of their performance in this area.

When the director general was brought before the Public Accounts Committee on 7 July last year, many hon. Members were keen to press him on that point. My hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) asked him directly:

> Can you explain to the Committee how it is that somebody who has never signed any piece of paper can have their gas supply transferred to a different supplier?

Mr. McCarthy responded by saying:

> There are a number of possible explanations for incorrect transfer. Sometimes it is because there has been either an incorrect address or an incorrect individual meter number recorded. Sometimes it is because there has been a clerical mistake.

The innocence is almost touching. However, to give the director general his due, he added, almost as an afterthought:

> I think sometimes in the early days of this marketing, it was undoubtedly dishonest marketing.

Undoubtedly, but not only in the early days. At the Public Accounts Committee meeting, the director general agreed with me that one of the reasons why error transfers took place was that no proof of contract was required by the supplier. All a supplier needs to do is to provide Transco with a meter reference number, or an "S" number, as it is known. When asked how many error transfers occurred each year, Mr. McCarthy conceded that there were > something in the order of 100,000.

However, when asked why Ofgas had not done anything to tackle the problem, such as using its position as the industry regulator to insist that some proof, such as a signed contract, should be supplied to Transco before a transfer could be effected, Mr. McCarthy responded:

> Because I am not persuaded that the additional cost and delay that such a requirement would impose on the system would justify such action.

I have no doubt that Mr. McCarthy understands the gas industry better than those 100,000 people whose interests he is supposed to be protecting. However, what those 100,000 people do not understand is why the director general of Ofgem, the supposed regulator, thinks that mis-selling is a thing of the distant past and why, even when they draw his attention to specific cases of blatant abuse and downright fraud, Ofgem seems to be unable even to respond within three months.

On 27 October last year at 6.30 pm, my constituent Mr. Thrale of Kingsbury answered a knock at his door. I shall now give his account of what happened:

> It was a man who said he was from Eastern Electricity. He had not been invited by me or any other member of my household.

[Mr. Barry Gardiner]

The man asked if I had heard about electricity competition. I said I had. He said that, as I had not moved to another supplier from Eastern Electricity that they would like to write to me about their services and deals. When he asked if I would like them to do that, I said yes (this impressed me as each and every representative from the other half-dozen or so companies that have knocked on my door have all declined to send me any details about their services and company).

The man asked for my address. I offered to write it down for him on his form. To save him, and me, time, I did so and returned the form and clipboard to him. He asked for my telephone number. I declined to give him this information. He said that his boss expected him to get this. Again I declined.

He asked me to sign the form. I asked him why and he said that it was so that they could send me the information. I replied that my signature was not necessary for that. They could send me information without it. He said that he must legally get it to send the information. I replied that this was nonsense and that the law of the land said that anyone could—and do—send me marketing information.

By now I was suspicious. I looked at the form whilst he was talking and saw the word "contract" on it. I asked to see the form and took the clipboard. It was clearly a contract and I noticed a box had been pre-ticked next to the small print statement I would like Eastern to supply my gas. I told him that I was being lied to.

I challenged him about this and he said that I shouldn't worry about that. It was a mistake. I took the contract and asked him to leave. Since then I have examined the form more closely and seen that the payment method of cheque/cash has also been pre-ticked. I enclose a photocopy of the form, of which I still possess the original.

Mr. Thrale sent that account in a letter of complaint to Ofgem and to me on 28 October. His letter began,

I wish to report a criminal offence.

Ofgem sent his letter to the eastern regional office, which sent it to the Gas Consumers Council, which sent it to Eastern Electricity. By 21 January, more than three months later, Mr. Thrale had received no response to the issues that he had raised. On that date, in response to my second letter, Eastern Electricity wrote to me advising that Eastern Electricity, as one of the UK's largest integrated energy suppliers, demands the highest standards of professionalism from every sales adviser who works on our behalf. Immediately following Mr. Thrale's complaint, the sales adviser involved was suspended pending investigation by our marketing department. They have since informed me that the adviser involved has been re-trained, and will be monitored in future to ensure similar complaints do not arise. Furthermore, I confirm that we have cancelled any and all supply agreements relating to the above address.

There never were any supply agreements relating to that address.

I wrote back to Eastern Electricity saying that I was astounded that the salesman had been allowed to remain a member of its staff and had simply been asked to go through a period of retraining. I pointed out that in my original letter I had asked that Eastern Electricity check all the other contracts sold by the salesman, as it was unlikely to have been his only misrepresentation. Eastern Electricity did not say whether it had carried out that check or whether any other bogus agreements had been discovered. I said that I was sending a copy of its response to Ofgem to ask it to investigate Eastern Electricity's handling of the matter. That was three and a half months after the original issue of doorstep mis-selling.

Ofgem's response is lengthy, containing 10 long paragraphs over three pages of dense writing, but it amounts to little. It seems to parrot what Eastern Electricity has told Ofgem, stating:

As a result of Ofgem's initial intervention, Eastern suspended and investigated the agent concerned.

We knew that. It continues:

Eastern state that the agent was then retrained and was due to be subjected to close monitoring in order to prevent further such incidents.

We knew that. It goes on to say that,

At the time of receiving Ofgem's initial complaint on behalf of Mr. Thrale, Eastern state that they had not received any previous complaints about the agent concerned; and for that reason they did not take sterner action against the agent at that time. However, since then Eastern have received further complaints regarding this agent, and as a result, have dismissed him.

Further complaints had been received, yet Eastern Electricity had not checked that every contract signed up by the agent had been done properly. The letter goes on in an unsatisfactory fashion.

I shall pass from the case of Mr. Thrale to the even more confusing case of Mr. and Mrs. Dolan. I pay tribute to my office staff—my case worker, Cathryn Evans, and my researcher on the issue, Brad Perilman—because it was a complicated situation. Seeboard thought that it had signed the Dolans up from Eastern Electricity and British Gas for its electricity and gas. It believed that it had a contract with Mr. Dolan, but he had no recollection of signing up with Seeboard. He could not have done so even if he had wanted to, because, according to British Gas, Mrs. Dolan had signed up with it from Eastern Electricity for the electricity supply. Therefore, it was no longer possible for Seeboard to sign up Mr. and Mrs. Dolan from Eastern Electricity. None of the parties knew that, however, because Mr. and Mrs. Dolan were not aware that they had entered into an agreement.

Mrs. Dolan is an elderly lady who has recently suffered a stroke and is still receiving medical attention. She was relaxing in her garden one afternoon, trying to recuperate from her illness, when a charming young man presented himself over the fence and started chatting to her. Apparently, on the basis of that conversation and without anything being signed, her supply was transferred. Mr. Dolan wrote to me in high dudgeon, stating that he could not understand how his supplies had been transferred to Seeboard. When people from Seeboard eventually responded to my calls they produced, after much pleading, a transcript of the conversation, which they said showed that a verbal contract had been entered into. What it showed in fact was that Mr. Dolan was extremely confused about the nature of the conversation that he was having with the person from Seeboard.

Ofgem, the regulator, is supposed to protect people such as the Dolans. Mr. Thale, an acute and intelligent young man, saw what was going on and took action. It took the regulator three and a half months to fail to do anything about compensation, or to investigate that case. The situation for Mr. and Mrs. Dolan is a lot worse. Let us not forget that 100,000 such error transfers happen every year. People may simply be confused about which company they have said that they might like to go with. When asked whether they know that there is competition and that they may be able to get gas and electricity more cheaply, they say, "Oh yes, we know that." They find out a few weeks later that they are being billed by a different supplier.

The Government must press Ofgem to do its job properly and to ensure that written evidence of a contract is required, so that there are no more cases of telephone conversations with confused, elderly individuals being adduced as the reason for a transfer of supply. Ofgem has done a good job in pressing for competition in the market and in trying to reduce the price of gas and electricity. However, it must take seriously its role of protecting the consumer and ensure that what has been a great boon—cheaper gas and electricity—does not become a nightmare for the 100,000 people every year who fail to understand why they are paying money to people of whom they have never heard.

The Minister for Energy and Competitiveness in Europe (Mrs. Helen Liddell): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Mr. Gardiner) on securing the debate and recognise the passion that he feels in relation to the cases that he has described. I have seen the correspondence relating to the case of Mr. Thrale, but not of the Dolans. I undertake personally to pursue the cases of Mr. Thrale and the Dolans, and I will ensure that the director general of Ofgem receives a copy of my hon. Friend's comments from this morning, to ensure that appropriate action is taken.

My hon. Friend began by saying that it is often a happy happenstance that one's roles as a constituency Member of Parliament and as a member of a Select Committee coincide. I have read his interrogation—if I may call it that—of the director general, and I recognise that his questioning came from a specific angle.

It is also a fortunate occurrence—perhaps happy is the wrong word—when as a Minister I handle issues that I confront as a constituency Member of Parliament. Few Members of the House will not have had cause to consider instances of doorstep mis-selling—not only of gas and electricity, although in those cases the issues involved are still fresh. Many of our constituents remain puzzled about how gas and electricity can be supplied by several different companies, because they are confused about whether the gas has to come through separate pipes. I understand that confusion, on which some people play.

My hon. Friend alleges criminal behaviour. It is important that companies pursue criminal action when there is clear evidence that agents acted in a particular way. I am sure that my hon. Friend recognises that in the first instance that is a matter for the Director of Public Prosecutions. I should like the DPP to prosecute in such cases, but it is not for me to say where the priority should lie in that department.

It is vital that action is taken. The issue has featured in many consumer television programmes. "Watchdog" made an interesting and rather frightening investigation into some of the selling techniques employed on the doorstep. As a consumer, I would not want to be confronted with some of the aggressive selling techniques that have been applied on the doorstep.

We should put the matter in context. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for drawing attention to the extent to which competition in gas and electricity supply has driven down prices. He and I are of a similar ethnic origin, and are well aware that people who look after the pennies find that the pounds look after themselves. Consumers can be something like £20 better off as a consequence of increased competition in gas and electricity supply. In the vast majority of cases, no problems are experienced in the transfer. However, today we must consider cases in which problems are encountered. Sometimes, such problems are the result of error, and we all recognise that errors are made. However, when I hear of cases such as those of Mr. Thrale and Mr. and Mrs. Dolan, it becomes more pressing to ensure that instances of unacceptable mis-selling are probed much more aggressively.

I am not trying to mitigate or pass the buck for the difficulties experienced by my hon. Friend's constituents, but we are introducing a Bill on the regulation of utilities that focuses on the consumer's role. Until the Bill receives Royal Assent, the legal requirement on the regulator continues to focus on the shareholder before the rights of the consumer. The Utilities Bill will change that, giving the consumer pride of place. A new Gas and Electricity Consumer Council will be created, which will have a much closer relationship with the regulatory authority.

Interestingly, my hon. Friend referred to the regulator by name. That is perfectly understandable, as at the moment the regulator is a single individual. Mr. McCarthy is a talented and experienced gentleman who has taken his work extremely seriously, as have other regulators. However, it is important to depersonalise regulation. The Utilities Bill will create a regulatory authority that will be responsible for consumer interests, backed up by and working with the Gas and Electricity Consumer Council. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will impose social and environmental guidelines that will dictate the work of the regulatory authority.

My hon. Friend is aware that by changing supplier—even if they did not know that they were doing so—Mr. Thrale and Mr. and Mrs. Dolan might have had an opportunity to benefit from lower tariffs. Sadly, many poorer consumers cannot benefit from better tariffs. My hon. Friend and I share a commitment to ensure that stories such as those of the Thrales and the Dolans should not discourage poorer people. The regulator should be able to help the fuel poor to benefit from competition by driving down their bills.

My hon. Friend will want concrete evidence of how the regulator and the Government can help constituents such as Mr. Thrale and the Dolans. In November last year, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced an inquiry into gas and electricity competition, not least because the amount of switching that we had anticipated had not occurred. Other reasons were the lack of balance and the opportunity to examine instances of mis-selling. Ofgem extended its market licence conditions for a further two years and is currently considering responses to its proposal to develop the existing licence conditions for companies. Measures under consideration include a requirement for domestic gas and electricity companies to have effective management of the sales agents who act on their behalf. In some cases, Mr. Winterton, they are sub-contractors—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Nicholas Winterton): Order. The chair is addressed as Mr. Deputy Speaker or Madam Deputy Speaker.

Mrs. Liddell: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am used to seeing you in another setting, in which you are always extremely helpful. I shall return to referring to you as Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The consultation will look at ensuring that gas suppliers provide customers who have entered into contracts over the telephone with a copy of the terms and conditions of the contract, which is along the lines that apply for electricity customers. It will also consider extension of the coverage of conditions to sales undertaken in public places, such as shopping centres and over the garden fence, which is relevant to Mrs. Dolan's case. Extension of the conditions will also cover certain aspects of internet sales. Ofgem has continued to seek supplier compliance with the marketing conditions and good market practice by suppliers.

In addition to monitoring performance, Ofgem has been engaged in an active programme of review meetings with suppliers, identifying lapses in suppliers' arrangements and highlighting best practice. A recent industry workshop linked general electricity regulation with overall consumer regulation. That protects the consumer, not least by providing an opportunity for a cooling-off period on contracts that may be signed. Ofgem intends to put into the public domain data on consumer complaints against individual suppliers. That will be done on a monthly basis and for the year to date. It will allow customers and others to establish the relative performance of gas and electricity suppliers. If there is to be proper competition and effective operation of the market, information must be available about how companies conduct themselves. That is a powerful way of ensuring that they behave properly. In another setting, I found it to be of considerable use in concentrating companies' attention on customers with whom they are not dealing properly. A good experience of competitive gas and electricity markets is important in the first instance, which is often on the doorstep. It would be unacceptable if people were deprived of their rights, or lost out on the benefits of competition. I shall consider my hon. Friend's points, and I congratulate him on his contribution.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute to One o'clock.

[SIR ALAN HASELHURST in the Chair]

Ethiopia

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mrs. McGuire.]

9.30 am

Dr. Jenny Tonge (Richmond Park): It is difficult to believe that this debate is necessary, but I thank Madam Speaker for granting it. I have made six unsuccessful attempts to ask a private notice question during the past two and a half weeks. The hon. Member for South-West Devon (Mr. Streeter), the Conservative spokesman, has also requested a PNQ. That is unusually coy behaviour on the part of the Minister.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development (Mr. George Foulkes): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I think that you will be aware, as the hon. Lady should be, that the granting of private notice questions is nothing to do with the Government. They are entirely in the gift of Madam Speaker. Normally, such matters are not referred to, but had that request been granted, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I would have been only too pleased to answer a PNQ on the subject.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Minister has given as good a ruling on that matter as I could have done. The hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) would be well advised to note the criteria that govern private notice questions.

Mr. Tony Baldry (Banbury): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Will you advise the Committee that nothing could have prevented the Government from volunteering a statement?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That is verging on matters of debate. We might be advised to deal with the substance of the matter before us. I call the hon. Member for Richmond Park.

Dr. Tonge: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I stand corrected. As a relatively new Member, I am not aware of the procedural niceties of the House.

I am nevertheless delighted that the debate has been granted, although I still find it difficult to believe that it is necessary. We all remember the terrible famine in Ethiopia in 1984. I remember it particularly well because, thanks to Bob Geldof—now Sir Bob—my eldest son, who was a young teenager at the time, was terribly interested in development issues. My son described himself as a rockabilly, but I never found out what it meant. However, the famine in Ethiopia geared up a whole generation of young people to become interested in development issues. That interest has remained with them.

I am sure that at that time, the House agonised and debated, held inquiries and resolved that such a famine should not happen again. Some hon. Members will be able to remind us about that. Since then, many other disasters have occurred, including the famine in the Sudan in 1989. In 1998, I was a member of the Select Committee on International Development, when it debated those problems. I remember, during that terrible time in southern Sudan, that systems were set up and we all thought that it could not happen again in that part of Africa.

Operation Lifeline Sudan was set up after the famine in southern Sudan in 1989. We had been warned of food shortages and famine in October 1997, but it was not until February or March 1998 that the usual images of starving children appeared on our television screens—the harrowing sight of families with little children literally starving to death before our eyes. That is when people responded. That is when the non-governmental organisations responded and when the Government kicked into activity.

It feels horribly as if the same thing is happening again. By the spring of 1998, many thousands of Sudanese people had died. Ethiopia is not unlike the Sudan; there is conflict, drought, poverty and a lack of long-term development, which is the ideal mix that leads to famine. There has been drought in Ethiopia for the past four years. The Ethiopian Government have been issuing warnings about food security during that time and they are now appealing for 1.2 million tonnes of food aid. If that aid does not arrive, 8 million lives will be at risk in Ethiopia alone, and it is estimated that 16 million lives could be at risk in the Horn of Africa as a whole.

Mr. Foulkes: To coincide with the hon. Lady's success in this debate, the Department for International Development has published an information bulletin on Ethiopia. It is available on the internet and hard copies are available now—I have already given the hon. Lady one.

Dr. Tonge: I thank the Minister for that intervention, but I will not suggest that we should all go home and read the document instead of staying here. The title of the debate was deliberately broadened in an attempt to enable us to consider some of the issues behind the knee-jerk reaction that has to take place when a famine occurs. The matter is much more complicated than that reaction would imply.

Once again, starving children are appearing on our television screens, although they have been wiped off them during the past couple of days because of the troubles in Zimbabwe. I am sure that we will see them again during the Easter weekend. Apparently, the situation is not yet a famine. It is not a famine because the United Nations assessors have not reported back, as the war with Eritrea is said to be using up Ethiopia's resources and not enough people are dying each day. Apparently, a particular number of people must die every day for a famine to occur. In spite of what we have seen, not enough people are doing so, which is very inconvenient. It is tempting to remind the House of these words:

> Any man's death diminishes me...And therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls.

Surely famine does not have to be a matter of numbers.

I am pleased to inform you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that Madam Speaker has recognised the great need that exists. Last night, in Speaker's House, under the auspices of a non-governmental organisation called Farm Africa, Madam Speaker launched a campaign called "Send a Tonne to Africa", meaning a tonne of grain or cereal. People are asked to contribute large or small sums that will be used to purchase grain locally from African farmers. The amount can be a kilo or a tonne, or whatever can be afforded. Madam Speaker has pump primed the appeal by donating £3,000, and last night she raised £10,000 in an hour, which was not bad going. We should all thank her and congratulate her on the effort that she is making to highlight the problems in Ethiopia.

What is going wrong with the world's response? As I said, Ethiopia needs 1.2 million tonnes of food. So far, or at least until 10 April–I have not yet read the Department for International Development briefing–350,000 tonnes have been pledged. After the previous famine in Ethiopia, the Ethiopian Government established a disaster prevention and preparedness commission to provide early warnings and an emergency food security reserve to provide relief food. A pharaoh's granary exists in Ethiopia to provide for the lean years by storing up food from the fat years. What has happened to it? Sadly, it has been depleted by loans to donors, which include the United States, the European Union, Canada, the Netherlands, Germany and the World Food Programme, which have plundered the store of food that was set aside for Ethiopia. The World Food Programme is on that list, but also runs Operation Lifeline Sudan in northern Kenya to provide food aid to southern Sudan.

What sort of madness is that? It is not as if the world is short of food. Why were not the resources replenished by the international community or, on our own doorstep, by the European Union? That question is especially important in the light of the warnings of food shortages that were given last year. How much has the United Kingdom contributed to the European Union food aid fund? Why have we not pressed Brussels to act sooner? Why have we failed to respond adequately to the United Nation's appeal in January for $10 million for health care and water supplies? Only $1 million has been received so far. What is happening about the rapid response force to disasters called for by Sir Bob Geldof a couple of days ago? The Liberal Democrats discussed such a force extensively during the Mozambique disaster. The idea is not new but neither the European Community Humanitarian Office nor the United Nations seem able to provide the world with that much-needed facility.

Mr. Gary Streeter (South-West Devon): I am very much enjoying the hon. Lady's speech. She touches on an important matter—the performance of the multilateral agencies in such situations. Does she agree that the response is disappointing more often than not? I was wondering this morning whether I could think of a situation in which the multilateral agencies had responded well in such a crisis. Can she think of an example? What would she suggest we do to improve the performance of the UN and the EU?

Dr. Tonge: That intervention was useful. I am a great European and a great fan of the United Nations, but I am the first person to admit that they are not getting matters right. We must get them right. A country on its own cannot deliver the response needed in a disaster. Consider the problem of heavy-lift equipment in the Mozambique disaster. Provision of such equipment is not for one country alone. Not all countries can have their own heavy-lift equipment to use once in a million years. We need to work together as a group of countries and we must put much more effort into doing that. I am not apologising in any sense for the European Union or the United Nations. I am simply saying that there must be a way. The world needs us to find a way.

No wonder I have a sense of deja vu. The same confusion, lack of response and failure to heed early warnings before the media and the newsmen arrive happened two years ago and it will all happen in two years' time if we are not careful.

Before I leave the subject of immediate humanitarian aid, it must be noted that the war with Eritrea has made the use of ports in that country impossible. That is undoubtedly a factor. Can Djibouti cope with the demand for ships bringing in grain and other supplies? There are good reports, including some from the Ethiopian Government and the non-governmental organisations, that much is being done in that port to make access easier and to get supplies in.

I have studied the atlas hard to try to work out whether it would be possible to use Lokichokio in northern Kenya. The question interests me. I have seen the fleet of Hercules aircraft and the tonnes and tonnes of food aid stored there. Yes, the food is needed for southern Sudan, but the Hercules aircraft are a possible means of transport. I wonder whether it would be possible to use that facility.

In responding to the crisis in the Sudan two years' ago, the Secretary of State for International Development said:

> Spend less on development, fail in development, more and more poverty, more and more crisis, more and more humanitarian disaster, more and more appeals, more and more failure, more and more suffering, more and more poverty. No addressing the causes or underlying concerns.

As the statement makes clear, without proper long-term development, famines and catastrophes will continue.

Ethiopia has doubled its population in the past 15 years. There is over-crowding, poor farming practice, soil deterioration and deforestation. All those factors contribute to conflict and famine. Many NGOs, including Christian Aid, have been working in the region to develop sustainable practices, such as the construction of earth dams to collect water and the better roads that are essential if Ethiopia is to haul itself out of poverty. The Government of Ethiopia have conducted a massive road-building programme and are making huge efforts to improve agriculture. Why, then, is the United Kingdom cutting long-term development aid to Ethiopia from, as I understand it, £39 million to £19 million in the next three years? In a country where 45 per cent. of the population live on less than a dollar a day, the Ethiopian Government spend twice as much on debt servicing as they do on primary education. All the factors are present. Why are we cutting aid?

I understand, and have been told many times by the Secretary of State, that long-term development aid is not provided to countries in conflict—or that there is a reluctance to do so. The war between Ethiopia and Eritrea costs Ethiopia £1 million a day. That is a terrible waste. However, if we cut development aid because it may be misappropriated by warring factions, as it is alleged is happening in southern Sudan. how can we break the cycle of poverty, conflict and famine that repeats over and over again? I am not suggesting that this is an easy problem to deal with, and I am not apportioning blame; I am just opening the matter for debate.

Can we not provide the development aid through the NGOs that are brave enough to work in dangerous zones? Indeed, the United Kingdom Government do that in some places. Despite what is happening in Zimbabwe, there has been an increase in development aid via the NGOs, for which I applaud them. That aid is provided despite Zimbabwe's involvement in the war in the Congo, also. Development aid to Sierra Leone has also increased, but the situation there is hardly stable or safe. However, that is not to happen for southern Sudan, where the civil war has been running for 30 years, or for Ethiopia. Why?

Southern Sudan and Ethiopia are to receive no, or little, development aid. Apparently, the carrot and stick are to be offered to them. Aid will come only when the fighting stops. The civil war in southern Sudan has been going on for 30 years. The one plea that I received from mothers during my visit was for teachers to educate their children. Not only did their children have nothing to do, but the mothers argued that, however the war continued and whatever raids were made on their villages, education could not be taken from their children. Once it was in their brains, it was there. Generations are missing out.

Are the children of Ethiopia to suffer the same fate? I do not defend the war in either country. In fact, I was appalled by President Zenawi's remarks last week that he would not attempt to broker a peace with Eritrea. He said:

> We do not believe that protecting one's sovereignty is a luxury for the rich alone.

Nevertheless, we must ensure that aid for education and basic health care is provided, even during conflict. It is the only way to break the cycle.

Mr. Bowen Wells (Hertford and Stortford): Surely the dilemma is how much the hon. Lady would expect food aid to perpetuate the war and the conditions that prevent children from benefiting from education, because they die from malnutrition.

Dr. Tonge: That crosses the two issues. I do not suggest that we should not give humanitarian aid—food and water. Those things must be got to the children, whether there is war or not. My argument is that development aid—particularly education, because we all know how important primary education is to a country's development—should not be cut simply because of conflict. Not only is it crucial, but not much is needed. In the Sudan, little is required to educate children—a teacher, a shady tree and, with luck, slates and chalks or a few bits of paper and the odd book. They are not asking for much. Those things cannot be destroyed by war. If the teachers and children flee, education can carry on.

Many questions need to be answered about the reaction to the immediate crisis in Ethiopia and about our long-term policy on development aid to countries in conflict. I thank the Minister for listening. I hope that he will provide answers before the images of death and suffering return to our television screens.

9.50 am

Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): I congratulate the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) on securing the debate. She was not alone in wanting to raise this subject. Many people have been involved in activities similar to those that have occupied her in previous weeks. The Department for International Development has been keen to explain its position on the response to the famine in Ethiopia.

In a debate on Ethiopia that I initiated in December 1989, I quoted the Foreign Affairs Committee report of 1988 on famine in the Horn of Africa. It said:

> An impression may have been created in the donor countries that, since so many lessons have been learnt, the horrors of 1984-85 would not recur. This would be dangerously false optimism...But droughts will occur again—the rains have failed or been inadequate in 3 of the last 4 years—and with a fast-growing population, poor farming techniques, widespread deforestation and land degradation, the consequent famines are likely to be increasingly severe...And by each successive drought the resilience of the people and of the land is diminished. It is a spiral which, if unbroken, may result in tragedy.—[Official Report, 13 December 1989; Vol. 163, c. 1062.]

Who would have thought that in 2000 we would be debating the same problems? Weather is difficult to control in any country, however, and in the countries of Africa people are so dependent on it for their survival.

The Secretary of State for International Development said in a written answer that the UN estimates that more than 12 million people face serious food shortages in the Horn of Africa. Ethiopia, Eritrea, Kenya, Djibouti and Somalia are suffering to a varying extent. We know, however, that the people of Ethiopia are most at risk. Even in good rain years, 5 million to 6 million Ethiopians are partially dependent on food aid—about 8 million face famine in Ethiopia now. As the hon. Member for Richmond Park said, food aid is essential. We need to respond quickly to the plight of the Ethiopian Government.

Last night, I read a briefing paper by the Ethiopian Government, which most hon. Members will have received. It asks what the difference is between 1984 and now and explains:

> Ethiopia has changed dramatically in the past eight years. Since the overthrow of the Derg regime in 1991, Ethiopia has been a democracy and the Government has been working continually to improve infrastructure, agricultural methods and training for farmers to alleviate the impact of rain failure and crop failure. Food security and self-sufficiency is the No. 1 priority of the Government. It should also be pointed out that Ethiopia has not been in the grip of drought and food shortages since 1984.

[Ann Clwyd]

That certainly was not the case in 1989, when there was a similar problem. It goes on to say:

> The improvements in agriculture and infrastructure since 1991 . . . meant that Ethiopia actually exported food to neighbouring countries in both 1996 and 1997. The problems since then have been unfavourable climactic conditions and the lack of adequate donor response, to which the hon Lady has already referred. She also spoke about the extreme poverty in the country.

I visited Ethiopia just before the fall of Mengistu and saw the great efforts that were being made at the time by United Nations agencies. The United Nations Development Project was attempting to give information to farmers. I went out on field trips with people from that project and saw them instructing farmers on how best to use their poor soil. The farmers queued halfway up a mountain to receive that instruction. UNDP was bemoaning the fact that it did not have more resources at its disposal to provide more education programmes to farmers, who are keen to learn. There has also been an enormous population explosion, which was clear even in 1989. Again, the United Nations population programmes in Ethiopia were completely overloaded by demand, and long queues of people were waiting in the streets to obtain information from the UN clinics. Therefore, we must look again at the resources that the UN can deploy in countries such as Ethiopia.

Ethiopia has endured four successive seasons of drought. The rainy seasons—one in February and one in the summer—did not bring any rain, but they are vital because they contribute to 50 per cent. of crop production in some parts of the country. For the past three years, the rains that begin in February have been very short and this year they did not arrive at all. Ethiopia's farmers are probably more dependent on rain than farmers in any other African country. In its good briefing, Oxfam says, > Crop production has been decimated and 95 per cent. of the livestock have been lost in the Ogaden in the south.

We have seen the pictures on television of carcases lying all over the desert. The herdsmen, who are dependent on their livestock for milk and income, have been killing them as a last resort to survive. The population of Ethiopia has doubled since 1985, so land is being divided into smaller plots that allow farmers to produce a family's grain needs for three to four months of the year on average. The soil is being overused and exhausted as a consequence. Soil erosion is so bad that billions of tonnes of soil are washed away each year. Farmers are not allowed to own their land, which is a disincentive to investment in it. Deforestation in Ethiopia has made the problem of soil erosion worse. Only 3 per cent. of the land in Ethiopia is now covered by trees, which is extraordinary.

International Monetary Fund and World Bank policies mean that Ethiopia spends more on servicing debt than on health and education. I believe that Ethiopia has outstanding Export Credits Guarantee Department loans to the UK to the sum of £15 million. Its total external debt is $10.4 billion, which is 169 per cent. of its annual gross national product and 10 times the value of its exports. Clearly, that is ridiculous.

The new Ethiopian Government have attempted to put in place projects to mitigate the effects of drought, such as building earth dams to catch the limited rainwater. They have introduced measures to reduce poverty, such as establishing credit unions and initiating job creation schemes in urban areas. They have made improvements in infrastructure—for instance through road-building programmes—to speed up food delivery in times of famine. As the hon. Member for Richmond Park said, all those projects have been undermined by the cutting back of western aid in response to the war with Eritrea.

In the mid-1990s the IMF insisted on cuts in social spending to ensure budget surpluses. Ethiopia is not in the heavily indebted poor countries scheme and still pays a massive amount in debt service payments: last year, the figure was £60 million. Therefore, while ordinary people in the west generously donate money with one hand, western banks and Governments take it back with the other in interest payments.

The drought and famine have been compounded by the war with Eritrea, even though little fighting is going on at present. The Ethiopian Government should acknowledge that, because they maintain an enormous standing army of 400,000 men along the border with Eritrea, which costs the country £631,000 a day to maintain. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told me in an answer on 5 April that international efforts were in hand to bring the war with Eritrea to a conclusion. I do not know what those efforts are and would like to hear more about them. Perhaps my hon. Friend the Minister will refer to them in his reply.

The International Development Committee has looked many times at the impact of conflict, and at its draining effect on the economy and well-being of the countries where conflict is a perpetual fact of life. At the same time as we are trying to relieve the famine, international efforts should be made to bring that conflict to an end.

There are worrying reports that, despite the famine, Ethiopia is preparing to launch a new offensive against Eritrea. On 13 April, the Ethiopian Prime Minister refused to rule out launching another offensive. That again underlines the need for rapid international attempts to end the conflict.

The hon. Member for Richmond Park said that the Ethiopian Government had reserves of food, but they have dropped to 30,000 tonnes, which is only enough for about two weeks' emergency distribution. Western Governments gave the Ethiopians written assurances that supplies that were borrowed would be replenished as soon as possible, but the donors have failed to replenish. The European Union alone has failed to replenish 78,000 tonnes from the stores.

Dr. Tonge: I thank the hon. Lady for emphasising that point. Like me, does she not feel outraged that, in spite of the experience of the past 10 to 15 years and after all the discussion, debate and inquiries, the world could have allowed those food stores to be depleted to such an extent?

Ann Clwyd: I could not agree more with the hon. Lady. If those food stores were borrowed and promises were made on paper to replenish them, it is a disgrace that they have not been replenished.

Appeals were made for additional food aid as long ago as November 1999, but, as of 1 April, no food supplies had arrived in Ethiopia, and the Ethiopian Foreign Minister said that the world seems to react only when it sees "skeletons on screens". The United Nations launched an appeal for £190 million on 28 January 2000. Oxfam has accused the international community of dragging its feet by not sending aid quickly enough and sending only half the amount that it promised in 1999. Oxfam has provided some interesting figures, which are worth examining, but I shall not read them out now.

The Secretary of State for International Development stated on 12 April that since January, the United Kingdom has committed £4.5 million in aid, including 16,500 tonnes of food. The Department has said that it is ready to do more as needs emerge, and, compared with many other countries, the United Kingdom's record has been extremely good and cannot be faulted.

The UN special envoy recently visited Ethiopia and made strong speeches, stating that it is now time for the international community to act. She met the Ethiopian Prime Minister and was told that the west was using the war with Eritrea as an excuse for its slow reaction to the famine. That may be his opinion, but the response has been good since the needs became fully known. Television has an important role because it puts pressure on Governments that need to be pressurised, and it leads to a good response from the public.

I shall spell out what the United Kingdom should do. If it is not doing so already, it must work with its EU partners and the international community to ensure that all food and non-food aid requested by Ethiopia and the aid agencies arrives as quickly as possible. It must provide cash so that food can be bought locally. Most urgently, it must bring the Eritreans, southern separatist groups and Ethiopians together to try to secure an agreement to end the conflict, at least in the short term, and open access to other ports in Eritrea to speed up aid delivery.

In the long term, the United Kingdom must try to bring that damaging war to an end. It must then discuss with the Ethiopians and aid agencies the problems of infrastructure and logistics to find the best and quickest means of overcoming them. It must try to deal with the underlying causes of recurring famine and break the cycle of crisis that arose in 1984, 1989 and now in 2000.

The IMF, the World Bank and creditor Governments should re-examine Ethiopia's and Eritrea's foreign debt and suspend, reschedule or cancel it and offer quicker and deeper debt relief, perhaps as a carrot for their efforts to end the war. The multilateral development banks and donor Governments should offer substantial and additional long-term assistance to Ethiopia and Eritrea. Finally, the Ethiopian Government, through the World Bank, the UN, and aid agencies, should be encouraged to develop an effective strategy to tackle land ownership and soil erosion. In the long term, that will enable Ethiopian families to feed themselves and, hopefully, bring the cycle of crisis to an end so that, after 2000, we no longer witness pitifully thin, exhausted Ethiopians dying on our television screens.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Frank Cook): Order. It may be of assistance if I remind hon. Members of the convention during these 90-minute debates to give the Floor to the Opposition Front-Bench spokesman 30 minutes before the close of the debate. Only two Front-Bench speakers remain, so I shall call the Opposition spokesman at 10.40, leaving 40 minutes in which to fit four other hon. members. I therefore appeal to those hon. Members to be as concise as possible, so that we can accommodate everyone.

10.10 am

Mr. Tony Baldry (Banbury): Thank you, Mr. Cook.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must also remind hon. Members that the House has decided, in its wisdom, that Westminster Hall is not a Committee. It is the House and the person in the Chair must, therefore, be addressed accordingly.

Mr. Baldry: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. This is still a novel forum for some of us, and I must say that it is not a particularly pleasant forum. I like to be able to see the Minister's eyes when I address the Chamber.

I shall not repeat what the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) has said, because she put it very well. I shall make several further points. My interest in Ethiopia started when I went there with the hon. Members for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) and for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) in 1984 under the auspices of Save the Children and Oxfam. I was also chairman of the Anglo-Ethiopian Society for some time.

I must first express some sympathy for the Minister. I once held the post that he now holds and I know that there is a temptation in the House to criticise the Government whenever there is a disaster. Hon. Members must recognise that, for better or for ill, the Department extracts a sum from the Treasury in these circumstances; one can argue that it is not sufficiently large, but it is a sum. Under law, the Department must also meet its obligations to the dependent territories and to the Commonwealth. Then, we all ask the Department to enter into long-term development programmes. By definition, those require long-term funding.

Another problem that is sometimes forgotten is that, before the Department spends even a penny on bilateral aid, a substantial chunk of its budget is extracted to pay our contributions to the European Union. In this crisis, 17 per cent. of all EU aid comes from the United Kingdom. We do not get credit for that and we do not give ourselves credit for it. The EU will have given about 432,000 tonnes of aid to Ethiopia, a fifth of which will effectively have come from the United Kingdom.

We should not be so speedy to criticise the Department for International Development. Given the competing claims on its budget, Ministers have been trying hard to give continuing support to Ethiopia—a food security adviser is there now.

I also endorse the Government's decision not to give further long-term development aid to Ethiopia while the war against Eritrea is raging. We have few enough carrots and sticks in these circumstances. It is sad that the international community has not yet succeeded in making greater progress. The United Nations has not yet managed to establish a line of control.

As the hon. Member for Cynon Valley said, it is extraordinarily sad that a country as poor as Ethiopia is committing so many of its young, able-bodied men to a conflict a long way from home and spending so much money on it. The international community and the United Nations must give a higher priority to resolving that conflict. We have become very bad at international conflict resolution. We have almost accepted the conflict between Eritrea and Ethiopia as a fact of life.

The Department has the capacity to do much more about logistics—a point made recently in the other place by Baroness Chalker of Wallasey, who probably knows more about these aspects of Africa than anyone. The Ethiopian Government's briefing pointed out that pledges are not enough; it is delivery of aid that is needed. During the 1984 famine, the Royal Air Force and others put enormous effort into distributing food aid. In a crisis, one needs disciplined lines of command and controls. The Royal Logistics Corps is a brilliant organisation, which did fantastic work in Rwanda. If the Minister is pressured by the House to do more, he should send members of the Royal Logistics Corps and the Royal Air Force to help distribute food aid in Ethiopia, rather than simply persuading the Treasury to get out its cheque book. That would be a far greater contribution. It is also a visible contribution that would earn respect from the international community and enable us to lever in influence.

I endorse the Government's refusal to give long-term development aid to Ethiopia while the war against Eritrea rages. My right hon. and hon. Friends will probably agree that, while the terrible internal conflict in Zimbabwe continues, the Government must think in terms of sticks and carrots and it would be right to suspend development aid to Zimbabwe until the horrors cease. If one is pursuing a particular policy in one part of the world, it should be pursued consistently.

Considerable progress has been made in Ethiopia since 1984, and the situation has certainly changed since then. The international community appears to have a far better grasp on events, but we are clearly moving towards a crisis. Doubtless the Minister will assure us that, proportionate to the crisis, Her Majesty's Government are doing all that they can. Many people will give him the benefit of the doubt, recognise the limitations within which he works, and hope that he can persuade the House that all necessary steps are being taken. However, if the Government are seen to be responding disproportionately, they will be condemned by the whole country. As has been said, we should learn from previous lessons. We have considerable experience in contributing to food aid distribution in Ethiopia. I hope that, in those and other areas, we can be seen to be doing everything humanly possible.

Mr. Tony Worthington (Clydebank and Milngavie): Obviously, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I welcome this debate. Given the brief time available, I shall make only one point. In respect of the war, we must not let Ethiopia off the hook. We all carry the heavy burden of war throughout the world. Fifteen of the top 20 recipients of European aid are involved in wars and conflict.

I want to discuss the speed with which the European Union reacts to such crises through its European Community Humanitarian Office. In pursuing its stated task of ensuring that goods and services reach crisis zones quickly, ECHO repeatedly fails. That is a recurring problem. Wherever one goes, one sees evidence of ECHO's failure. We were told that European aid had been provided to ease the famines in Somalia, but we saw no evidence of that on the ground. Eventually, we discovered that the aid was stuck in warehouses in Mombasa, Kenya. It took many months to reach Somalia.

On visiting Mozambique, we discovered a similar problem. The Commissioner arrived on 1 March, long after the crisis had passed, and announced aid of €25 million. That money was not planned for; one did not know where it was going, and it would be spent long after the event. Similarly, the International Development Committee criticised ECHO's actions in Kosovo.

In Ethiopia, it is the same old story. Announcements are occasionally made that the European Union is to give relief food, but where it goes or when it turns up is covered in mystery. Arabic News—which, of course, I read daily—reported on 8 November 1999 that Ethiopia was to get 46,000 tonnes in EU relief. Where did it go? I believe that 30,000 tonnes of it has just turned up in Djibouti. However, it is five months late and its arrival in Djibouti does not mean that it will be quickly distributed in Ethiopia.

On 10 April, the Relief Web and the BBC reported that the EU plans to ship 800,000 tonnes to the region this year. Commissioner Nielson said that if we can now plan in a reasonably professional way to ship 800,000 tonnes, that will be a good start. Does the EU have plans or merely vague aspirations? I suspect that it may be the latter.

Two days later, the position changed. On 12 April, Chris Patten, standing in for Mr. Nielson, told the European Parliament that the Commission had programmed the delivery of 283,000 tonnes. A close reading of his words reveals that that includes the 48,000 tonnes that should have arrived last year. He also said that the EU was about to decide on the delivery of an additional quantity of up to 260,000 tonnes.

The organisation does not know what it is doing. What happened to the 800,000 tonnes that was mentioned two days earlier? Oxfam has said that the EU failed to meet its commitment last year. It provided only half the food that it promised and is now more than a year behind on its pledges.

ECHO does not give the impression of being under control. If one really wants to lose faith in it, one should go to its website. Clicking on the icon for financial decisions and selecting Ethopia brings up the information, "Beneficiary: Ethopia: last statement 16 December 1998". There is no reference to money going in or to the target population. The events section of ECHO's website gives information about events of September 1999. The speeches section offers the speeches of Emma Bonino, the former European Commissioner with responsibility for humanitarian affairs, who is no longer in post. If one looks up parliamentary questions asked about ECHO, it appears that the most recent question was asked on 6 April 1998. ECHO News, the organisation's publication for the public, seemingly last appeared in December 1997. ECHO does not know what it is doing; it is out of control. That is crucially important, because it claims to be the world's largest donor of humanitarian funds and is our major representative in that respect.

This problem concerns not only Ethiopia, but the entire Horn of Africa. Sudan, Somalia, Kenya, Eritrea and Djibouti are under the threat of drought and the position may worsen if the next rains fail to arrive. This is not an emergency such as that in Mozambique—an act of God whereby the rains suddenly fell out of the sky—because it was predicted. In July 1999, the Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs referred to the worsening drought in Ethiopia. Reference has already been made to the running down of the food stores—for example, the European Union borrowed 80,000 tonnes that it did not return.

Will the Minister explain the basis on which we contribute to ECHO? I have looked at the statistics on the amounts that are contributed by the countries involved. Astonishingly, the Netherlands is the most generous contributor. The Scandinavians contribute a large amount, while our contribution is approximately average. The French, Portuguese and Greeks give virtually nothing. I am beginning to think that they are wise in that respect.

I believe in international organisations. The hon. Member for South-West Devon (Mr. Streeter) asked for evidence of situations in which they work. They do work—the World Food Programme delivers brilliantly. On occasion, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has worked well, but it does not always do so. However, I have never heard people praise ECHO's contribution to any emergency. What is the Government's view?

Mr. Bowen Wells (Hertford and Stortford): I shall be brief. I congratulate the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) on securing this important debate and the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) on her contribution.

It is tragic to see on our television screens once again the terrible suffering of the people of Ethiopia. We had hoped that we had found the solutions that would prevent such tragedies from recurring. I am afraid that we all have to take some responsibility. There has been a tragic failure in development and a great failure on the part of the Ethiopian Government. I do not seek to exculpate or to excuse them from their responsibility for this tragedy. Their pursuit of war and their military spending, which the hon. Member for Cynon Valley discussed, have been significant factors. They could have reorganised agriculture and infrastructure in a manner that would prevent the occurrence of such tragedies.

We all know what needs to be done. Twenty years ago, 70 per cent. of Ethiopia was covered in forest, but now less than 20 per cent. of it is. That reduction will affect rainfall and the soil's stability and induce drought. That canopy has to be replaced and we know how to do it—we know how to build dams to trap the water that is necessary to irrigate the trees when they are first planted. However, to do that, we need to put in place a thorough development programme that will encourage people not to cut down trees for heating and cooking purposes—other ways of cooking and providing warmth at night will have to be found.

Although we know how to take such steps, why have we not done so? Why have we not pursued those objectives during the past 10 years, after the previous tragic famine occurred? So far as I can gather, no progress has been made in southern Ethiopia. I imagine that more programmes have been put in place in the Tigrayan areas of Dese, because Tigrayans dominate the Ethiopian Government, which brings us back to the fact that the responsibility for the tragedy lies with that Government and their insane pursuit of a tragic war, which has killed many people on both sides of the border. They have unnecessarily spent huge sums of money on that war.

The British Government created a problem when they changed the direction of aid that is sent to Ethiopia. The Department for International Development decided not to give reduced amounts of money to non-governmental organisations and to give more through Ethiopian Government Departments. The problem with that approach is that once the money has been given, we do not know where it ends up. It has clearly been used to buy arms to pursue the war against Eritrea—it has not been used to preserve the environment, build dams or provide the water that is necessary for drinking, cooking and agriculture. The British Government's policy is mistaken. They must return to the previous policy of sending money to competent NGOs in the field and supporting long-term sustainable development programmes. That might prevent the occurrence of such tragedies.

In the meantime, we have to get food to the starving people and we must do so quickly. My hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) suggested a quick way to do so. We may also be able to send aid through northern Kenya. We must get the process going quickly, get ECHO to provide the money and, above all, have the food delivered to the people who need it as quickly as possible. I beg the Government to take emergency action, with all our partners, to enable that to happen.

10.29 am

Mr. David Heath (Somerton and Frome): I am grateful to previous contributors for keeping their speeches brief, giving me rather more time than I had expected. I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) on securing this debate. It is an important debate, which ought to extend beyond the normal repertory company of those hon. Members who are interested in international development.

The tragedy is that the debate probably would have extended beyond the Chamber, had it not been for news values that put Zimbabwe in the headlines in the past few days, taking attention away from what is happening in the Horn of Africa. I am afraid that it is a reflection on our society that our view of what should be a priority issue is often dictated by the media. That gives particular value to our opportunity to discuss the issue.

We have had a good debate. My hon. Friend and the hon. Members for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd), for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) and for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) have all raised the essential issues in relation to what is happening in Ethiopia and Eritrea.

It is not my objective to criticise the Government. Providing effective aid is difficult, particularly in areas such as the Ogaden, which are inhabited by nomadic peoples. The underlying question is how we provide support for development in a conflict situation. It is a truism that the first casualty of war is truth—the second is civil society, especially its capacity to feed and educate the people and keep them healthy. Such issues come to the fore in every conflict situation. It seems to me, in opposition to the conventional view, that it is even more important to get development aid into those areas, to sustain and, where possible, build on the people's capacity to feed and educate themselves and keep themselves healthy under those circumstances. The attention of Governments, and the resources that are available to them, will, inevitably, be directed elsewhere.

What is the most effective way of providing aid? Is it Government-to-Government aid or multilateral aid to Governments? It almost certainly is not. That is why it is so important to find ways for peoples—rather than Governments—to communicate with each other, using effective NGOs, multilateral organisations, and perhaps even tiers below central Government, to provide effective support.

If the world is to deal effectively with the problem, it must be stopped at source. That means doing something effective to control arms and stop the arms sales that allow conflicts—particularly, but not exclusively, in the continent of Africa—not only to flare up, but to continue, year after sad year, with tragic consequences. Britain is far from blameless. The British Government did not cease the sale of arms to Ethiopia and Eritrea until after the conflict had started. Last February, a British company was found to be organising a shipment of arms to Eritrea—the case is with the Belgian courts at the moment—and Britons are still running guns in the Congo. We must take much more effective action both to control arms on a worldwide basis and to control the activities of arms brokers. We have the same argument about that time and again. The question is, when will it happen and when will effective action will be taken?

My third point relates to the comments of the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington), who asked how we should create an effective rapid reaction force. We all pay lip service to that concept and say that the United Nations should be doing more, but what an example the European Union sets with the gross deficiencies of its present arrangements. I agree with the hon. Gentleman. I do not think that we should send money to the European Union for this purpose, because far more effective action can be taken by the non-governmental organisations that exist in Britain and the international development teams that the Government have at their disposal. Why on earth should we use a route that has proven time and again to be ineffective and to lack proper urgency?

The constant problem is not merely the quantum of aid in terms of finance and food, but the means of getting it to the affected area. If the world community is to deal effectively with natural catastrophes, or catastrophes that have more than a little to do with the human element—as is the case in Ethiopia—we must have the means of getting goods from one place to another. In the Horn of Africa, east Africa and the whole rim of the Indian ocean, such resources do not exist. It is not that they are not deployed in time; they simply do not exist, and they will not exist until the international community decides that it has to meet the need. It is no good asking our armed forces and our navies to help with such problems in areas that are far from their sphere of influence and from the locations that they usually patrol, which it takes weeks to reach and which they will have the wrong equipment to deal with. That was exactly the problem that the hon. Gentleman experienced in trying to assist in Mozambique, and it will happen time and time again in an area of the world that is prone to natural catastrophe but for which we do not have the resources to meet the need.

I hope that countries that are rich and have the civil and military resources will consider the rim of the Indian ocean and think about how to establish permanent resources to deal with crises in that area. I hope that that is not too utopian a view. Some countries are not always in the lead in providing resources. Indeed, some rich countries that are not a million miles away from the Horn of Africa might be tempted to contribute a little more to establishing a permanent resource that would be available as a contingency.

We can deal with problems in the Mediterranean, which is on our doorsteps. At a push, we can deal with problems in the Caribbean, which is on the doorstep of America and is the focus of some European interests. We can even deal with problems in the far east. However, we cannot help the huge area under discussion, where so little exists and where the countries are so poor. With the best will the world, the Governments in the region are unable to deal with massive acts of God or acts commissioned by man that result in misery and tragedy for so many people. They are rendered powerless to deal with them by a combination of their history, the debt with which they are saddled and other different pressures.

I should like to leave the Minister with that one point. I do not imagine that he has a magic wand that will enable him to achieve those aims, but I ask him to argue seriously for them in the international forums in which he speaks. I hope that Britain can begin to take a lead in these important matters.

Mr. Gary Streeter (South-West Devon): I congratulate the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) on winning the opportunity to have this debate, which concerns a very important matter. I shall try hard not to duplicate the excellent contributions that have been made. I want to give the Minister plenty of time to answer, which is the purpose of these debates.

It is heartbreaking to see the pictures that have been on television. The Horn of Africa, not merely Ethiopia, is affected. I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) that it is foolish to ask what the United Kingdom Government are doing to sort things out, as though they have a magic wand and can be everywhere and do everything. That is unrealistic politics. As I gain more experience in this context, I feel that it would be better for the Government to focus resources in preference to spreading them widely.

I am not saying that the problem is directly our Government's responsibility. The Government of Ethiopia must take primary responsibility for the way in which they spend money and use resources. It is good that we live in a world where more and more people know what is happening around the globe. Through globalisation, multimedia and technology, more and more people in developed countries such as ours find it utterly unacceptable to stand by and watch children die of famine in the 21st century. I welcome the increased involvement in the developed world of millions of ordinary people.

What is happening in Ethiopia shows up some of the fundamental issues with which people involved in development try to work. It highlights the responsibility of Governments. It raises the dilemma of what we should do to help a country whose Government are guilty of corruption and misuse of funds. It brings to our attention the distinction between long-term development and immediate humanitarian aid and the vital question of where the United Kingdom should focus its primary efforts. It leads us to ask how we can dispense essential humanitarian aid during conflict and it focuses our minds on the role and effectiveness of the multilateral agencies.

What we are doing to help resolve the conflict? As the Secretary of State has often said—and I agree—the key to helping a country in conflict is to bring the conflict to an end. That is common sense. Since the end of the cold war, we no longer have so much influence, through the power blocs in the east or west, with Governments in the developing world. The old colonial relationships are falling away. Both those changes are to be welcomed, but they lead us into a vacuum in which we wonder who has the primary responsibility for intervening in the conflict in Ethiopia and Eritrea. Which nation state is seeking the lead role? What are the United Nations, the European Union and the United States doing? I hope that we do not fall between two stools, with no country taking the lead. Perhaps, if aid and development departments are too carefully separated from foreign offices and diplomacy in Governments such as ours, full use will not be made of the leverage that development and aid can supply in bringing Governments to their senses.

What is the United Kingdom Government's policy on dispensing aid to countries in conflict? Simply cutting aid is a short-term and probably wrong-sighted response. Why are we cutting £20 million from our development budget for Ethiopia in the next three years? Would not it be better to suspend payments to the Government if they misuse the money, but to pump the same support through the non-governmental and other bodies that make up civil society there? Many of those bodies can tackle long-term issues such as education, heath care and the strengthening of civil society. I agree absolutely with my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) that the right response is to pump equivalent support through the NGOs rather than suspend payments to the Government.

How do the Government justify cutting aid to Mozambique—another country in turmoil—in the next three years? I do not understand the decision; I am not sure that the British Government understand it. I would love an answer to the question. Is it not baffling and upsetting that the sum cut from Government support to Mozambique in the next three years equates roughly to the sum given by the British people to the appeal launched some months ago by the charities? If that is the way in which the Government are playing the situation, it is a disturbing trend.

On our response to aid to countries in conflict, how can the Government justify cutting the aid to the Government of Ethiopia while increasing it to the Government of Zimbabwe, which is also a country in conflict? I am not seeking to cause trouble for the Government, I simply do not understand the way in which they justify the move.

The Government may say that they are pumping money into Zimbabwe through the NGOs, as I have called for, but that is not the case. Most of our support to that country goes directly to its Government. Some of it goes to the police force—the same force that is standing by and watching white farmers being beaten and killed. What signal is that sending out? Zimbabwe is involved in conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo. We are told that 70 per cent. of Zimbabweans are opposed to the involvement. Military equipment worth $200 million has been lost and wasted by the Zimbabwean Government, which is involved in ethnic cleansing. Will the Minister give us an answer today? I have asked several times. How can they justify continuing their support for Zimbabwe while cutting support to Ethiopia?

I want to explore with the Minister the role of multilateral agencies versus nation states. The hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) gave a compelling contribution on the role and performance of the ECHO. The Independent yesterday described in detail the EU's procedure for making the decision to send aid that is required before aid can be sent and properly distributed in the right place.

Do we not learn again and again that the response of the United Nations and of the European Union is often deeply disappointing? Are two options not before us? We could put much more energy and attention into trying to improve the performance of the multilateral agencies. I would love to hear what the Department for International Development seeks to do on the matter. What focus are the Minister and the Secretary of State placing on getting a better performance from those organisations? Are the Government concluding, as many of us are, that time and again the response to such crises by nation states far outweighs the performance and response of the multilateral agencies? The difficulty is one of lack of co-ordination. What are the Government doing to improve co-ordination between nation states on situations such as those in Ethiopia and Mozambique?

[Mr. Gary Streeter]

We are told that such situations will arise more and more because of climate change. A key issue in the 21st century will probably be how we decide the way in which to respond. The hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) set out a five-point plan for the Government's response to Ethiopia, with which I agreed so much. There is a lack of clarity in the Government's response to the Ethiopian crisis and to countries in conflict generally. Will the Minister bring an end to that confusion and spell out precisely what the Department will do in response to countries in conflict in general and Ethiopia in particular?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development (Mr. George Foulkes): Like everyone else, I congratulate the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) on obtaining this debate, which I welcome, although I would have welcomed a little more time to reply to it.

I take no lessons from the hon. Member for South-West Devon (Mr. Streeter), the Opposition spokesman. I have been a spokesman on international development for years, but the hon. Gentleman has never asked a question on the matter or taken part in debates on the subject. However, I shall take note of what was said by the hon. Member for Richmond Park and other hon. Members.

It is sad that the debate is necessary. Indeed, as my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) said, it could have taken place at any time during the past 20 or 30 years. The story is far too familiar. Environmental degradation, military conflict, pressure from a growing population and ill-judged policies are a lethal mix. They bring hunger and misery on a massive scale. As my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) pointed out, the international community's response is in many cases far too slow. We respond to the television pictures, but when the media interest dies down, we return to the same cycle. We should take time to consider the problem in a more measured way and learn from such sad examples as Ethiopia.

Although the food situation is certainly critical in the south and east of Ethiopia, the crisis is not on the same scale as that of 1984-85. That is not only the Government's view; it is what the 15 international non-governmental organisations working in Ethiopia said in their press release in Addis Ababa last week. Ethiopia is one of the poorest countries in the world. More than half the population scrapes by on less than $1 a day, and 85 per cent. of the people depend on agriculture for a living. Rural Ethiopia is exceptionally poor. Food insecurity is a common cause of rural poverty.

Every year, between 2 million and 3 million people experience food shortages. That situation has been made worse by the failure of the rains in the past three or four years. The 8 million people who are defined as being at risk are those who live in households with a chronically insecure food supply. Those people are desperately poor. For a large proportion of them—perhaps as many as 5 million—it would not matter whether it rained or not. Their principal problem is not drought but poverty—real, long-term, grinding poverty.

The press release issued last week by the 15 NGOs ended with the statement, with which we agree, that the people of Ethiopia need peace, a subject raised by the hon. Member for South-West Devon. The Algerian presidency is trying to resolve the conflict on behalf of the Organisation of African Unity. The President of Algeria has invited the Foreign Ministers of Ethiopia and Eritrea to Algiers in the coming weeks for further discussions. We and our international partners continue fully to support the efforts of the OAU. We have urged both sides—I now do so again—to co-operate with the OAU mediators to end that futile conflict immediately.

The 15 NGOs' also suggested that more development was needed and that debt relief was necessary. How true that is. Food aid will not lift those 8 million people out of their long-term, chronic poverty: sustainable economic and social development will. The Government of Ethiopia know that; indeed, they have made good progress since they came to power in 1991. That success has attracted substantial support from the international community. The tragedy is that the war with Eritrea has seriously affected Ethiopia's economic and social progress. We cannot dismiss that as though it were unimportant.

I shall cite some statistics that were not previously available. Comparing the current financial year with the period from 1995-96 to 1997-98, recurrent expenditure on defence has almost tripled as a percentage of gross domestic product. At the same time, expenditure in the social sector fell from 3.7 per cent. to 3.4 per cent. of GDP. More worrying is the fact that capital expenditure in the social sector—investment for the future in schools and health centres—has dropped by a third during the past two years. Domestic borrowing has risen and external reserves have halved.

Those figures highlight the unsustainability of the military conflict, which has caused dialogue between the International Monetary Fund and Ethiopia to break down. External assistance has, sadly, been reduced and grant financing by donors has been halved. It is difficult to estimate how much aid the Government have lost as a result of the war, but a good estimate is between £90 million and £165 million. That is all the more serious and regrettable because, in the pre-war period, public expenditure was becoming poverty-focused.

Hon. Members mentioned working with NGOs. We continue to provide support for NGOs. We are involved in programmes with Farm Africa—I, too, welcome the Speaker's initiative on that—and SOS Sahel and the affiliated regions. But hon. Members, especially mems of the Select Committee, know that to create real change, we need to work directly with Governments who have pro-poor policies. If they do not, we work around them with the NGOs. The two approaches are not in conflict; they are complementary with good governance.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley mentioned debt. The war has had an effect on Ethiopia's access to debt relief. Britain has taken the lead on obtaining debt relief for countries such as Ethiopia. It should have reached its heavily indebted poor countries decision point by now. Sadly, however, it is unlikely to do so this year, even if it quickly resumes its dialogue with the IMF. Its payments to service the debt will consume resources that could and should be spent on the poor—the very people we have heard described today and who we see on our television screens. That is another calamity of that unnecessary war.

The war has also affected the relief effort. The hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) referred to logistics in his helpful contribution. Unlike the hon. Member for South-West Devon, he understands what it is like to be in government. The war has diverted trucking capacity and increased costs by making grazing land inaccessible, denying rural households additional income sources in Eritrea and denying access to the ports of Massawa and Assab in Eritrea. The Ethiopian Government have argued that the ports are not well placed to help with the relief effort. As my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley said, how can it be easier to manage a relief operation through two ports—Djibouti and Berbera—rather than four? It defies logic.

An international effort is under way to bring help to Ethiopia. Some 85,000 tonnes of food was brought into the country in the first quarter of the year. Substantial pledges have been made—433,000 tonnes from the European Community for this year and a further 110,000 tonnes by June next year to help replenish the emergency food security reserve, which we helped to establish. The hon. Member for Banbury rightly said that we pay 17 per cent. of the cost of that package. Total pledges are adequate to cover existing food requirements, but they need to reach the people in need quickly. We are providing more assistance and pressing the EC to speed up its procedures to move food quickly. Some 30,000 tonnes was delivered through Djibouti last week. The assistance is arriving.

We also need to remind the Ethiopian Government of the need to play their part. I welcome their pledge to provide 100,000 tonnes of food aid, but only 7,000 tonnes has been delivered and none to the hungry of the Somali region. Food shortages have been exacerbated by drought, but they have not been caused by drought alone. In fact, 1999 was the third best agricultural production year in Ethiopia's history. The main rains last year were good, and wheat and pulse production figures were high. Could not the Ethiopian Government have taken the opportunity to provide food aid to those areas where the rains have failed in successive years to help those communities cope?

An importance governance issue is involved, as hon. Members said. Is it reasonable to blame the international community alone? Of course we have a responsibility, but we cannot be blamed for the plight of so many of Ethiopia's people. Their Government also have a responsibility. It is not true that we have cut humanitarian assistance to Ethiopia because of the war. We see humanitarian assistance not as a carrot but as something that must be provided. Like all other major donors, we have reduced long-term development assistance, but we would like it to be restored. When a successful peace deal is achieved in Ethiopia, we will continue our long-term development assistance to Ethiopia and Eritrea.

If I had more time, I would respond to the questions asked by several hon. Members and explain why the hon. Member for South-West Devon is, as usual, completely misguided about Mozambique, Zimbabwe and Ethiopia—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Time is up.

Maternity Care

11 am

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): I am very pleased to have the opportunity to discuss with colleagues the implementation of good practice in maternity care. First, I must declare an interest as an honorary vice-president of the Royal College of Midwives, a position that I hold with great pleasure and pride. As many hon. Members will be aware, in 1991 and 1992 I had the honour and privilege to chair the Select Committee on Health when it undertook an in-depth inquiry into maternity services. As the Select Committee's 1992 report says, the inquiry was instigated, > by hearing many voices saying that all is not well with the maternity services and that women have needs which are not being met.

Paragraph 33 of the report says:

> Given the absence of conclusive evidence, it is no longer acceptable that the pattern of maternity care provision should be driven by presumptions about the applicability of a medical model of care based on unproven assertions.

It would be proper for me to pay public tribute to the Select Committee's advisers who were: Caroline Flint, a well-known independent midwife; Mrs. Rosemary Jenkins of the Royal College of Midwives; Dr. Naren Patel, consultant obstetrician at Ninewells hospital, Dundee; Professor Osmund Reynolds, a close personal friend for many years, who was Professor of neo-natal paediatrics at University college and Middlesex school of medicine; Professor Philip Steer, Professor of obstetrics and gynaecology at Charing Cross and Westminster medical school; and another personal friend, Dr. Luke Zander, senior lecturer in the department of general practice at the United Medical and Dental School of Guy's and St. Thomas's.

All those people were vital to the production of the Committee's report. I should like to express my appreciation, these many years later, for the tremendous support that I received during the inquiry as Chairman of that Committee from all Committee members. To mention just one, the hon. Member for Preston (Audrey Wise) was, with me, the driving force behind the inquiry. I hope that hon. Members will allow me to say that I wish the hon. Lady, who is in hospital at the moment, a full and speedy recovery.

The future reconfiguration of maternity units is currently under discussion, which I believe provides an opportunity to reshape the provision of maternity care in the United Kingdom. Where trust mergers are unavoidable, resources must be directed in such a way as to enhance the quality of maternity care. This is an opportunity for the Government to act on the growing research evidence that demonstrates the huge advantages of midwifery-centred care in the provision of maternity services.

Following the Health Committee report in 1992, an expert committee chaired by Baroness Cumberlege, a health Minister at the time, considered the implications of the Health Committee's recommendations. In due course a report called "Changing Childbirth" was published, setting targets for implementation and recommendations for good practice. On page 1, the report said:

[Mr. Nicholas Winterton]

The Select Committee concluded that a medical model of care should no longer drive the service and that women should be given unbiased information and an opportunity for choice in the type of maternity care they receive, including the option, previously largely denied to them, of having their babies at home or in small maternity units.

As the Chamber knows, "Changing Childbirth" became policy for the maternity services in England in 1994 and remains the policy today.

The report called for fundamental changes in the maternity services, based on three principles—the importance of involving women in making informed decisions about their care, making maternity services accessible and attractive to all women and having public involvement in the monitoring and planning of maternity services. A key to putting those principles into practice was reinstating more autonomous midwifery practice and enabling midwives to provide continuity of care. Time and again when we were taking evidence from mothers to be, they talked about the importance of the continuity of care—having women cared for by a named midwife through the whole of pregnancy, for labour and birth, when possible, and in the early weeks following birth. It was recommended that midwives be organised into small groups, working between community and hospital. An explicit target was to have 75 per cent. of women cared for by a midwife whom they have got to know for labour and birth. That is something that I feel strongly about, as did the Health Committee at the time.

The Royal College of Midwives has supported "Changing Childbirth" since its publication and throughout its implementation and remains committed to the principle of a woman-centred care structure. It is no longer appropriate for maternity care to be for the convenience of consultants and doctors; it is there for the mothers and babies.

In a new year press release, the Minister for Public Health stated:

Maternity services are at the heart of the service that women and babies of this country want and deserve.

In the opinion of some of the user organisations, this is now an issue not of choice but of public health. In the nearly 11 years since "Changing Childbirth" was published, maternity care has, sadly, not moved towards the ideals embodied in the report. Indeed, and I say this with some regret, for most women the likelihood of a normal birth with a known midwife is even less now. The centralisation and medicalisation of birth in large obstetric units has intensified rather than declined. Caesarean section rates since "Changing Childbirth" have increased to over 30 per cent. in some hospitals and have recently shown signs of rising still further. This is a major cause for concern.

Full implementation of "Changing Childbirth" depended to a large extent on good midwifery practice. With the severe shortage of midwives, many of the excellent pilot schemes that were originally set up have failed to continue. The latest statistical analysis of the register of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting reveals that there are 33,897 practising midwives and a further 58,286 who are registered but not practising. That is a lamentable waste of skills and talent.

Sadly, since 1994, the quality of maternity care has deteriorated. Consumer groups, including one for which I have the greatest regard, the Association for Improvements in Maternity Service, which is known affectionately as AIMS and is chaired by that splendid lady, Beverley Beech, is reporting many more serious complaints from all over the country. It attributes them to a reduction in midwifery staff, particularly in the more senior midwifery grades—it is worth emphasising that. At the same time, it is reporting many letters from former midwives who have left the service in despair because they were not allowed to practice normal midwifery and provide the normal births for which they had been trained. Instead, many became obstetric nurses in high-tech hospital units.

Caesarean sections are a matter that causes considerable concern. Some obstetricians now provide caesarean sections on request for women with no medical reason to have them, thereby adding to the risk to both mother and child as well as to national health service costs. At the same time, NHS trusts are failing to provide proper care for those women who want and should have a normal birth. Delivery by caesarean section carries a higher risk, as I am sure that many hon. Members know—not least among them the Minister—for both mother and baby. The mother has a slower rate of recovery, a reduced chance of successful breastfeeding, an increased need for post-natal care—which, sadly, is in short supply—and a greater risk of complications.

One of the major risks of caesarean section comes with the birth of the next child and any subsequent children. The mother has a greater risk of placenta praevia when the placenta blocks the outlet, leading to haemorrhage, an increased risk of the placenta becoming embedded in the wall of the uterus, and the risk of life-threatening haemorrhage when an attempt is made to remove it. There has been an increase in emergency hysterectomies carried out after birth to save the life of the mother who has had one or more caesarean sections for previous births. If those caesarean sections were unnecessary, surely the resulting problems are a high price to pay. Ironically, medical litigation costs the NHS more than £300 million every year and obstetric claims account for more than 50 per cent. of that total.

Good practice is the provision of a service that allows women who wish to have a normal labour and delivery without medical assistance to do so. There is now ample medical evidence that normal births at home are at least as safe as hospital births. However, it is rare for women to receive clear, unbiased advice—I say that with fervour—or to be able to choose where to give birth to their babies. Women are not told of the risks of hospital births, but the risks of home birth, both real and imagined, are heavily stressed by the medical profession. AIMS receives calls daily from women who want to give birth at home but are being persuaded into accepting a hospital birth and now that the midwifery shortage is acute, staff are telling mothers, "Should there be a staff shortage in the hospital when you go into labour you will have to come into the hospital."

I turn to midwifery education. The centralisation and medicalisation of birth in large obstetric units has resulted in a significant group of midwives who are not confident of supporting a woman who wants a normal physiological birth. They can only offer drugs for pain relief and are stressed by caring for a woman who is not immobilised by a foetal heart monitor and connected to an epidural. In a recent AIMS journal, a non-practising midwife, deploring the decline in good skilled midwifery practice, commented that student midwives learn good theory in the classrooms, but bad practice in the wards of our hospitals. AIMS hears from an increasing number of student midwives who say that, although they are nearing the end of their training, they have not witnessed a normal physiological birth. Is that not extraordinary? Surely there is something wrong with a system that allows that to happen.

At Chelsea and Westminster hospital, 80 per cent. of pregnant women are given epidural anaesthesia. As a result, student midwives are unable to understand and support a woman in normal labour. Such women behave very differently from those who are given epidurals. Because of that training failure, midwives no longer understand the natural progression of labour in a normal, unmedicated physiological birth. Indeed, AIMS files bulge with reports of the strategies adopted by many midwives to persuade women who had home births to give birth in hospital.

What is the way forward? The Royal College of Midwives wants maternity services to be orientated around primary care, and the use of midwifery-led units to be increased. Examples of successful units include Trowbridge hospital—which is part of Wiltshire Health Care NHS trust—where more than 600 deliveries a year take place. In inquiring into maternity services, members of the Health Committee visited that hospital. The Edgware birth centre recently presented the findings of its two-year project in an evaluation report.

Hospitals in which team midwifery has excelled include Bolton hospital—again, in my own part of the country—which is part of Bolton Hospitals NHS trust. At the Crewe health centre—which is even closer to my constituency and that of my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton), and is part of the Cheshire Community Healthcare NHS trust—the caesarean section rate has been reduced significantly. I applaud that statistic, the hospital, the midwives and other clinicians involved at Leighton hospital.

The current shortage of midwives in maternity units is a problem in terms of recruitment and retention. If depreciation in services is to be avoided, that shortage must be addressed by health authorities and, if I may say so, the Minister in particular. Education and training must also be emphasised. Salford provides a good example of a comprehensive training school. Students there experience deliveries from a variety of backgrounds. The recent practice of recruiting consultant midwives is an encouraging development that should be extended throughout the United Kingdom. If the theoretical training of student midwives is to be reinforced and supported, they must be provided with a thorough grounding and understanding of normal birth.

The education system should be linked to stand-alone midwifery birth centres, and I hope that the Minister will comment on that. A community-based service that supports case-load midwifery was introduced in Professor Lesley Page's one-to-one midwifery care scheme. I have met Professor Page and I have the greatest respect for her. Her contribution to maternity services is outstanding.

The Minister and hon. Members will know that one-to-one midwifery was established in November 1993 in the Hammersmith Hospitals NHS trust, at Queen Charlotte's and Chelsea hospital, and Hammersmith hospital, so that the "Changing Childbirth" principles could be put into practice. Each midwife has a case load of 40 women. Sensibly, each works with a partner and, so that they can cover holidays and so forth, they get to know the women in each other's case load. Partnerships are organised in group practices of six to eight midwives, which allows allocation of case load, mutual support and a forum for peer review of practice. Again, those are sound procedures. The one-to-one midwives survey geographical catchment area includes low and high-risk women. If the woman's pregnancy is low risk, the midwife manages the care, but if it is high risk, an obstetrician does so, although, importantly, the one-to-one midwife will continue to provide midwifery care.

The education system should be linked to a home birth service in which all midwives are supported and enabled to practise autonomously, should they wish to do so. For many years, midwives in independent practice have been able to provide a high-quality service for the women whom they attend—they are often high-risk women who are unwilling to have a second hospital birth. In order to practise autonomously and to fulfil their role to its fullest extent, those midwives have had to practise independently and, sadly, outside the NHS. It is time that their contribution to maternal and child health was recognised and those dedicated midwives were supported within our splendid NHS. The situation in New Zealand shows that an independent model in the health service would enable all women—not simply those who can afford the fees or those for whom the midwives provide charitable care without payment—to benefit from real choice, control over their body and continuity of care. That restructuring of care would enable obstetricians to focus on and develop quality of care for high-risk women and those who choose to give birth in a high-tech unit.

Several initiatives have had excellent outcomes, including the one-to-one midwifery practice, which I discussed earlier, and the Edgware birth centre. During the two-year evaluation period between 1 September 1997 and 31 August 1999, 387 women had their babies at the centre, which was in line with the targets that had been set. In that period, 727 women booked into the centre; 19.4 per cent. transferred ante-natally and 12 per cent. transferred during labour.

I am delighted to say that women who planned to deliver at the birth centre during the evaluation period recorded very high levels of maternal satisfaction, which is crucial when women give birth. They also had need of far fewer interventions than women who were in the same risk category but who delivered in hospital.

I hope that the Minister will bear with me while I give some statistics. In relation to planned caesareans among low-risk women, there were interventions in 3.3 per cent. of cases in local hospitals and in only 0.3 per cent. of cases in birth centres. The national figure, which includes all women and covers the period 1996-97, was 8 per cent.

[Mr. Nicholas Winterton]

In relation to inductions among low-risk women, there were interventions in 16.8 per cent. of cases in local hospitals and in 7.3 per cent. of cases in birth centres, which is significantly lower. The national figure, which includes all women and covers the period 1996-97, was 20 per cent.

In relation to epidurals among low-risk women, there were interventions in 30.7 per cent. of cases in local hospitals and in only 11.4 per cent. of cases in birth centres. The national figure was 19 per cent.

In relation to episiotomies among low-risk women, there were interventions in 18.9 per cent. of cases in local hospitals and in only 5.1 per cent. of cases in birth centres. The national figure was 20 per cent.

In relation to the use of forceps among low-risk women, there were interventions in 5.1 per cent. of cases in local hospitals—the figure for the use of the ventouse in that category was 9.5 per cent.—and in birth centres the relevant figure was 2 per cent. for forceps and just 1.9 per cent. for the ventouse, which is the vacuum extractor procedure. The national figure was 11 per cent. Some of those figures were provided by the Department of Health.

In addition, women who delivered at the birth centre had labours that were on average 15 per cent. shorter than the labours of similar low-risk women who delivered in local hospitals. Much less use was made of clinical anaesthesia such as pethidine. Remarkably, 50 per cent. of babies born at the centre during the evaluation period were born in water.

The cost of deliveries at the birth centre was significantly cheaper—by up to 30 per cent.—than that for similar women delivering in hospitals.

The research and evaluation has some limitations—the comparatively small sample, the difficulty of obtaining comprehensive and accurate financial information, the lack of information about women who choose not to book at the centre, and the fact that the research was done at the start of the birth centre project.

Another practice that I am sure is well known to the Department and the Minister is the Albany midwifery practice. The practice's costs are £180,000 for the midwifery care of 2,316 women, of whom 47 per cent. are Caucasian and 53 per cent. black African, Vietnamese or Asian. The home birth rate is 37 per cent. The rate for non-pharmacological analgesia is 65 per cent. The rate for spontaneous vaginal delivery is very high, at 78.9 per cent. The rate for intact perineum is 63.5 per cent—that is very important to women. At four weeks, 74 per cent. of women were breastfeeding.

For those who do not know, I shall explain the history of the south-east London midwifery group practice, which I shall call the Albany practice. It was established in 1994 as a self-employed, self-managed group of midwives and a practice manager. The aim of the group is to provide continuity of midwifery care to local women—ante-natally, during the intra-partum period and post-natally—with known midwives, with a policy of targeting certain groups and promoting equity of access, thereby meeting the objectives of "Changing Childbirth".

Dr. Peter Brand (Isle of Wight): I am very impressed by the Albany statistics. Can the hon. Gentleman tell me whether the 26.5 per cent. of patients that did not have intact perineums had episiotomies or perineal tears? Earlier, he said that the episiotomy rate at the Edgware birth centre is extraordinarily low—much lower than the rate for intact perineums that he quoted for Albany.

Mr. Winterton: I respect the hon. Gentleman for his professional knowledge. I cannot immediately give him an answer, but I shall certainly ascertain that statistic and come back to him. It is a relevant question, and I am sorry that I am not currently in a position to respond to it.

The Albany practice secured direct funding from the health commission to provide midwifery care for 130 women a year. The group also looked after a further 20 women from the Greenwich area. The mode of care offered quickly proved to be extremely popular with women, and the group's work soon became nationally and internationally acclaimed as ground-breaking. It is still valued as an important resource for all those who are interested in that type of innovative midwifery practice.

Towards the end of 1996, despite its success, the Albany practice was under serious threat. It became apparent that the health authority could not readily make funds available for it to continue. Having always had positive connections with King's college hospital—with especially strong support from Cathy Warwick, the director of midwifery—the practice proposed a sub-contract with King's health care trust.

Although that would inevitably mean losing some of its autonomy, the group felt that it would be worth while in view of the potential of such collaboration. I am pleased to report that the health authority was supportive of such a solution and agreed to contribute to the funding required for the new approach. In the light of the practice's excellent outcomes and predicted cost-effectiveness and health gain among the local population, both parties are hopeful about the effects of making the Albany practice midwifery model part of what I would describe as midwifery mainstream. The proposal would also relieve some of the pressure imposed by long-term midwifery vacancies at King's college hospital.

The Minister will know that the Albany practice is one of eight midwifery group practices at King's. The group comprises seven midwives and a practice manager based at the Peckham Pulse and it is self-employed and self-managed. A sub-contract has been negotiated between King's and the Albany practice to provide maternity care for women in and around Peckham. I am sure that that is of great interest to a friend of the Minister's, the right hon. Member for Camberwell and Peckham (Ms Harman). The case load is generated by four local general practitioners, some self-referrals and some referrals from consultant obstetricians at King's.

The Albany midwifery practice offers women-centred care, as recommended by the "Changing Childbirth" maternity group. The practice offers continuity of midwifery care with two known midwives for each woman. It provides ante-natal, post-natal and intra-partum care. I believe that the Albany practice is unique in the United Kingdom, but I hope that that uniqueness is quickly lost and that its example can spread throughout the country.

The House and women owe a great deal to the Health Committee report and to the subsequent work of Baroness Cumberlege. It is important that maternity services in Britain are focused on the mother and the baby. Doctors have a role to play, but care should no longer be organised around doctors, obstetricians, gynaecologists and the medical profession. It should be a service specifically for mothers and babies, in which midwives have a pivotal role to play. I am delighted to be associated with them and I hope that the Minister will respond positively to my concerns.

11.30 am

Mr. David Drew (Stroud): I pay tribute to the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) for putting the case so fluently, in his own inimitable way. It is good to see that the Minister for Public Health is present to respond, as well as her shadow counterpart, the hon. Member for Meriden (Mrs. Spelman).

I want to speak almost entirely about the midwife-led aspect of maternity care. I was born through caesarean section, through no fault of my own, and I know what an important aspect of care midwifery is. Stroud has a midwife unit that is one of only two remaining units in the south-west. It was under threat of closure some two or so years ago, which is why I have spoken on these matters in a debate on national health service maternity services that was led by my hon. Friend the Member for Braintree (Mr. Hurst) in the House on 11 February 1998. I do not want to repeat the arguments that were rehearsed in that pertinent debate.

The hon. Member for Macclesfield was Chairman of the Health Committee when the seminal document "Changing Childbirth" was published in 1993. I make no apology for repeating, rather than stealing or plagiarising, an important part of that document, which was mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Braintree in the debate in February 1998. The key element is choice. He quoted a passage that I shall quote again now, because it is so important. The Committee said:

> We recommend that the policy of closing small rural maternity units on presumptive grounds of safety be abandoned forthwith. We further recommend that no decision be taken to close such a unit unless it can be explicitly and incontrovertibly demonstrated that they are failing to provide value for money and that the costs to the consumers are carefully taken into account in making such calculations. We recommend that in considering an appeal against the closure of such a unit, the Secretary of State should make presumption against closure unless the case is overwhelming, since we believe that there is a shift in attitude towards maternity care which can only be met by maintaining such units as a realistically available option.

Choice is the keynote of the debate, and that was borne out in the "Changing Childbirth" report. The issue is one of disseminating best practice and keeping maternity care as local as possible. The size of units is also important. Within reason, women want smaller units for pre-natal and intra-partum care, but also post-natally, including perhaps transferring from a district general hospital when they want to be closer to family and friends.

My contribution to the debate in 1998 was to argue strongly for midwife-led services in Stroud to continue. The Stroud News and Journal led an effective campaign, which I was happy to support. Our proposal involved saving £150,000 from a budget of £248 million, which puts the matter in perspective. We wanted to show that women and families supported the continued operation of the unit in Stroud. That was partly due to its being part of a much larger operation in Stroud hospital, which has become a centre of excellence. I thank the Government for the recent upgrading of the accident and emergency department in Stroud. It seems important to have the appropriate range of services across the age range. There is an important development in elderly people's care on the hospital site, and it is important to keep the maternity unit there. In 1993, when "Changing Childbirth" was published, the unit was refurbished and was reopened by Dr. Mark Porter—some hon. Members know him—a constituent of mine who is known to me personally.

During the debate in February 1998, the then Under-Secretary, my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng), promised that proper consultation would always take place on any proposal to close a unit, that the presumption would be against closure and that the Government would support best practice and new initiatives.

In discussing the two remaining threats I shall refer to a review document that I have just obtained. The two threats seem to be the economic case for further centralisation and medical opinion. The Government deserve praise for the money that they made available to my area's health authority in the Budget, and the commensurate changes made at the time, which have lifted the pall that was over the authority. However, a value for money argument can be made, and we cannot ignore it. Even so, very small sums are involved in relation to the overall budget.

When we last discussed the Stroud midwife-led maternity unit, it was decided to keep it open but to review it regularly. The latest 18-month review has just been completed. We did not talk explicitly about the cost, because that is a matter for the seven NHS trusts and the health authority. A more difficult problem was that of medical opinion. The hon. Member for Macclesfield made it clear that obstetricians and other specialists still continue to argue in favour of babies being delivered in district general hospital units.

I am not taking a dig at the GPs in my area, but they are generally somewhat ambivalent towards a local midwife-led service. That does not help, because most women will take their GP's advice when they receive the happy news that they are pregnant. If GPs gave a more positive response, on safety and the right to choose, we would have every reason to keep midwife-led units open. The risk factor is slight, but in difficult cases, Stroud is not a million miles away from consultant-led units in the district general hospitals at Gloucester or Cheltenham. We can have the best of both worlds. I hope that GPs and consultants will continue to listen.

The three keynote terms in the 1993 report and today's are the need for a service that is comprehensive, flexible and based on choice. The current review is now completed. The target was 350 births a year. That is difficult to reach; although the number of births has increased, it must be set against an overall decline. We are trying to go against the tide.

[Mr. David Drew]

If complications arise, cases will inevitably be transferred to the district general hospital, which will reduce the number of women using the local midwife-led unit. Indeed, there is always pressure to go for the safe solution. I did not go for that option: two of my children, Laurence and Christopher, were born in Stroud maternity hospital. Esther was born at home with the help of the midwife service run from Stroud. I have personal experience of the quality of care and the personal service offered by the midwife service.

I do not wish to mix statistics with the hon. Member for Macclesfield—he left me for dead with his—but I have no reason to doubt their importance. The number of births each month can vary. For instance, in December 1998 there were only 13; last month, there were 27. That is obviously going in the right direction, but variations can occur. Transfers back to the midwife-led unit for ante-natal and post-natal care are somewhat unpredictable. However, such variations are inevitable because childbirth has yet to be completely sanitised. Long may that continue.

Some significant improvements have taken place. We now have the support of paediatricians at Gloucester Royal hospital. That has led to the drawing up of a protocol which shows that there is a belief that the service in Stroud is safe, that it has a high quality threshold and that it is popular. Much has been done to publicise the service and to show women in the area that it is open for business. The service wants to make itself known to as many people as possible. The fact remains, however, that GPs are not always as helpful as they might be. Anything that I can do to persuade them otherwise is important.

There is good support from the National Childbirth Trust, the league of friends of the hospital and the ladies circle that works with the league of friends. We are not yet at the threshold of 350 births a year. I hope that that will not be used as an opportunity to revisit the usual response—difficult meetings with officials—with many people being angry that their wonderful and well-loved service was threatened.

Much is happening. There are many initiatives. One of our midwives—Helen Conway—is well known to me. She is in China learning about different ways of delivering and the use of acupuncture. Anyone who knows Stroud will be aware that we are very alternative there. I probably have more acupuncturists than general practitioners in my constituency. Acupuncture provision will fit centrally into what women seem to want.

I want from my hon. Friend the Minister a clear statement that there is a future for midwife-led units, that they are safe and that they should be there to respond to the choice that women wish to exercise. I want her to pass on my message to the local trust that we do not want to revisit the possible closure of the unit. Such threats lead to great public aggravation and take us no further forward. I want to hear that the costings, which are not as important as the medical opinion, can be put in place to show that the staff have a future. The staff may then breathe a sigh of relief and the women and families of the area may then be given the services that they so clearly want, not only in the local midwife-led unit but at the district general hospital. The choice must always be there for people.

11. 46 am

Dr. Peter Brand (Isle of Wight): I hesitate to contribute to the debate, as a man and, worse, a doctor with a qualification from the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists. The college appears to be the baddie of the debate.

"Changing Childbirth" was a seminal document. It was important because it recognised that childbirth had changed over the years. When I first saw the title I thought that it was ridiculous. Women have always had babies and, other than Pallas Athene, who was delivered through an especially unusual route, they have had them vaginally or by caesarean section.

We have moved too far towards technical intervention in childbirth. However, I would like to remind the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton), who spoke with great depth of feeling about the benefits of natural childbirth, that natural childbirth can also result in a high rate of dead or handicapped babies. It can result in significant mutilation of mothers with subsequent obstetric disasters and perhaps, even more sadly for them, incontinence, which is extremely difficult to treat. One need only consider what happens in the third world, where nature is all that people can fall back on, to understand that natural childbirth does not deliver an especially good service. Whatever we discuss with regard to maternity care, we must not deny that nature needs professional and high-quality help.

I am as one with the hon. Member for Macclesfield in saying that the approach should be woman-centred. I was pleased that he acknowledged later in his contribution the importance of the baby. He was right to say that we need a personal service for women. Childbirth can be the most wonderful experience, not only for the woman having the baby and the family concerned but for the other people involved in the birth. The experience can also be hairy and frightening when things unexpectedly go wrong and get slightly messy. Whatever model we adopt, we must ensure the flexibility to which the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) referred.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: I am listening carefully to the hon. Gentleman and, although it is early in his speech, he has not so far mentioned midwives. The midwife is a qualified professional, and if there is continuity of care, the mother to be can be provided with the confidence and expertise to have a normal birth. Midwives are professionals, and if it becomes necessary to involve a consultant, they will immediately pass over the case. However, the midwife can provide the continuity that is so essential to the woman in giving birth.

Dr. Brand: I am grateful for that intervention. The hon. Gentleman anticipated my next point. Professional help is required, and the lead professionals in this area are midwives. The expertise and time of midwives can make an enormous contribution to a normal delivery. I have no doubt that women who are well looked after, who feel relaxed and are confident of the support of someone they know, have much better births and the process is much more positive. I agree with the hon. Member for Macclesfield that there is evidence that women who are relaxed and confident need less anaesthesia, but I do not agree that it is necessarily a bad thing for a woman to choose to have analgesia. At times during his speech, I thought that we were listening to the critics of Queen Victoria, who indulged in artificial anaesthetics during some of her many deliveries.

The essence of my remarks is that giving birth is the province of midwives. The setting for giving birth should be the personal choice of the woman who is having the baby, but in promoting home deliveries, which are the most satisfying part of one's career, it is important to remember that they can be carried out only if there are experienced midwives in sufficient number. Otherwise, one might find that no one is available, except a midwife 30 miles away whom the mother has never met, which destroys the whole idea of continuity of care.

It is also essential that a second pair of hands is available at the time of birth in case there are problems with the baby. It is essential that someone at the birth can intubate the baby if required. It is also essential that the home circumstances can be enhanced if necessary. One of the reasons why the Dutch have much better statistics than we do is that they provide social support in the later stages of pregnancy, which makes an enormous contribution. It is also vital that there should be ready access to a flying squad. I am one of the wicked GPs who dissuaded people from having their babies at home because it took about one hour for a flying squad to arrive. That is a complete waste of time, and a flying squad should include someone with obstetric experience as well as an anaesthetist.

We heard some good stories from the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew). I had the privilege of witnessing the birth of both of my sons, but they were born in hospital. One of them would not have survived at home, and my wife would not have survived if she had been at home when she gave birth to the other. We must put this in perspective. Home deliveries require an adequate standard of professionalism at the home and back-up by the hospital unit. There should also be the option of the midwife transferring the mother to a midwife unit within the hospital or to an obstetric unit run by a consultant. We have made progress on that. The Cumberlege report was a bombshell for most obstetricians who withdrew into a professional laager saying, "The world will now stop." They realised that they had underestimated the professional capacity and capability of midwives and had overestimated their own importance in women's minds. Patients are sensible and pick who suits them best.

If we are to continue to extend the role of midwives, which is a positive approach, we need to do something about their training, as the hon. Member for Macclesfield said. We must also allow them to have a decent career structure. It is unacceptable for a qualified midwife to be employed at a D or E grade. That is what drives them out of the national health service. When we consider different patterns of deliveries—I was impressed by the statistics for the Edgware birth centre and the Albany unit—we must ensure that we compare like with like. Innovative units attract a different section of the population than a district general hospital, which is used by a more average part of the population. A pre-selected group might produce different outcomes.

The Health Committee last year, or possibly the year before, considered caesarean section rates published by the NHS executive. I asked how many home deliveries had occurred in the district for which the rates were being given, but that figure was not known. If 30 per cent. of normal babies are being born at home rather than in a hospital unit, it is obvious that caesareans are being performed on a different section of the population. We need to be clever with statistics because they can be used in different ways.

The hon. Member for Macclesfield mentioned the role of independent midwives. I have no problem with independent midwives, but they need to function within a framework that provides the full back-up that is available to other midwives. They must also accept clinical governance. I am afraid that independent midwives are sometimes reluctant to have their figures queried. It is not good enough to rely on high-profile press reports when something goes disastrously wrong. They should be licensed and have their competence evaluated, which should also happen to general practitioners. I hope that that will be part of the accreditation system. It is unacceptable for GPs to be on an intra-partum obstetric list if they are not involved in intra-partum care. It is unfair—and silly—to call out a practitioner who has not delivered a baby for two years to deal with a complication that is being handled by a professional who probably manages 100 deliveries a year. We need an ante-partum list and, with the right education, post-natal care will look after itself.

I am glad that we have had this debate. Not only is the way in which childbirth is being managed changing all the time, but so is the population that is giving birth. We must remember that women are now much older when they have their first baby. Again, I have some problem with the promotion of natural childbirth at all costs. We must consider the mother's age. It is rather rude to talk about elderly primates. The age used to be over 35; I think that it has now been raised to 40. There is no doubt that women have babies much more easily in their early 20s or late teens than in their late 30s or early 40s. It would be foolish to encourage people to take a completely natural route if any complications were envisaged.

Mr. Winterton: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the mother to be should make that choice—I accept with the best advice? To date the clinician has too often left no choice. Those who support the views that I have expressed want the mother to be to make that choice, but from a position of knowledge, if there are complications.

Dr. Brand: Of course the woman should make the choice, but it should be an informed choice and one that takes into account the outcome of the process—the baby. I do not accept that it is necessarily bad practice to have a high rate of epidurals, to offer analgesia or to have foetal monitoring, whether in the home or in hospital. If we are to screen out higher-risk procedures and anticipate events, the safest way to shift a baby to a place of safety is in the mother's womb, and not attached to something else.

Technology should help natural childbirth; we should not look to it as an alternative.

12.1 pm

Mrs. Caroline Spelman (Meriden): I congratulate the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on securing this important debate and drawing attention to the Health Committee's work on this issue. I found it particularly interesting to hear all the information about the Edgware birth centre. When that is on the record, many more people will be aware of its interesting statistics.

I know that the Minister for Public Health gives midwifery a high priority, because in her new year message she said that maternity services were at the heart of Government. She perhaps knew at the time just how important that would be to those in government. Indeed, we wish the Prime Minister and his wife all the best in their imminent happy event.

For all the fine words, there is a gathering crisis in midwifery when a third of all trusts cannot provide one-to-one care for a woman. There is nothing more terrifying for a woman who is in labour, perhaps for the first time, than when the midwife leaves the room. Although I have no information to support my theory, I suspect that such non-attendance occurs more often in an institutional setting than at home, when, by definition, the midwife has to be there. At such times, prospective parents feel very vulnerable if they are left alone with the incessant bleeping of the foetal monitor. It is just the sort of thing that "Changing Childbirth" was designed to avoid. I am pleased that hon. Members on all sides have paid tribute to the work of Baroness Cumberlege in producing that document, which is a seminal work. All of us are united in wanting to see it implemented.

It is essential to quantify the extent of the crisis. The Royal College of Midwives survey shows that three out of four midwifery units carry vacancies and that the number of long-term vacancies has risen to 55 per cent. of all vacant posts. That translates into a shortfall in absolute terms of 1,000 full-time midwives. There is no doubting the strong sense of vocation that midwives feel, but their morale is not good at present. That is not hearsay; the facts speak for themselves. Only 36 per cent. of registered midwives are practising today and the number of students entering midwifery education is falling. Several hon. Members have suggested reasons for that.

I echo the view that there should be a review of the salary structure in midwifery. Nurses' pay has increased, especially at the upper end, but midwives often find that their wage levels reach a plateau, despite years of experience in midwifery that should be recognised. Midwives, by definition, travel a great deal as part of their work and a further aggravation is that their mileage allowance remains very low. In order not to sound hypocritical, I should point out that it is less than half that of a Member of Parliament.

The recruitment and retention problems are not only due to pay levels. The number of vacancies has a bearing on working conditions. When vacancies are not filled, those who remain must carry a greater load. The average shortage of midwives is 2 per cent., but that disguises big regional variations, especially in the London catchment area where competing salaries make retention even more difficult. In the North Thames area, the vacancy rate is 5.9 per cent., and in South Thames it is 6.1 per cent. Those figures are significantly above the national average.

Some of the low morale is related to the erosion of the status of the profession. Midwives feel that the integrity of their profession has been compromised by the fact that they are now trained jointly with nurses for much of their preparation for practice. Respect for that practice is undermined by forcing midwives to join nurses in studying courses that are not relevant to midwifery—for example, courses designed to train nurses in the early detection of the signs of dementia. That is unlikely to be relevant to women of childbearing age. They may become demented during labour but it is not a permanent condition.

Another factor that has a bearing on the crisis in midwifery is the shortage of consultant posts in obstetrics. That is a piece of NHS mismanagement of the first order. In response to the shortage, an accelerated training programme—the Calman programme—was set up five years ago. It was agreed that the number of new grade, specialist registrars should increase at a rate of 6 per cent. a year. That was designed to achieve a target of 2,000 consultant posts over 15 years. However, the number of consultant posts has not kept pace with the target, and trained obstetricians cannot now find jobs. Indeed, they are leaving the NHS altogether.

Last year, the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and the Royal College of Midwives jointly published a document called "Towards Safer Childbirth". One of its recommendations was that a consultant should be present in the labour ward for 40 hours a week. Speaking as a lay woman in this matter, I cannot help observing that babies are no respecters of the 40-hour week and have a tendency to arrive at night. As I know to my cost, things can go wrong very suddenly during childbirth. It is important to have specialised help on hand if, for example, a woman suffers a haemorrhage.

As the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Dr. Brand) pointed out, the increasing age of women at childbirth is an important factor when considering the ratio of midwives and obstetricians to the number of women giving birth. For the first time, the average age of women at first birth is now over 30. There are more complications in childbirth as the age of the mother increases. The advancing age at first birth may also partially explain the rise in the caesarean section rate, although I agree with the main thrust of the argument advanced by my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield that there is a strong tendency towards technical births rather than natural ones. However, it is important to note that the advancing age of women at first birth is likely to give rise to an increase in the caesarean section rate.

In another place, Earl Howe drew attention to the unacceptable level of preventable accidents in labour. He said:

> In 1995, 453 babies died as a result of asphyxia or trauma suffered during labour or delivery.—[Official Report, House of Lords, 12 January 2000; Vol. 608, c. 738.]

That represents half the total number of infant deaths in childbirth. The shortage of midwives must be a contributory factor to the state of morale in the obstetric profession.

Another important point that was brought out in the debate was that this country has one of the highest percentages of low birth weight babies, higher than even Albania and Latvia. That is a disgrace, and I would like to hear from the Minister what steps the Government are taking to tackle it. Low birth weight is, of course, associated with other health difficulties in later life. I suspect that it is not unrelated to the problem of childbirth to very young mothers and their level of knowledge about care of themselves and their babies during pregnancy. I want to hear from the Minister on that point.

Given the facts, it is surely time for the Government to restore the rate of growth in consultant posts, so that we are back on target for the full complement by 2010, as originally envisaged, and so that the considerable amount of public money that has gone into training doctors in obstetrics is not wasted because there are no posts to which they can be appointed. Then, we will see that training translated into helping women and midwives to ensure that we can improve on the number of safe deliveries. That must be our main goal, in implementing good practice in maternity services.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Yvette Cooper): I congratulate the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on securing the debate. It is an important issue and is close to my heart, because of recent personal experience. I am aware of his long-standing interest in the subject. The report by the Select Committee that he chaired in the early 1990s prompted real and lasting change in the provision of maternity care. I pay tribute to that report and to the "Changing Childbirth" report and the work done by Baroness Cumberlege on the issues in the mid-1990s.

Huge advances have been made in the past few years in changing the experience of women during pregnancy and childbirth. There has been real progress towards the provision of a safer, more personal, woman-centred maternity service that offers women greater choice, continuity of care and control. It is now safer to give birth than ever. The figures for maternal and perinatal mortality are at their lowest ever level, and it is the overriding expectation of pregnant women, their partners, their families and those who care for them that the pregnancy and delivery will be safe and healthy for mother and baby.

Childbirth is about more than safety. Maternity services exist to support women throughout their pregnancy, to help them to experience pregnancy and childbirth as a positive and life-enhancing experience and to give their babies the best possible start in family life. On the whole, satisfaction rates for NHS maternity services are high. The Audit Commission report on maternity services, published in March 1997, found that 90 per cent. of the women surveyed were very pleased or pleased with how they were treated during pregnancy and childbirth. That is a high satisfaction rate, and it is a credit to the dedication and skills of all the professionals who are involved in maternity care.

There is, however, no room for complacency. "Changing Childbirth" set out a vision of maternity services with which few could disagree. The report's central principles—appropriateness, effectiveness and accessibility in maternity care—are largely embedded in current mainstream practice. We are not, and cannot be, content to stand still. The Government must continue to examine maternity services to see what can be done to secure further improvements, particularly in the quality of care and in tackling inequalities of care.

I want to cover some of the issues raised during the debate. The hon. Member for Macclesfield referred to unacceptable variations in caesarean section rates. The Department is concerned about those variations throughout the country and we need to deal with the lack of clarity about appropriate standards and best practice. We are aware of concern about the widespread variation, so we have put in place a chain of work to deal with that. First, we have taken steps to strengthen local audit processes and to publish figures on caesarean section rates by individual trusts for the first time. Secondly, we have commissioned a national audit study on caesarean section rates from the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists to set standards where they are badly needed. That move has been widely welcomed by professional groups, consumers and women. We shall look carefully to see what lessons can be learnt from the thorough audit and to ensure that the results are used to develop best practice in future. Thirdly, we have funded the development of clinical guidance in problem areas such as induction of labour and electronic foetal monitoring. Fourthly, we have worked closely with consumer organisations to improve information on caesarean section, because the information that is provided to pregnant women varies dramatically throughout the country.

The reconfiguration of maternity services was also raised. A report will be published shortly by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and I am sorry that it was not published before our debate, because it could have been used to inform that debate. I apologise for the fact that it is not yet in the public domain and that I am commenting on it when other hon. Members have not been able to see it. The report was commissioned by the Department of Health to examine the changes in the way in which maternity care is provided. Women's expectation of services has changed. Hospital stays are shorter and care is provided, as much as possible, in accessible community settings and is delivered by midwives. That report does not recommend the closure of many small maternity units, as has been rumoured in the press. It provides reference criteria to be taken into consideration when changes in maternity services are planned and will be widely welcomed by those involved in maternity services. For example, it makes it clear that issues such as access, transport, availability and choice must be taken into account in local decision-making.

In reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew), there must be a future for midwife-led units and they will continue to be a matter for local decision making. We believe strongly in a future for midwife-led care as part of reconfiguration.

As part of our response to the report, we shall examine obstetric risk assessment. Safety is always paramount for women and health professionals, but it must not be used as an excuse to return to the traditional medical model of childbirth. Pregnancy is not an illness and maternity services exist to provide care for a predominantly healthy population during a normal life event. The vast majority of pregnancies and births are uncomplicated and best cared for in a predominantly midwife-led service.

For the minority of pregnancies and births that prove complicated, there must be access to expert medical advice. One issue covered in the report is the need for national standards for obstetric risk assessment, so that low-risk pregnancies can be consistently distinguished from high-risk pregnancies and managed accordingly in appropriate settings.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: I am encouraged by much of what the Minister has said. Before she finishes, will she comment on the exceptional success of the Edgware centre and on the Albany midwifery practice, which again sets a standard that could be repeated all over the country and provides the real choice and the midwifery-led service that so many of us believe in?

Yvette Cooper: I was indeed planning to comment on some of the best practice issues that hon. Members have identified. I was lucky enough to benefit from team midwifery care in Pontefract, where a small team of midwives, whom women are able to get to know, provide support in the community before the birth, during labour and after the birth. I was very impressed with the service and the support that I was given and gained huge benefits from it.

A wide variety of models is in place across the country, but continuity of care is crucial. There is a huge gap in our knowledge about how successful and effective the different models are and what the benefits are for the women who experience them. The hon. Member for Macclesfield highlighted the successful results at the Edgware birth centre and mentioned other examples as well.

We need to obtain comprehensive information about the different models that are in place. That is why we have commissioned detailed research into this issue and will report over the next year on the nature of the models of midwife care around the country, the way in which they are organised, funded and arranged and the difference that they can make to the women concerned.

Mrs. Spelman: Could I encourage the Minister to consider, as part of that research, whether midwives are being replaced by less well qualified personnel for after-care visits? I am sure that, like me, she benefited from the midwife calling after the birth. I understand that there is a tendency for the midwife to be replaced after delivery by somebody who is less qualified.

Yvette Cooper: I shall look into that. It is not an issue that I am aware of. High-quality care in the weeks and months after the birth is important, partly to prevent post-natal depression, which can have repercussions on the beginning of family life and can affect children's chances for many years to come. The research is being done by the national perinatal epidemiology unit to inform our development and our ability to spread best practice across the country and ensure that it is evidence-based.

Hon. Members also asked about midwife staffing. Maintaining and developing excellent midwifery services is at the heart of our agenda. The national recruitment, retention and vacancy survey, which we published in September last year, showed that only 2 per cent. of midwifery posts—some 370—have been vacant for three months or more, although there are variations across the country. We shall work closely with the trusts that are under pressure to address the difficulties, but we are making progress.

The hon. Member for Meriden (Mrs. Spelman) referred to midwifery training. I find her remarks slightly surprising. The 28 per cent. cut in the number of nursing and midwifery training places between 1992 and 1995 was felt throughout the NHS. I am pleased to report that the Government-funded expansion in training places during the past two years—some £50 million was involved by the end of last year—has meant that applications for midwifery training have risen by 50 per cent.

As a result of our national recruitment exercise, last year more than 550 midwives contacted NHS employers about returning to work. Since this year's campaign was launched on 28 February, more than 6,000 calls have been received from people who are interested in midwifery, including more than 120 calls from qualified midwives who are interested in returning to the NHS. We need to continue with that important effort and to resolve the concerns that hon. Members raised this morning about career progression.

"Making a Difference" sets out the Government's strategic vision for nursing, midwifery and health visiting. That strategy will ensure that midwives benefit from better support and that modern, flexible, family-friendly employment practices are promoted. Many midwives have family responsibilities, and introducing family-friendly employment practices into the NHS will make a difference to recruitment and retention.

Dr. Brand: Will the Minister explain what the minimum grade for a qualified midwife should be in the present system?

Yvette Cooper: Hon. Members asked important questions about the progression of midwives' careers. We are currently appointing the first midwifery consultants—the most experienced and expert practitioners are being appointed to those important midwifery positions. The establishment of those posts will extend the clinical career structure, which will encourage practitioners who might otherwise have gone into management to remain in practice and to do what they came into midwifery and nursing to do.

"Changing Childbirth" was mentioned earlier. In the few minutes that remain, I want to discuss the way in which we have extended that approach. "Changing Childbirth" changed the scene dramatically, but we cannot stand still. One of the most important ways in which we can extend its values is to tackle inequalities across the country. In the United Kingdom, the poorer one is, the less healthy one is likely to be. Life expectancy at birth for a baby boy is about five years less in social classes 4 and 5 than it is for baby boys with professional parents. We are determined to tackle such differences, which can have an effect at the start of a child's life or in the womb.

Our debate has progressed, and we now need to build on "Changing Childbirth" and to take steps to deal with inequalities in maternity care. Drug misuse in pregnancy needs to be tackled. The number of women who misuse drugs has increased considerably during the past 30 years, and many of those women are in their childbearing years. Pregnancy can act as a catalyst for change, and it is vital for the mother and the baby that pregnant drug misusers have proper access to support from appropriate services. Earlier this month, the Department of Health published guidelines on clinical management, which include best practice for managing pregnant drug misusers.

Some innovative services have been established, including a project in Sheffield for pregnant mothers who are addicted to heroin. The project has established a co-ordinated approach that includes GPs and a central clinic that offers quick access to the usual primary care services and to specialist drug services.

Women who smoke and who are pregnant constitute another priority area. Each year, more than 400 babies are stillborn or die soon after birth because the mother smoked. Smoking during pregnancy is associated with health inequalities.

The hon. Member for Meriden asked about low birth weight. That is part of our concern about health inequalities because low birth weight is linked to low income and to deprivation. The sure start programmes will examine the matter across the country. Those programmes will provide £450 million over three years across England to give support to the children and families who are most in need. That must involve support for maternity services, including better support during the weeks and months immediately following the birth of the baby—as the hon. Member for Meriden said—and examination of issues surrounding post-natal nutrition and support for the mother and baby.

There is much excellent practice across the country; we need to build on that and to tackle variations in maternity care. Like hon. Members who have spoken, I believe that midwife care must lie at the centre of that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. John McWilliam): Order. Time is up.

Student Nurses

12.30 pm

Jackie Ballard (Taunton): Last week there was an article in my regional daily newspaper about flying angels—nurses recruited from the Philippines to ease the national health service staffing crisis in the west country, which is not the only region to suffer from the problem. At the heart of the crisis is low pay for student nurses, which has led to a shortfall in recruitment and a 25 per cent. drop-out rate from many courses.

The issue was highlighted last month, when student nurses—I was pleased to see several from my constituency—lobbied Members of Parliament. Because of my concern about what I was told by constituents at the lobby, I was fortunate enough to secure this debate to draw the Government's attention to the situation. I look forward to hearing what the Minister plans to do about it.

There is currently a confusing three-tier system of funding for student nurses. That was the subject of early-day motion 569, which has so far attracted 70 signatures. As hon. Members will appreciate, they cannot all be the signatures of Liberal Democrat Members. The three-tier system has the following structure: first, those who are seconded on a salary from their trust; secondly, those who are on diploma courses, who receive a Department of Health bursary; and thirdly, those who are taking degrees, receive means-tested bursaries and are eligible for student loans. The Department apparently recognises the funding problem for the latter two groups, because it now encourages more trusts to second health care assistants to nurse education on a salary. So far, 1,000 students have taken up that offer. They retain supernumerary status on the wards.

One of the student nurses who came to see me had previously been a health care assistant on a low income, during which time she had been entitled to family credit. She is now a bursary nursing student, and has no entitlement to family credit and no help with child care costs. She is working harder than she did as a health care assistant, with much longer hours, and is financially worse off. How long does the Minister think that she and others like her can put up with the pressure for the sake of a long-term investment in her career and in the NHS?

Another student wrote to me to say:

> The nursing course which I am on requires me to squeeze 4,600 hours of learning into 3 years. During the period when all other students are on holiday we are studying or on clinical placements. My friends who are taking other university degrees or diplomas have nearly 3 months holiday in the summer, I get 3 weeks. During this time I will be revising for exams and working extra shifts as an HCA to make up a wage large enough to live on. On my days off I work as a care assistant. I have no choice but to do this in order to pay my bills and be able to live. The Government states that nobody should live in poverty. £4,500 a year sounds like poverty to me!

If nursing students had kept their right to a nationally negotiated salary when Project 2000 started, they would now be earning about £10,000 a year—double the current bursary. Student poverty is not the only reason that student nurses drop out of courses, but it is one of the reasons most commonly given. That poverty is caused not only by low income, but by high costs—especially in rural areas such as my constituency. For example, student nurses told me that the NHS Executive has recently changed its policy on reimbursing travel expenses to clinical placements. That has caused a great deal of confusion. One student said that she often spends £30 a week on petrol to get to her placements. That money comes out of her standard bursary.

Unison and many student nurses would like to see a return to salaried student status. They believe that it would reduce the drop-out rate and aid recruitment, and that it would increase loyalty to the NHS. The Minister is probably aware that the Royal College of Nursing takes a different view. It would prefer bursaries to be increased. It fears that students would lose their supernumerary status if they were salaried. It says that students used to be used as cheap labour and that they had little time to learn, which was why Project 2000 was implemented.

Whatever the disagreement between the unions and students on the best way forward, they all agree that the Prime Minister will not be able to deliver his promised 10,000 new nurses while the funding to support students is so low. Many nursing and midwifery students face financial hardship. They suffer more hardship than most other students because many are mature students with family responsibilities. One third of nursing and midwifery students are more than 25 years old, one third are married or have partners and a quarter of them have dependent children.

At the very least, those students need higher bursaries. They should be reimbursed for the cost of travelling to clinical placements. Will the Minister clarify the position on reimbursement? Students—especially those with child care responsibilities—need access to social security benefits. I hope that the Government agree that it is a serious problem. They will not achieve their aim of recruiting more nurses into the NHS if it is not solved. I hope that the Minister will give us some idea of the way forward.

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. John Hutton): I congratulate the hon. Member for Taunton (Jackie Ballard) on her success in the ballot. She chose to raise the matter of maintenance for student nurses, an essential group of people who help to deliver on the Government's plans to modernise the NHS and to improve patient care—objectives that the hon. Lady supports.

I shall put the matter in its proper context. In the financial year 2000-01, the NHS will support about 50,000 nursing and midwifery students—about 45,000 diploma-level students and about 5,000 degree-level students. The average bursary is about £5,000 a year for diploma-level students and £2,100 a year for those studying at degree level. Additional allowances are provided for some older students, for some single parents and for those with dependants. The hon. Lady drew attention to each of those three groups. An additional allowance of £590 a year is payable to older students—those aged 26 and over—and a single-parent addition of nearly £900 a year and a dependants' allowance of between about £1,700 and about £3,000 a year are payable, depending on the number and age of dependants. The hon. Lady was particularly concerned about student nurses who had dependants. The scheme allows additional support for them.

This year, we shall spend well over £200 million on bursaries and almost £700 million on all aspects of nursing and midwifery training, of which about £500 million will be spent on pre-registration training. By anyone's reckoning, that is a substantial package of support. We recognise, however, that we need to increase the number of staff to match the expansion in services to be provided by the new NHS. We have already achieved a great deal. The latest annual work force figures show that 5,500 more nurses are working in the NHS this year than just over a year ago.

The hon. Lady referred to a crisis in nursing. We need to put the matter in context. As part of our plans to expand services and improve patient care, we are expanding the number of nurse training places by 6,000 and reversing the cuts made by the previous Government. I am sure that the hon. Lady would welcome that. Last year, more than 15,000 student nurses began training—the highest number to do so for six years. If the previous Government had matched that commitment to nurse training during their last five years in office, more than 14,000 extra nurses could be working on the wards. Sadly, that is not the case.

Jackie Ballard: I do not dispute the numbers of people who have been attracted to nursing courses, but will the Minister comment on the drop-out rate? He may have been planning to deal with that point, about which I asked a parliamentary question some time ago. The drop-out figures for the year in which the 15,000 people began training are not yet available.

Mr. Hutton: I think that that is the case, and I shall comment further on the matter in a moment. It is, however, important to be aware of the whole story. We accept that there are legitimate concerns and I know that the hon. Lady referred to them, but I want to try to set the whole picture of student nurse training in the right context.

As a result of the additional investment that we are making in the NHS, we shall be able to provide up to 15,000 more nurses to care for patients on the wards. Of course, it takes three years to train a nurse, so it will take time to reverse the previous Government's complacency and underinvestment in the national health service. However, more students are already embarking on the training that will deliver on this Government's commitment to improved patient care. The hon. Lady may be interested to know that the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service has recently released figures that reveal a 24 per cent. increase in people starting nursing degree courses this year. Strong indications suggest that people are willing and prepared to embark on this important career. The 24 per cent. increase is the second highest increase for any degree choice starting in the 1999-2000 academic year. The end-year figures from the Nursing and Midwifery Admissions Service show that, last year, the number of applicants for nursing and midwifery diploma courses rose by 73 per cent. to more than 32,000 people. The number of students taking up diploma courses has also risen by 18 per cent.

Those are positive indications that we are at long last starting to turn a corner in recruiting these key workers into the national health service. They demonstrate our commitment to nurses as key to the delivery of our modernisation plans and to tackling nursing shortages. Our substantial investment in non-medical training, which amounts to some £1 billion in the current financial year, is helping us to turn the corner on recruiting nurses to the national health service.

The hon. Lady may like to know that her local education consortium in Somerset is planning to invest some £44 million in training in this financial year. That is a significant investment in the future of the national health service in her part of the country.

A new NHS careers service is also helping to feed more students into nurse training. The service was launched in April 1999 and initially covers nurses, health visitors and midwives. It uses modern technology to provide an inquirer-led service that is both accessible and objective. A call centre operation offers provision for simple inquiries for help and information and for more detailed inquiries dealt with by professional advisers. It handles about 1,000 calls a week.

Another key part of our recruitment and retention strategy is pay modernisation. For the second year running, the Government have accepted in full the recommendations of the Nurses and Midwives Pay Review Body, this time for 2000-01. That will mean an increase in basic pay of at least 3.4 per cent. for all nurses., and some groups of staff will receive substantially more. After years in which pay rises were staged, it is right that the awards should now be paid in full. Together with last year's award, we have provided nurses who are completing their training with a greater increase in pay in real terms than they have received at any time since 1987-88. Starting pay for newly qualified nurses in grade D will rise from £17,325 to £17,915 in inner London and from £14,400 to £14,890 in locations outside London, including the hon. Lady's constituency. Our decision to implement the award in full recognises that nurses deserve a fair pay award, especially after they coped so magnificently with the huge pressures of the winter. The pay award will also help the NHS to recruit and retain more staff, which will mean that it can treat patients more quickly.

Equally—this relates to the hon. Lady's comments—we recognise the need to provide student nurses with the support that they need throughout their training. That is why the NHS bursary scheme continues to provide more generous financial support than is available for people in mainstream higher education. In contrast to what happened under the previous Government, bursary rates are being increased again by the rate of inflation from September. That will be the third successive annual increase. We are committed to maintaining the level of the bursary. It is worth pointing out to the hon. Lady that, prior to 1998, there had been no increase in the bursary rate for three years. The Government have acted decisively to improve the bursary arrangements.

We recognise the hard work and commitment required of student nurses, who undertake an exceptionally demanding education and training programme. The hon. Lady mentioned some of the pressures on student nurses.

Jackie Ballard: I thank the Minister for giving way again. He said that the bursaries were more generous than the funding available to other students. I am sure that he would accept that the hours of work and study required of student nurses are quite different from those of other students.

Does the Minister know the gap between the bursary level, even with dependants' allowances, for someone with one or two children, and what the same person would receive in income support, which the Government would consider the basic level that anyone would need?

Mr. Hutton: If the hon. Lady wants detailed figures and calculations, I shall have to write to her.

While the bursary scheme continues to provide effective support for students, we know that more needs to be done, particularly to tackle the difficulties experienced by some groups during the training period. We want to ensure the widest possible access to nurse training programmes, so that the future NHS work force will be diverse and fully representative of the communities that they serve. We want a system that provides adequate support in all circumstances, so that no one suffers undue financial hardship as a result of choosing to train as a nurse. That is why, as I am sure that the hon. Lady knows, the Government are currently undertaking a comprehensive review of the NHS support package for trainee nurses, to ensure that the best support continues to be provided.

The review of student support will be wide ranging and will include examination of the different levels of support provided for diploma and degree students; the need to ensure the widest possible access to nurse training; the issue of hardship; and the interface between our support arrangements and the benefits system. We shall also consider student accommodation and travel expenses.

The enhanced level of support available to diploma students was introduced to stem the year-on-year decline in the number of young people entering nursing training. To date, to safeguard recruitment, those differences have been maintained. Student nurses, of course, face particular pressures that other groups of students do not, such as their short vacations and their extensive involvement in clinical placements. Older students, and those with dependants, can also face particular difficulties in gaining access to nurse training. For that reason, student nurses are already provided with enhanced support in comparison with other higher education students. In addition, the NHS meets student liability for tuition fee contributions in full. That is normally worth £1,025 a year. We want to continue to provide the necessary support to guarantee the future supply of those key workers.

Hon. Members, and certainly the hon. Lady, will be aware of adverse publicity in the professional press, and from some professional bodies, following clarification of the rules on travel allowances for students attending clinical placements. There have been no changes in the rules since 1 September. Any students who incur additional travel costs—when compared with their normal daily travel costs—can continue to claim them in full.

My ministerial colleagues and I are also aware of the problems affecting predominantly rural areas, such as the south-west, where the hon. Lady's constituency is situated, and some of the smaller health care professions, in which opportunities for theoretical and practical training can be widely spread geographically. In developing our policy relating to travel expenses, our aim is to be fair to all students while safeguarding recruitment and ensuring that we do not impose an unacceptable administrative burden on students, universities or the NHS student grants unit.

I recognise in particular the importance, and the value to the NHS, of attracting mature students, single parents and those with dependants into nurse training. I am also aware of the particular difficulties faced by some of those students, many of whom have increased financial commitments, in accessing nurse education programmes. We want to find ways of ensuring the widest possible access to training in future, regardless of the individual circumstances of the student. This year's review of student support will therefore include examination of the interface between student support arrangements and the benefits system. The hon. Lady mentioned that matter.

The Department's officials are working closely with the student grants unit, education consortiums and the higher education institutions to ensure that we have in place an effective method of paying support to student nurses. Since taking on additional responsibilities in September 1999, the student grants unit has authorised payments to approximately 17,500 nursing students and those studying in the professions allied to medicine totalling about £38 million. That is a significant achievement for the unit's 25 staff. The centralisation of responsibility for the assessment and payment of bursaries at the student grants unit has been of real benefit to students, both in terms of providing a single point of contact for advice and as a way of ensuring equal treatment for all NHS-funded students.

We also want to ensure that nurses are provided with high-quality and affordable accommodation when and where they need it. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister recently published his Green Paper on housing and announced the starter home initiative. Nurses will be helped to buy their own homes in areas where housing is costly.

The initiative will make a real difference, but we want to go further still. At the recent Royal College of Nursing conference, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced his appointment of John Yates as a new national nurse housing co-ordinator. His remit is to secure more affordable homes for more nurses. The accommodation will be in new high-quality developments—flats, apartments and houses—which will help to attract still more nurses to the profession. Surplus NHS assets will be used to kick-start investment in new homes for nurses. The new co-ordinator will spearhead a range of new partnerships with housing investors, councils and the Housing Corporation, to build affordable new accommodation for nurses in high-cost areas. That might go some way to meet the hon. Lady's concerns.

We want to ensure that as many student nurses as possible complete their training and go on to work in the NHS. Attrition rates from nursing courses vary from year to year, from university to university and between the branches of nursing. Figures from the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting show a continuing downward trend in overall attrition for diploma level students. That development is welcome. Those students make up the majority of the nursing student population. The figures compare favourably with those for other forms of higher education. It is our intention to ensure that we have in place a system that provides all students with appropriate financial support throughout their training, thus, we hope, minimising the loss of students from training courses.

We also intend to strengthen nurse education; the strategy was set out in the document "Making a Difference—Strengthening the nursing, midwifery and health visiting contribution to health and healthcare." We intend to continue to support other initiatives, such as the encouragement of former staff back into the profession. Implementation of the strategy will help to ensure the delivery of high-quality midwifery education, which will help to meet the needs of patients and clients in the 21st century. We are ensuring that nurses and midwives are properly prepared to contribute fully to a modern NHS and we are modernising career frameworks to provide more satisfying and rewarding careers.

Once qualified, today's nurses enjoy better pay and can look forward to more flexible shift patterns, improved career development and a service that rewards them fairly for taking on the additional responsibilities that we want them to undertake. Our initiatives to recruit more nurses, to encourage more former staff back into the profession, to support nurses properly throughout their training and to ensure that qualified staff are properly rewarded are clear signs of the Government's commitment to nurses, to services and, most important, to patients. Tomorrow's qualified nurses will form the backbone of the NHS and will help to deliver on the opportunity that we now have to modernise the health service and to provide the care that nurses know that their patients deserve.

Mr. Tom Clarke (Coatbridge and Chryston): Having returned from Peru only last Thursday with the hon. Member for East Londonderry (Mr. Ross), I am pleased to welcome this short debate. Sponsored by the British branch of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, we were invited to observe and assess the conditions of elections for the presidency and members of Congress, which took place on Sunday 9 April. We tried to observe in a spirit of neutrality and, where possible, help to make the elections in Peru fair and democratic. They held great significance for the future of democracy in that country.

The hon. Member for East Londonderry applied himself tirelessly to our responsibilities. He would agree that we were helped immeasurably by our excellent ambassador, Mr. Roger Hart, his staff at the embassy in Lima and the honorary consul in Truijillo. The visit was enjoyable and interesting, but we owe the House the same candid account that we gave to the IPU yesterday.

During the visit, it was necessary to convey to the United Kingdom our grave concerns about events as they unfolded. The ambassador made those known to my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), whose letter, which was placed in the public domain in Peru, was timely and helpful. My hon. Friend shared our pressing concern to see how the election of the successful candidate for President was procured and to ensure that the process was not only free and fair, but seen to be free and fair by the people of Peru and the international community. Our priority was the electoral process rather than the candidates. We had no preference in mind.

There were times when our concerns deepened. I do not disguise the anxieties that we felt and expressed about the credibility of the campaign, the counting of the votes and the declaration of the results. Sadly, our perceptions were shared by thousands of Peruvians whose peaceful demonstrations were met with tear gas as they approached the presidential palace. They almost created an atmosphere of ineffable violence. Thankfully, that was prevented because, after days of waiting for the final result, the votes were counted and no winner was declared. There was a widespread belief that a second ballot would take place between the two front-runners, Fujimori and Toledo, but I was profoundly disturbed to discover this morning that no such announcement has been made 10 days after the polls closed.

I make the plea today that when the second election takes place, as we hope it will, it is free, fair, transparent and without harassment from any quarter. However, given our experience and that of our European colleagues, that will be no mean task. Some things must be changed next time round. The European representatives from Belgium, Great Britain and the Netherlands issued a joint statement at a press conference. It said:

> The state resources have been abusively and largely used to serve one candidate. The examples are countless. The Belgian delegation has specifically seen peasants being taken to a meeting of the...candidate in trucks belonging to the State. The State television is almost a monopoly of this candidate—

Mr. Fujimori—

> This situation is not acceptable since it breaks the equity among the candidates and turns the process into a non-democratic one.

The inequality between opposition groups and the existing state machine is best manifested in the significant irregularities of the constitutional tribunal in Peru, not least the fact that the President changed the constitution that he introduced to give himself an unprecedented third term, and promptly sacked three of the five judges who ruled in an appeal court that his actions were illegal. Indeed, the whole state institutional system seems to have been organised to re-elect the President. It is common knowledge that the President relies heavily on the Peruvian armed forces and some local authorities are run by the army.

Transparencia published a document that, on page after page, gives examples of abuses and irregularities. First, Toledo's name was cut from a huge number of ballot papers with scissors, so that if people wanted to vote for him, his name simply was not there. Secondly, in a region with 169,000 electors, 175,000 ballot papers were returned.

There were repeated reports of public resources that were intended for Government social programmes being used to gain support for the President's election campaign. That cannot be right. Transparencia, a body trusted by the international community, denounced what it described as "unprecedented irregularities and harassment", including attacks against its computing systems, electricity cuts and interception of telephone lines. To his credit, the ombudsman made his reservations equally clear.

We were not alone in noting—how could we have failed to do so?—the appalling imbalance on television, radio and the media, which would have been farcical had it not been so serious. Indeed, in a carefully considered paper, issued just before the election, Mr. Terence Duffy, consultant to Electoral Reform International Services, said:

> Currently, Peru does possess a vigorous and extensive (if socially limited) culture of political debate expressed in some of the cable television channels such as Canal N, in the weekly magazine Caretas, and in newspapers such as El Comercio and La Republica. Regrettably, these media possess rather limited audiences, totalling no more than a few hundred thousand people, which is a gross imbalance in relation to the scale of the total Peruvian population. The Peruvian media are therefore heavily Lima-centric and possess an audience which is solely located in the highest socio-economic sectors. Regrettably, economic considerations would prevent the extensive dissemination of these media to the wider Peruvian public.

In conclusion, I thank the Minister warmly for his vigilance on these matters and ask the Government to take the initiative in ensuring European Union monitoring next time around. Even then, delivering a timely democratic election will not be easy. However, such representation and the expressed will of the international community can go a long way to achieving fair play. Never again should the election observation mission feel the need to use the expression "a culture of fear." Instead, let us hope that we can see a country with limitless potential achieve that potential in a democratic way, as I believe Peru will do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. John McWilliam): Before I call the hon. Member for East Londonderry (Mr. Ross), will the right hon. Member for Coatbridge and Chryston (Mr. Clarke) confirm that the hon. Gentleman has his consent and that of the Minister to intervene?

[Mr. Deputy Speaker]

Mr. Clarke: Yes.

Mr. William Ross (East Londonderry): It is a pleasure to take part in the debate, brief though it is. However, I would have preferred to have the opportunity for a much longer debate so that we could have explored the matter in depth. It was a pleasure to share the visit with the right hon. Member for Coatbridge and Chryston (Mr. Clarke). We did not know each other very well before we went, but we returned as firm friends. Although we did not know much about Peru before we went, we knew a fair bit about elections and we now know about Peru as a result of our visit.

We were made aware before we left of the serious problems that Peru has faced in recent years. At one stage, it had over 7,000 per cent. inflation per annum, and the country suffered from terrorism and cocaine. The last was more of a problem that Peru was exporting to the rest of the world than an internal problem, because I understand that, at one stage, it produced over 50 per cent. of the world's cocaine.

The right hon. Gentleman and I returned with a kaleidoscope of impressions, for we found a land of great contrasts—the very wealthy, the very poor, heart-breaking street children, shanty towns, unemployment and modern bustling towns and cities. The people were friendly, helpful and, in many cases, very outspoken: their opinions were made plain to us from every level of society.

The right hon. Gentleman and I visited one shanty town, with a policeman or two in tow, and went into one of the huts there: they can be described in no other way. The lady of the house said that she had voted for Fujimori. Her son stated openly that he had voted for Toledo. Therefore, the people had a measure of free speech that they were not afraid to exercise, even in the presence of the police. Some of the meetings in which we took part were valuable in clarifying the conditions in the country. Given the way in which the population exercised free speech, we are both hopeful that Peru will overcome not only its economic and social problems, but its political difficulties. I want to deal now with the political problems to which my right hon. Friend referred.

It was evident to us that President Fujimori enjoys a great deal of electoral support; it would be wrong to give any other impression. People recall how desperate the nation's plight was when he first took office. He defeated, or at least suppressed, terrorism, by means that we in this country could never find acceptable, but which he and his Government considered necessary; he stopped inflation, which is now between 3 and 4 per cent. per annum; he did quite a lot on the drugs front, and is commended by the United States Government for that; he reached agreement with Chile and Ecuador on long-festering border disputes; and he has built many schools and roads, which benefit the poorest sections of society. It is a formidable list of successes, which even his most vociferous critics commended. We found only one person who was prepared to condemn him at every turn. The downside is that when he took office, he could serve only one term of five years.

President Fujimori changed the constitution to allow two terms, and is now claiming the next term as his second, if he wins, as it is under the new constitution and his first term does not count, as it was under the old one. That was at the root of much of the opposition to him, for he is perceived by many as breaking his word and violating the constitution.

It was made plain to us that he had used doubtful methods to achieve his goal of running again and then attempting to secure election. The allegations seemed to us to be valid. Some are the ones that the right hon. Gentleman referred to; others are slightly different. The first is that the campaign against the other principal candidates was an utterly ruthless and vicious programme of vilification, which succeeded in destroying them one after the other. Mr. Toledo was a late-emerging candidate.

We were told that $3,000 made certain that any one of the tabloid newspapers published the stories, which were personally written with the headlines, the story and the editorial and then read on the street corners. The cost of television propaganda for opposition candidates was set so high that they could not afford it, and the stations that were willing to be even-handed ran into difficulties over advertising revenue from Government and other sources and increasing demands for unpaid tax.

Opposition rallies in other towns were disrupted by power cuts, land-line breakdowns, power failures to mobile phones and the closure of access roads on one pretext or another, so that folk could not get to the rallies. In addition, the poor who supported Fujimori got food aid, and 800,000 people have been promised a plot of land on which to build a house. All those are powerful inducements.

It was also made clear to us that many judges had been sacked and replaced by provisional judges; there were other official bodies where the membership simply screamed "rigging". There were questions about the accuracy of the electoral register. We were unhappy about all that and believed that it was not possible for the president to win on the first ballot, and that a second round would eventually become necessary. There is no guarantee that Fujimori would lose in the second round. He might win, even in an honest ballot, and every hon. Member knows that elections are difficult to predict.

Time does not permit me to continue, except to say that Peru is a wonderful country, full of men and women with high hopes. We wish them well and hope that the bright future that beckons will be achieved. They seem to have created a formidable array of institutions, procedures and documentation to ensure that fraud could not occur, but they left gaping holes in the process into which votes disappear and do not emerge in the same form.

Finally, I thank our ambassador and staff who were admirable in every way and looked after us very well indeed. I thank also the ambassadors of Belgium and the Netherlands, and their parliamentary representatives, whose company we enjoyed and whose report on their experiences we are happy to accept.

1.10 pm

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. John Battle): It is customary to congratulate the hon. Member who secures an Adjournment debate. In this case, more than congratulations are in order.I do not know how an Adjournment debate is secured in Peru—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that the Minister is not implying that the systems in the House echo those in Peru in any way.

Mr. Battle: I suggest that the efficiency with which we can communicate speaks volumes.

The debate is timely, as it keeps the spotlight on the situation in Peru and keeps up the pressure. That is precisely what Adjournment debates should do and I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for Coatbridge and Chryston (Mr. Clarke) and the hon. Member for East Londonderry (Mr. Ross) on bringing the matter to our attention while it is alive.

I congratulate them both on their valuable contribution to the IPU election monitoring mission to Peru. The telegrams that we received from our ambassador reflected the fact that they were a credit to Britain. Their work and the way in which they participated enhanced our parliamentary reputation, which is the purpose of the IPU. It was impressive to receive the feedback from the embassy as the situation unfolded. Monitoring should allow a snapshot to be taken to assess how the process is doing. The reports were on my desk during the process and they were important to enable us to react and to make a contribution to the process.

I am also grateful to my right hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman for their kind words about our ambassador and his staff. The system was working at its best and the job was well done.

Outside the Chamber in Westminster Hall there is an exhibition on parliamentary work and elections. It reminds all of us why we are here and that, despite our 2,500 years of history, parliamentary democracy is not as advanced as it should be. Of the 30 elections taking place in the world this year, 16 are taking place in countries that have never had any form of democratic election. The process is relatively new and it is important that in places such as Peru, which has had democratic elections since 1980, we strengthen the process and ensure that it is not undermined. The work of my right hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman as observers was crucial.

Throughout the Peruvian election process, the United Kingdom played a leading role in calling for free, fair and transparent elections. We financed two visits to Peru by representatives of Electoral International Reform Services. Reports of those visits highlighted worrying deficiencies in the electoral process at that time. In particular, the reports drew attention to the misuse of state resources, including food aid for party political purposes and manipulation of the media, to which reference has been made. We gave copies of those reports to the Peruvian Government and to members of the IPU delegation in Peru, and circulated them widely at international level. The spotlight was turned on events, so that matters could be improved.

We supported the activities of the office of the Peruvian ombudsman, Mr. Santistevan, in the election campaign. Our Government contributed some £20,000 to his election-monitoring mission. Since March 1998, we have contributed more than £140,000 to the cost of important work and research conducted by his office. He visited me just before the election, and we discussed that process. He expressed certain fears and spoke of the need to keep the spotlight on the election process to ensure a fair outcome. We will continue to support his activities in the run up to the second round of voting.

Last week, I met members of the inter-agency group on Peru, with whom we have strong and established ties. The group consists of a number of non-governmental organisations, including the Peru support group and Oxfam. The meeting followed an earlier exchange between members of that group and officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's Latin American and Caribbean department. In other words, consultation with people who were familiar with events on the ground has been vital throughout this process.

Last week's discussion, in which I outlined our concerns about irregularities highlighted by independent observers, proved useful. As a result of that meeting and information received from those observers, I released a statement that expressed those concerns and underlined our view that a second round of voting was desirable and sensible. A copy of that statement was given to the Peruvian authorities by the British ambassador in Lima.

On the morning of 12 April, Jose Portillo, the head of the official electoral authority of the national office of electoral processes, announced that, with 97.68 per cent. of votes counted, Fujimori had 49.84 per cent. and Toledo had 40.31 per cent. He added that, with so few votes remaining, the "50 per cent. plus one" target for an outright first round victory could not be attained by any one candidate, so there would have to be a second round play-off. He explained that his office would not be able to deliver a final report on 100 per cent. of the results until official vote registration documents from polling stations abroad were received. Although a similar system operates in this country, receipt of those reports has been subject to considerable delay.

The head of the official electoral authority suggested that the national election board would have to resolve pending challenges to certain results registered in official vote registration documents. Again, such challenges occur in our elections. If there are squabbles over spoilt ballot papers and so on, agents sort them out there and then. The problem should not take long to resolve but, following the interim result of 12 April, there has been no official announcement of the final result, so a date has yet to be set for the second round. I share the concerns of my right hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman about that. Although I am confident that a second round will take place, I have instructed our ambassador to raise our concerns with the Peruvian authorities and the national office for electoral processes. In other words, the ambassador will advise them to get on with it.

We played a leading role in preparing European Union statements that expressed concern about the election campaign and developments on polling day. Prior to the elections, we helped to draw up the statement by the European Commission of Human Rights in Geneva on 24 March. It stated:

[Mr. Battle]

The EU continues to be disturbed by the decline in Peru of the rule of law and democratic institutions, including deterioration in the electoral process.

That reflects precisely the impressions that the hon. Member for East Londonderry outlined during the debate.

We also took the lead in issuing an EU statement condemning the withdrawal of Peru from the Inter-American Court of Human Rights last year. We made it clear that we did not think that that withdrawal was a good move. On 15 February, EU ambassadors, including the British ambassador in Lima, issued a public statement calling on the Peruvian authorities to take the measures necessary to implement important recommendations set out in the independent reports on the electoral process. We also initiated an EU statement on 7 April, expressing our deep concern over aspects of the election campaign and calling for procedures on polling day to be free and fair and to conform to international standards.

In the preliminary work leading up to the day of the election, we endeavoured, through the EU, to keep the international spotlight focused on the process to ensure that it was carried out correctly. It has worked imperfectly at best, but we must move on. We shall continue to work with our EU colleagues to impress on the Peruvian authorities the need to meet international standards as the second round of voting approaches. They now have an opportunity to get it right.

The Peruvian elections were discussed at the EU Latin America working party meeting on 17 April. I was asked earlier whether we could take the initiative, and I am happy to confirm to my right hon. Friend the Member for Coatbridge and Chryston that it was agreed at that meeting that the EU will be sending an observer mission. As part of that, the United Kingdom again plans to send observers, and I hope that my right hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman will once more be able to contribute in some way. It is important that we should keep up the good work.

The hon. Member for East Londonderry suggested that it would be better to have a wider debate on the economic, social and political context of development in Peru. I, too, would welcome that. In the short time available to us today, we have had to focus on the election process. That will be an on-going state of affairs until the second round, and we must keep a critical eye on it.

In relation to drugs, the Government are committed to tackling the global drug trafficking problem. Last week, we met President Pastrana of Colombia for an in-depth discussion about working more closely together to tackle international drug trafficking. That is a shared responsibility between producer and consumer countries. We have work to do on the streets and in the clinics here, as well as trying to eliminate production by finding alternative crops to coca and heroin.

We welcome Peru's commitment to its national drugs plan, and we are actively involved in bilateral and multilateral counter-drugs projects. In January 2000, I announced a further £500,000 contribution to a UN programme to monitor coca leaf production in Peru. Its aim is to discover the extent of production and to encourage a shift to alternative crops, providing peasant farmers with a livelihood while removing the potential for the cocaine trade.

We also keep a close eye on human rights in Peru. We continue to monitor closely the human rights situation and to raise human rights issues with the Peruvian Government whenever suitable opportunities arise. We press them whenever we consider that they are not adhering to their international obligations. For example, when they withdrew from the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, we joined our European Union partners in pressing them to re-join. In March this year, at the 56th session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, we joined our EU partners in issuing a statement expressing concern at the decline in the rule of law and democratic institutions in Peru, including the deterioration in the electoral process.

In conclusion, democratic politics is a project. We try to deepen participation in democracy. As the posters outside in Westminster Hall demonstrate, there is a history to the development of democracy. Not long ago, only men could vote in Britain, and the franchise was extended to women only relatively recently. We must look for new ways of deepening our democracy, and increase the extent to which popular participation is built up from the base in all societies. We have a history of democracy dating back hundreds of years. I am proud of the fact that my colleagues have been to Peru to participate as monitors in its election process. Their work has been exemplary, and it stands as part of the tradition of campaigning to deepen democracy.

We share a common concern that, in Peru, democracy is very new and needs underpinning, supporting and encouraging; it does not need undermining. If we feel that it has been undermined, we have a duty to point that out. We look forward to the second round of voting, and we shall continue to monitor developments very closely during the electoral campaign. We shall encourage the Peruvian authorities to ensure that the conditions are in place for free, fair and transparent elections that are dominated not by fear but by the free decisions of the people participating in them. It is important for Peru to move forward democratically, not backwards. We shall continue to play a full diplomatic role in ensuring that that happens, and we are grateful to our colleagues for their work during the past few weeks.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls (Teignbridge): The events that I am about to describe go from the bizarre to the outrageous. Anyone who did not know that what I am about to say is entirely factual could be forgiven for thinking that they were listening to the plot of a John Grisham novel. It is a story about how a small west country business has been ripped off by one of the world's largest computer companies, while others pitch in at the same time.

Before I go into detail, I should say that the story includes the all-too-familiar tale of anti-competitive behaviour, of which the Microsoft case is the best-known current example. On this occasion, however, the behaviour is aimed against a United Kingdom company. As if that were not enough, the story also includes an almost incredible example of procrastination by the United States judiciary, which damages existing and future UK innovation at the expense of the British taxpayer. As a result, a west country company, which should now be a multi-million-pound operation pouring money into further innovations and creating wealth for the entire UK, is struggling for its existence.

AllVoice Computing plc develops computerised speech recognition products. Computer speech recognition allows a person to dictate into a microphone connected to a computer, with the result that the recognised words appear on the computer screen. No less a figure than Bill Gates has said that > speech recognition is not just the future of Windows: it is the future of computers.

AllVoice did not invent speech recognition any more than Trevor Baylis, who is famous for inventing the clockwork radio, invented the radio or clockwork. However, it made the application of voice recognition a practical reality.

IBM and Dragon Systems Inc. dominate the relevant market. Dragon is a US company founded and owned by two long-serving IBM employees. When it first produced speech recognition—a facility for converting speech to text—there was no option to play back the audio on a word processor or through any other standard computer application. In effect, the dictator had no choice but to try to remember what was said in order to make corrections. Consequently, users had to interrupt their dictation and train of thought. Dragon's system required more time and effort than using a traditional dictating machine. In effect, it had invented a car that could never move out of first gear.

AllVoice's crucial innovation was to invent an error correction capability. That was done by linking the original spoken words to the text in the user's word processor, which meant that the user could freely dictate without pausing to correct the errors that inevitably occur. Furthermore, the provision of an option for storing the text with its linked audio meant that users could delegate the entire correction process if they preferred to do so. AllVoice also offered users an ability to record an audio note to accompany a delegated or deferred correction document. In 1996, the company received a prestigious Confederation of British Industry award for those inventions. Following the release of its inventions, AllVoice's sales rose dramatically and further sales and development staff were employed.

In January 1996, IBM informed AllVoice that it was seriously considering incorporating AllVoice technology into its products under a worldwide agreement. IBM urgently requested AllVoice to submit the software, including unreleased features, to IBM's speech research and development groups in Vienna and Florida. In February 1996, AllVoice were invited to Florida, at IBM's expense, to discuss the arrangements. Of course, promises of confidentiality were made, and IBM insisted that it had no intention of writing similar software. There was an understanding that should the evaluation of the products be satisfactory, some form of partnership would be entered into. Instead, in April 1996, after a satisfactory evaluation, IBM wrote to say that it was now working on the same functions. Over the next few weeks, IBM also tried unsuccessfully to trick AllVoice into signing away its intellectual property rights.

In June 1996, having clearly decided to exploit AllVoice's products for itself, IBM announced to the world that it would be delivering a new product with similar features in the following November. Pre-announcing a product is a well-known tactic of predators, which is designed to undermine competitors who would otherwise sell competing products in the time between the announcement and the release of the predator's product.

IBM slipped up temporarily in January 1997 by introducing a low-price product that had all AllVoice's features missing, no doubt thinking by then that AllVoice would be dead in the water. AllVoice responded by adding its features back in and then undercutting IBM's more expensive version by nearly 30 per cent. Once again, AllVoice's sales climbed dramatically, so in retaliation IBM resorted to anti-competitive actions against AllVoice. As the anti-competitive actions increased, AllVoice eventually filed a formal complaint with the European Court in December 1997—case No. IV/36 824. AllVoice is waiting on the European Court to take action.

In 1996 AllVoice decided to try to produce a complete British speech system by involving unique developments in natural speech from the university of Cambridge. AllVoice had by then discovered that it could apply for patents in the United States for some of its crucial features that had been pirated. UK patents were also applied for on previously undisclosed innovations and were obtained in May 1997.

Dragon Systems also invited AllVoice to the United States to discuss collaboration and was made aware of the imminent announcement of UK patents and applications for US and worldwide patents. Dragon wanted AllVoice to disclose all its details, without a confidentiality agreement, which of course AllVoice declined. However, Dragon by then had access to the UK patent public disclosures less than one month later, and its next version included the audio playback features previously missing from all its earlier products. Needless to say, that was in clear breach of patent, but having a right of action is one thing and successfully prosecuting it through the American judicial system is something else entirely.

[Mr. Patrick Nicholls]

AllVoice was awarded its first US patent on 25 August 1998. By then, its products were being pirated on a grand scale. I understand that it is a feature of American business practices that if a little guy has a patent that he is in all probability not in a position to enforce, all the big guys get in on the act. Therefore, all attempts by AllVoice, short of litigation, to stop the breach of its patent had no effect at all. Reluctantly, AllVoice had to resort to litigation in the United States. As an official complaint is currently outstanding against IBM, a patent infringement suit was filed in Boston on 12 February 1999 in the US District Court of Massachusetts against Dragon Systems. The court case number is CA No.99-CV-10436, and the judge allocated is the honourable Douglas P. Woodlock.

At this stage, as might be expected, AllVoice filed a motion for preliminary injunction against Dragon Systems. The purpose of a preliminary injunction is to prevent further harm from being done to the patent holder until the case can be dealt with. In any judicial system where injunctive relief is available, it is the very essence of the matter that the hearing be held swiftly. AllVoice's injunction hearing was held on 26 May 1999 and, incredibly, that is where matters rest. The judge has reserved to himself whether he will grant immediate relief—immediate relief after nearly a year. I am told that even AllVoice's American lawyers, practised as they are in the vagaries of their own litigation procedures, are stunned by the delay. All attempts to get the judge to move on it have failed. It is, frankly, bizarre.

Normally such motions are decided within a month. After a month had passed without a decision, AllVoice's US attorney, Sullivan and Worcester, started to make telephone calls to the court, to inquire about the status of the opinion. After six months of such contacts and still without a decision, Sullivan and Worcester wrote formally to the court in November 1999, pointing out that the inaction was an implicit endorsement of Dragon's patent infringement and urging the court's attention to the case. When that correspondence received no response, a motion was filed the following month for a status conference. The judge denied the motion on the same day, saying that it was "unnecessary".

That is where matters rest, except that AllVoice has had to scale down its operations in an attempt to stay in business, while Dragon includes AllVoice's patented features at no extra cost. The attorneys are analysing whether other companies include the same features. That cuts out any realistic possibility of AllVoice making sales; yet it has to fund the entire litigation because, subject to what I shall say in a moment, no Government help appears to be available to it.

Lest anyone thinks that this extraordinary inactivity by the American judicial system affects only a private company and not the taxpayer, let me disabuse them at once. In 1996, AllVoice received a Department of Trade and Industry SPUR award to assist with the development of natural speech recognition systems. That project cost nearly £200,000, of which the DTI funded 30 per cent. Indeed, part of the funding has been invested in taking forward intellectual property protection through US and UK patenting.

It is difficult to describe in a few words the magnitude of what has been done to AllVoice or, indeed, the advantages that the United Kingdom would have gained had AllVoice been able to proceed. I have reminded the Chamber what Bill Gates said about speech recognition. Every computer has a keyboard, which is a cumbersome barrier for most users. Speech control and dictation is increasingly being used as a better alternative. As more innovations are made, the keyboard will, almost certainly, disappear. AllVoice's invention can, therefore, be applied to virtually every computer. The value of the speech recognition market has been estimated at £2.1 billion for this year alone. Speech recognition packages, mostly with AllVoice features, have been among the top-selling software packages in the world since January 1998. Obviously, IBM is one of the bestsellers, but even Dragon's product is said to be the 10th best-selling software application of all time.

To date, AllVoice has spent more than £275,000 on outside intellectual property costs, including patent filing fees, patent attorneys, legal counsel in the United Kingdom and the United States and, probably, other US associates. That is more than the current reduced turnover of the entire company. Patent fees continue to mount up, as do the company's legal costs. On top of that, AllVoice's has had to devote daily resources to litigation for lengthy periods, at great additional cost.

The sickening thing is that we have seen it all before. James Dyson, inventor of the bagless vacuum cleaner, has been involved in patent litigation with numerous American corporations. He has spoken of being "shafted" by the Americans, in their efforts to put him out of business. They nearly succeeded. He was saved from a considerable debt for legal fees by a fortuitous Japanese licensing arrangement. Dyson is a major UK success story, but only after going through American litigation, with the help of Japanese funds.

Even closer to home, as it were, is the case of Rodime, a Scottish-based company that made a quantum leap forward by inventing a smaller computer disc drive, which was wiped out in US patent litigation. Six hundred and twenty jobs were lost in the fight against the two main protagonists, IBM and Seagate Technology. Seagate's name will be familiar to those involved in these matters, and well it might–Seagate is Dragon's main outside investor. After years of litigation, including revelations of attempts to interfere with the US Patent Office and anti-competitive behaviour, Rodime had to settle for just $45 million gross from Seagate, a mere fraction of what it would have got if it had received a proper percentage of all the disc drives that use its invention.

The way in which American industry has rallied round to carve up AllVoice makes a pack of sharks look like a convention of nuns. It is an utter disgrace. For reasons that are impossible to fathom, the American judicial system, instead of protecting the innocent, has played into the hands of the guilty.

The Minister, as a fair-minded person, will, I am sure, be as concerned as I am. Knowing how such things go, I can predict that her civil servants are already preparing to advise her that she has no standing in the American judicial process. I hope that, if she receives that advice, she will reject it. If the big battalions, in the form of Her Majesty's Government, will not intervene on AllVoice's behalf, who will? The Government should make an approach to the US Government at the highest level–and I mean the highest level–and say that the injunctive procedures should be brought to a conclusion at once. Indeed, given the large sums of taxpayers' money that the Government have already put into AllVoice, I would like them to go further, by helping to fund the litigation that will still have to take place.

After all, Her Majesty's Government are not entirely powerless. The taxpayer helps to fund many of the manufacturing plants opened by US corporations as UK subsidiaries in areas of regional assistance. I assume that it is no coincidence that IBM has a manufacturing plant and call centre at Greenock in Scotland. Before continuing with those subsidies, or agreeing to new ones, we should insist that those corporations declare all existing official disputes publicly, as well as declaring all new ones, as they occur. The Government could make it a condition of assistance that litigation be conducted responsibly, rather than in a predatory fashion. I say that because I believe in solutions, as well as problems. The Government are better placed than I am to work out what steps they could take. What they should not do is wash their hands of the issue and say that it is all down to the American courts.

The Government should look specifically at the activities of IBM and Dragon in the United Kingdom and at how they relate to the United States. Despite the dramatic growth in the emerging speech recognition market, a number of UK firms that have invested heavily in added-value sales with IBM or Dragon speech technology have been forced out of existence. AllVoice has just completed a project part-funded by the DTI involving automatic speech recognition over the telephone. One Department, which has seen the prototype, has calculated that AllVoice's innovation could save it more than £3 million a year. Unfortunately, the US litigation has deprived AllVoice of the funds that it should have had to turn a finished piece of development into a marketable product range. The Government must ensure that that innovation, and the savings that the UK Government could make, are not lost through US behaviour.

The Minister has an opportunity today to stand four-square by British innovation and excellence and by our sense of decency and fair play. That is what the public would expect of the Government. I cannot imagine for one moment that the Minister will not have considerable sympathy with the matter that I have described to the Chamber today.

1.45 pm

The Minister for Small Business and E-Commerce (Ms Patricia Hewitt): I thank the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) for raising this issue, which is clearly of enormous concern to AllVoice and to the hon. Gentleman, who is the relevant constituency Member of Parliament. I congratulate him on giving such a full account of the company's concerns.

The hon. Gentleman rightly acknowledged that I cannot comment on the details of an individual court case–it would be improper of me to do so, regardless of the jurisdiction in which the case was being heard. I also cannot give details of the contact and support that the Department of Trade and Industry offered to the company, because that is a matter of commercial confidentiality. None the less, I hope that I can help the hon. Gentleman and the company.

The hon. Gentleman discussed possible delays in proceedings in America. I have no standing whatsoever in the American judicial system. I shall ask our officials in the British embassy in Washington to establish the full details of the case and, perhaps, to seek legal advice about taking further action. I shall also ask to be given a personal report on the result of those inquiries.

It might help if I confirm that AllVoice was the beneficiary of two grants from my Department relating to speech recognition technology. In December 1996, it was awarded a grant under the SPUR–support for products under research–scheme, which has been replaced by the small firms merit award for research and technology. In November 1998, the company received a second SMART award. I understand, and the hon. Gentleman confirmed, that significant provision was made in both grants to cover the cost of protecting intellectual property rights.

Since then, Government officials have been in regular contact with the company–indeed, we have been in touch over the past few days. We are aware of the pressures that are on the company, which the hon. Gentleman described, and we have been flexible about its undertaking to exploit the research that we supported. The possibility of a further joint university project was kept open–that would involve the company in the further development of speech recognition technology.

The case that the hon. Gentleman described raises issues that are becoming increasingly important as our economy is transformed by information and communications technology. One of the most striking features of the impact of the new technologies on the economy is the speed of innovation. The Department of Trade and Industry and, more broadly, the Government are determined to ensure that industries in this country contribute fully to the development and exploitation of those new technologies. That will allow the United Kingdom to generate new companies, jobs, products and services and, ultimately, a better quality and standard of life for everyone. As part of that strategy, we support the development of ground-breaking technologies that could contribute to economic growth.

The hon. Gentleman rightly began by saying that speech recognition technology is hugely important to the development of computer technology. In particular, it opens up the possibility of creating a friendlier and more effective interface between the user and computer technology. All of us know, as users, that the current and earlier generations of computers are not easy or intuitive to use.

The United Kingdom is a leader in wireless technology. Indeed, we are currently holding the world's first auction for third generation mobile spectrum. Voice recognition technology will be critical in catching the next wave of wireless technology and ensuring that we build on our competitive edge in wireless technology to develop new businesses, new jobs and new wealth creation.

As part of that strategy we have sought to maximise the support available for UK-based firms from the European Union and we work with our European partners at the leading edge of information society developments—for instance through the European fifth framework programme. That programme, which is funded by all member state Governments, offers a budget of about half a billion pounds each year, from which I am glad to say that last year the UK industry received some £50 million. We are helping firms to take part in that programme to ensure, not least, that they exploit the immediate funding available and then continue to benefit from it.

Through that, through the SMART programme and through EUREKA and so on, we can support not just AllVoice but many innovative, high-technology companies in the United Kingdom. However, I am pleased to say that United Kingdom firms working in speech recognition and language technology won more than £750 million from the European fifth framework programme last year. Those firms and their European partners will work on a series of projects to extend the potential of spoken human language technology for mass market e-commerce, so that users can compare and buy services and products in their own language and in the form that they prefer. The firms will also develop multilingual delivery of information from a single source, tailored to highly personalised requirements with improved quality of speech synthesis. Therefore, with our European partners, we are making significant investments to try to sustain and build further competitive advantage for the United Kingdom.

In this fast-moving and highly competitive technical environment, intellectual property rights become hugely important. The more I talk to companies at the leading edge of the knowledge-driven economy, the more I hear from them that intellectual property rights and related issues around patenting, trademark, copyright and so on are at the top of the agenda for Governments and policymakers. Certainly the episode that the hon. Gentleman has highlighted underlines the need for leading-edge companies to establish a clear and well-directed intellectual property strategy from the outset. It is not always easy, and it certainly is not cheap, to obtain the necessary specialist advice. None the less, as the hon. Gentleman rightly said, the risks of not securing protection for intellectual property are enormous and the returns, therefore, from investing in the protection of successful innovation are very large.

There are huge complexities as laws on copyright—generally on intellectual property—are translated from the older economy to the new. It is not always easy for lawyers and courts to see how concepts that were developed for a different world and a different set of technologies translate into the new world. I make that as a general observation and in no sense as a comment on the specific case that the hon. Gentleman raised.

Mr. Nicholls: I am grateful to the Minister for the way in which she is responding. What she has said, particularly at the outset, is helpful, but will she comment on this proposition? In the case to which I referred the protection is already in place and has had to be referred to the American courts. Clearly neither she nor I can contemplate what the outcome of that litigation will be: that is a matter for the courts. We are not discussing the result of the injunction, because it may be refused, but is she as concerned as I am that injunctive relief is outstanding and has not been decided after 10 months? Will she tell her commercial officials that such matters concern her? I refer not to the decision but to the fact that no decision has been made. That must concern her, given the existence of patents.

Ms Hewitt: I have already said that I shall ask commercial officials at the embassy to investigate the matter. I have also asked DTI officials to look into the general issues raised by the case specifically to determine whether the United States is complying fully with its obligation to enforce patents and other intellectual property rights that are set out in the World Trade Organisation agreement on the trade-related aspects of intellectual property. That is the global framework for intellectual property issues and it is essential that all Governments who have signed the agreement abide by it.

It is also important to seek greater international harmonisation of intellectual property rights, because laws differ. They differ between the United States and the United Kingdom. The Government are playing an active role in seeking globalised norms to provide a more appropriate framework for what is increasingly a global and not a national or even regional knowledge-driven economy. We shall participate in the diplomatic conference for the adoption of a patent law treaty being held in Geneva next month. If we can obtain a successful outcome to that diplomatic conference, it will establish international harmonised standards for the procedures to be followed in patent formalities. A number of cases in different parts of the world have raised concerns about the nature of patents and whether they are granted too easily in some cases and not readily enough in others. We need some harmonisation of the procedures involved in patent formalities, which, in turn, will pave the way for more substantive issues of patent law.

The wider issue, which will not be resolved simply through harmonised legal substance or even improved legal procedures, is that, because information and communications technology is moving so fast and because of the intense competitive pressures on companies to innovate quickly, there is a danger that the brilliant idea or innovation of one company or individual will be taken over by a larger, better established, more powerful company. In the end, the answer is not simply to seek proper legal protection for the innovation and the intellectual property that resides in it, but to give away as little as possible and then to maintain constant innovation and investment in research and development. There is no guarantee in such a fast-moving world that a successful innovator will stay ahead of the game. The successful innovator might be lucky and remain ahead of the competition for 18 months or two years, but will then be taken over unless a new wave of innovation is introduced. The danger is that, unless the innovator keeps moving forward, someone else might take the idea or concept and engineer an application solution without having known how the innovator had done that in the first place. That may be done better, or it may not, but the person who gets to the market first will have the advantage. That is a general observation; it is not a specific observation of the AllVoice situation.

That is a problem particularly for small companies and individual innovators who might not even have created a company or taken the idea to market. The problem is how to protect an innovation and secure intellectual property rights, and then how to introduce them and maintain the competitive advantage.

I am grateful to the hon. Member for Teignbridge for raising this important issue.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Marine Accidents Investigation Branch

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much funding was received by the Marine Accidents Investigation Branch in each of the last six years; and if he will make a statement on the resourcing of the Marine Investigation Branch. [116734]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The expenditure of the Marine Accidents Investigation Branch for the last six years has been:

Year	£
1995	866,426
1996–97	913,337
1997–98	1,106,707
1998–99	1,579,266
1999–2000	1,284,218

In 1996 the accounting period changed from the calendar year to the financial year.

The Department keeps the funding of the Marine Accidents Investigation Branch under continuous review. The Department is examining alternative funding arrangements that will take account of the increase in the Branch's use of underwater surveys as a method of investigation.

Packaging Waste

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the timetable for the forthcoming review of the statutory registration fee structure for packaging waste compliance schemes. [117949]

Mr. Meacher: Work on the consultation is close to completion and we anticipate issuing it within the next few weeks.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research has been undertaken on the advantages and disadvantages of volume discounting of statutory fees, following the discount in statutory registration fees received by the largest packaging waste compliance scheme. [117950]

Mr. Meacher: The mechanism for calculating registration fees paid by compliance schemes to the Agencies—the scheme fee mechanism—under the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations was developed to reflect the costs to the Agencies of the functions which they carry out and was introduced following consultation in 1996. Concerns have been expressed to the Department that the assumptions underlying the scheme fee mechanism are not correct. The Department is therefore proposing to issue a consultation paper in which the advantages and disadvantages of different options will be discussed.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations his Department has received on the statutory registration fee structure for packaging waste compliance schemes. [117948]

Mr. Meacher: Following representations from some compliance schemes, the Environment Agency and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency, my Department is preparing a consultation paper on the mechanism used to calculate the registration fees paid by compliance schemes under the Producer Responsibility Obligation (Packaging Waste) Regulations. The paper is being prepared in consultation with the Agencies and is due to be issued in the next few weeks. The Government are required by law to consult before making any changes to the regime. We will provide all interested parties with an opportunity to comment further on the issues involved.

Local Deprivation Index

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the index of local deprivation, indicating the numbers which were (a) in favour of the new proposals, (b) opposed to the new proposals and (c) requested the release of the underlying data used to compile the new index. [117932]

Ms Beverley Hughes: One hundred and twenty-five responses have been received from different areas and different organisations. 89 of these are in favour of the new proposals, 36 are opposed or raise concerns about aspects of the new proposals. 20 areas have requested the release of the underlying data.

RAF East Camp Site, Colindale

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make a decision on the planning issues arising from the RAF east camp site, Colindale. [117842]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Secretary of State's consideration of this case is at an advanced stage and his decision will be issued shortly.

Brent Cross Extension Scheme

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has received the inspector's report on the planning inquiry into the Brent Cross extension scheme; and when he expects to make a decision. [117843]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Secretary of State received the Inspector's report last December and issued his decision on 6 April. I have sent a copy of the decision letter to my hon. Friend.

Disadvantaged Neighbourhoods (Regeneration)

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what encouragement his Department is providing for the regeneration of disadvantaged neighbourhoods. [117869]

Ms Beverley Hughes: A framework version of our national strategy for the regeneration of deprived communities will be published shortly, with a final version emerging later in the year. In the meantime, new ideas, new approaches and existing best practice are already being identified with our New Deal for Communities partnerships, one of which is now forming for the Marsh Farm Estate in Luton, and with other regeneration partnerships across the country.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much was spent on assisting asylum seekers (a) directly and (b) indirectly by local authorities in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999 to date. [117859]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 6 April 2000]: Information concerning local authority direct or indirect expenditure on asylum seekers is not centrally available. Relevant grants paid to local authorities in England by the Department of Health and the Home Office are in the table:

Central Government Asylum Seekers Special Grants to English Local Authorities

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Adults/Families Grant (DH)[1]	9.8	68.0	169.9	[2]7.2
Asylum Seekers Support Grant (HO)	—	—	—	[3]303.9
Unaccompanied Asylum Seeking Children's (UASC) Grant (DH)	3.0	1.6	20.2	52.2

[2] Payments in respect of audited accounts for 1998–99.

[3] This includes £82 million which has not yet been paid to authorities.

Note:

1998–99 and 1999–2000 subject to audit reconciliation.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on average how many people slept on the streets each night in (a) the UK, (b) England and (c) Scotland in the last year for which figures are available. [118226]

Mr. Mullin: On 15 December 1999 the Government published their latest estimate of the number of people sleeping rough in England. This estimate showed that, as at June 1999, there were 1,633 people sleeping rough on any one night, of which 635 were in Greater London. Copies of the estimate are available from the House Libraries.

Responsibility for the Rough Sleepers Initiative in Scotland is a devolved matter. I understand, however, that no such figures are available for Scotland, or on a UK wide basis.

Devon County Council

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from Devon county council concerning the excess spending over standard spending assessment for 2000–01 by the Devon and Cornwall Fire Service; and what response he has made to them. [118504]

Ms Armstrong: Cornwall has its own fire service. Devon has a Combined Fire Authority consisting of representatives from Devon, Plymouth and Torbay. Devon county council's representation on the provisional local government finance settlement for 2000–01 drew attention to the gap between Fire Standard Spending Assessment and the level of spending on the fire service. My officials' reply to the council told them that the Secretary of State would take their comments into consideration before taking his final decisions on the settlement. This he did.

Radiation

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to issue advice to nuclear regulators and operators on the provisions of Euratom Directive 96/29 on radiological protection requiring the calculation of collective doses in respect of practices giving rise to radiation exposures. [117163]

Mr. Meacher: My Department is currently preparing guidance to the Environment Agency on the regulation of radioactive discharges into the environment from nuclear licensed sites. The calculation of collective doses will be one of the issues for consideration during the preparation of that guidance. When the guidance has been completed in draft, it will be issued for public consultation.

National Assembly for Wales

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects his Department to publish a concordat with the Cabinet of the National Assembly for Wales. [118741]

Ms Armstrong: I am pleased to say that we have now reached agreement with the Cabinet of the National Assembly for Wales on the terms of a concordat between us. This has been published today, and copies have been placed in the House Library. The concordat will also be made available in due course on the Department's website.

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with London Underground concerning the possible upgrading of the underground stations serving the new Wembley National Stadium. [118419]

Mr. Hill: Discussions with London Underground are being co-ordinated by the Wembley Task Force as part of their brief to facilitate the regeneration of the stadium area and the wider estate. DETR officials are involved as observers. A scheme to improve Wembley Park station, to serve the new National Stadium, is being prepared by London Underground in close liaison with the Task Force.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with (a) the DCMS, (b) Brent Council, (c) the Wembley Task Force and (d) Wembley National Stadium Ltd. concerning regeneration funding for infrastructure improvement around the new Wembley National Stadium. [118418]

Mr. Hill: Wembley Task Force has been established at the initiative of English Partnerships to facilitate the regeneration of the Stadium area and the wider estate. Membership of the Task Force includes Brent council and Wembley National Stadium Ltd. Officials from DETR and DCMS are also involved. There is close liaison between all the parties involved. The Task Force is preparing a development framework for the area to guide the regeneration strategy and determine the infrastructure improvements required.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the European Commission about rebates to industries which will pay the Climate Change Levy; and if he will make a statement. [118427]

Mr. Meacher: The Climate Change Levy was one of the subjects discussed in a recent meeting with Commissioner Wallstrom. In addition, my officials have had meetings with the European Commission to discuss the UK's state aids notification in respect of the proposed reduction in the Climate Change Levy for companies which deliver significant environmental benefits under the Climate Change Levy Agreements.

Whaling

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to raise the issue of whaling with the Japanese Government at this year's G8 summit in Okinawa. [118361]

Mr. Meacher: We do not believe there is justification for any whaling, other than some subsistence whaling by indigenous people. We would like to see all other forms of whaling ended through a permanent, worldwide ban. We strongly believe that all discussions on whaling should be left to the International Whaling Commission as the primary international body for dealing with the management and conservation of whales, and we firmly support their current moratorium.

The Japanese Government are fully aware of these views. Whaling is regularly raised at official and ministerial meetings with them, and the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), wrote to the Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs in December 1999 to protest at Japan's so-called "scientific whaling" and reiterate the UK's position. The Government have no plans to raise the issue of whaling with them at the G8 summit on 21–23 July. However, as the Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin), explained to the House on 21 March 2000, Official Report, column 167WH, we shall be firmly resisting Japanese attempts to downgrade the protection given to whales both at the CITES Conference of Parties on 10–20 April and at the IWC meeting on 3–6 July.

HEALTH

Correspondence

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter from the right hon. Member for South-West Norfolk of 27 January 2000, regarding the number of intensive care beds at the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital. [117862]

Mr. Milburn: I will let the right hon. Member have a reply shortly.

Cancer Surgery (North-west)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to announce a designated centre for cancer surgery for the north-west. [116751]

Yvette Cooper: The North West Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive is developing three cancer services networks across Merseyside and Cheshire, Lancashire and South Cumbria and Greater Manchester, comprising cancer centres for oncology and their associated cancer units. This is consistent with the approach that has been adopted by the National Cancer Director and is supported by him.

Cancer surgery for common cancers will continue to be carried out in designated local cancer units. Given the complex distribution of surgery for less common and rare cancers within each cancer network, it will not always be appropriate to designate a single hospital within each network for surgery for these cancers. Surgery for the less common and rare cancers in the north-west will be provided in accordance with national guidance, within managed clinical networks which will comprise a cluster of hospitals working with their associated oncology centre. Different hospitals may lead on surgery for specific cancers within this less common and rare group.

This approach was acknowledged in the original Calman/Hine report to be necessary in some parts of the country, and is consistent with that already adopted in other parts of the country.

Waterhouse Report

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 27 March 2000, Official Report, column 60W, for what reasons he was unable to act prior to presentation of the Waterhouse Report to Parliament to extend the Consultancy Index to include people named in that report. [116951]

Mr. Hutton: The Waterhouse Report is over 1,000 pages long and names hundreds of individuals with no easy means of identifying specific individuals and the findings made against them. The conclusions of the Tribunal in relation to each of the individuals named had to be considered with great care by the Wales Office, Department of Health and other Government Departments to ensure that appropriate action was taken in the light of these conclusions. It was also important to establish the legal basis on which the Consultancy Index could be specially extended to include the names of people who had not been referred by their employer. We took immediate and determined action on receipt of the Waterhouse Report to achieve these tasks.

Vacant Doctor Posts

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacant posts there are for doctors; and how many vacant posts there were in each of the last five years. [117211]

Mr. Denham: The Department recruitment, retention and vacancies survey showed 530 medical and dental whole-time equivalent vacancies (excluding training grades) in the hospital and community health services sector in England that had lasted three months or more.

There has only been one recruitment and vacancy survey carried out and there is no historic information available.

Student Nurses

Mr. Tony Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have entered student nurse training in Northamptonshire since May 1997. [117607]

Mr. Denham: The table shows the number of people who have entered nurse training in Northamptonshire since May 1997.

	September 1997	March 1998	September 1998	March 1999	September 1999	March 2000
Adult Nursing	54	50	64	56	75	53
Children's Nursing	0	15	0	20	13	10
Mental Health	15	15	18	17	19	26
Learning Disabilities	8	7	10	10	10	17
Midwifery	20	0	20	0	12	22
Total	97	87	112	103	129	128

A total of 106 nurses have entered "Return to Practice" courses since 1998–99.

Meningitis Vaccinations

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) babies and (b) school children aged 15 to 17 years have been vaccinated with meningococcal group C conjugate vaccine under the current immunisation programme. [117637]

Yvette Cooper: Information on uptake of the new meningococcal Group C conjugate vaccine in babies and in school children aged 15 to 17 years will not be available till later this year, but anecdotal evidence suggests that between 80 and 95 per cent. of 15 to 17-year-olds have been immunised, with uptake in babies even higher.

Breast Screening

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide funding within the allocation for the breast screening service for self-referrals for women above the age of 65 years. [117634]

Yvette Cooper: Funding for the National Health Service Breast Screening Programme is included in health authority allocations and is not separately earmarked. The Forrest report, on which the programme is based, assumed that 10 per cent. of screens would be carried out on women who self-refer. In 1998–99, 88,119 women aged 65 and over were screened within the programme, representing 7.2 per cent. of all screens.

Women aged 65 and over are offered free three yearly screening on request. Women who have already participated in the programme are informed of this entitlement.

NHS Aids

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) walking sticks, (b) wigs, (c) crutches, (d) zimmer frames and (e) other aids were issued to NHS patients in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and how many, and what percentage, were returned to the NHS following the patients' recovery or death. [117605]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department issues on monitoring the suitability of disability equipment after it has been issued. [117830]

Mr. Hutton: In 1998 the Department of Health sponsored the Disabled Living Centres Council to produce 'Community Equipment Services . . . why should we Care?', a guide to good practice in disability equipment services, which was distributed to councils and the NHS. This recommends that there should be effective arrangements to review the suitability of disability equipment after it has been issued. The Department is funding the Council to promote this guidance through conferences and the development of an internet website.

We recognise that review arrangements are often unsatisfactory. Our guidance on Fair Access to Care Services (to be issued for consultation in May) will stress the importance of local authorities reviewing services, including disability equipment to ensure its continued suitability.

Morning-after Pill

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the pilot scheme in the Manchester, Salford and Trafford

Health Action Zone, for provision of the morning-after pill, with the preconditions laid down in Gillick v. West Norfolk and Wisbech area health authority. [118017]

Yvette Cooper: Any young woman, aged under 16, seeking emergency contraception without parental knowledge or consent from one of the pharmacists operating in the pilot must be assessed by the pharmacist in relation to the criteria set out in the Gillick judgment. This covers the young person's understanding, maturity and their best interests including physical and mental health. It is for the pharmacist to use his or her judgment as to whether the criteria are satisfied. If necessary, the pharmacist can seek further advice from a doctor and refer the young person on to specialist contraceptive services.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the pilot scheme in the Manchester, Salford and Trafford Health Action Zone; under which pharmacists provide the morning-after pill to girls under 16 years. [118014]

Yvette Cooper: This scheme is being closely monitored by the Project Steering Group, Manchester, Salford and Trafford Health Authorities along with the Health Action Zone. The North West Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive is being kept fully informed of developments.

In total there are 16 community pharmacies currently participating in this scheme. Nine are from Manchester and the remaining six are from Salford and Trafford.

Therapeutic Cloning

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who is responsible for the appointment of the members of the Chief Medical Officer's Expert Working Group on Therapeutic Cloning. [118015]

Yvette Cooper: Appointments to the Expert Group on Therapeutic Cloning were made by the Chief Medical Officer in consultation with Sir Robert May, the Chief Scientific Adviser, taking into account the guidance paper "Use of Scientific Advice in Policy Making", and after consultation with the Royal Society and Royal Society of Medicine.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which water companies in the United Kingdom add fluoride to water; what notification his Department has received of the reasons why other companies have refused to add fluoride; and what steps are being taken to overcome obstacles to fluoridation. [118006]

Yvette Cooper: Fluoridated water is currently provided by Anglian Water Services Ltd., Northumbrian Water Ltd., North West Water Ltd., Severn Trent Water Ltd. and South Staffordshire Water plc. No water company has acceded to a request from a health authority to fluoridate its water supply since 1985. We understand that the water companies are reluctant to disregard the views of a minority of people opposed to water fluoridation. The National Health Service Centre for Reviews and Dissemination, University of York is undertaking a review into fluoride and health. If it finds that there are significant benefits and no risks we will consider if water companies can be put under an obligation to fluoridate where there is strong local support for doing so.

Dental Services

Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to encourage practising dentists to take part in postgraduate training. [117944]

Mr. Hutton: Dentists practising in the general dental services are already required by their terms of service to take reasonable steps to develop professional knowledge and skills to maintain an up-to-date knowledge of dental science and practice. Principal dentists are entitled to claim postgraduate education allowance for up to two sessions of approved postgraduate activity each year to help meet that requirement. The General Dental Council is to introduce a recertification scheme that will make the continued registration of all dentists dependent upon their regular participation in continuing education. In the first instance, the scheme will be voluntary, but the Council has asked the Department if, in due course, it could be made mandatory by amendment to the Dentists Act 1984. We support the principle of the scheme and will be responding on the detail shortly.

Laming Inquiry

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (1) representations he has received from relatives of victims of Dr. Shipman on the rules under which the Laming Inquiry will be held; and if he will make a statement; [117951]

(2) if relatives of victims giving evidence to the Laming Inquiry will be allowed legal representation. [117952]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 6 April 2000]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received representations from a firm of solicitors, Alexander Harris, representing a number of the relatives and friends of the victims of Dr. Shipman.

The Inquiry was established under the powers of the Secretary of State as defined in section 2 of the NHS Act 1977. A letter from my right hon. Friend addressed to Lord Laming of Tewin detailing the rules under which the Inquiry is to be conducted has been placed in the Library. It is within the gift of the chairman of the Inquiry to determine whether or not those making representations to the Inquiry are legally represented.

It is important that the independent Inquiry offers the relatives of the victims of Harold Shipman, including the relatives of people whose cases may not have been brought to trial, the opportunity to make their views known to the Inquiry. In addition, the Inquiry has now written to the families and friends of all the victims identified by the police, inviting them—within the scope of the Inquiry—to inform the Inquiry of their particular circumstances surrounding the death of their relative or friend.

Waiting Lists (Mid-Essex)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) total number of patients waiting for hospital treatment and (b) number of patients waiting 12 months or more for treatment, in the Mid-Essex Hospital Trust area. [118079]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 April 2000]: The total number of patients waiting and the number of patients waiting over 12 months for hospital treatment at Mid-Essex Hospital Services National Health Service Trust in February 2000 is:

February 2000	Patients
Total waiting	10,416
Number waiting over 12 months	1,060

Health Authority Chief Executives (Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost in the most recent year for which figures are available to the Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth health authority of the employment of its chief executives. [118490]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is provided in the table:

Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth health authority
Authority members remuneration—chief executive 1998–99

Basic salary	76,000
Performance related bonuses	5,000
Pension contributions	6,000
Total remuneration	87,000

Mental Health

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the report entitled, "Improving Care for Detained Patients from Black and Minority Ethnic Communities", by the Sainsbury Centre for Mental Health and University of Central Lancashire. [118416]

Mr. Hutton: We welcome this report, which provides detailed information about the care of black and ethnic minority detained patients and which will help to inform the implementation of the National Service Framework for Mental Health. The report will be given careful consideration.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received on the recommendation of the expert committee set up to review the Mental Health Act 1983 that a statutory right to advocacy be created; [117864]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost of introducing a legal right to an advocate for any person subject to compulsion under the Mental Health Act 1983; [117863]

(3) what research he has commissioned into models of good practice for advocacy schemes following the Review of the Mental Health Act 1983; and if he will make a statement. [117865]

Mr. Hutton: The consultation period on the Green Paper "Reform of the Mental Health Act 1983" ended on 31 March 2000. We have received a large number of responses on a wide range of issues in the Green Paper, including advocacy, which we are currently analysing. We will be undertaking work to determine models of good practice for advocacy in due course and will consider questions of practicality and cost in the light of this work and the responses to the Green Paper consultation.

Food-related Illnesses

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the NHS of treating food-related illnesses for each of the last five years for which figures are available. [118296]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 7 April 2000]: No specific figures are available on the cost to the National Health Service of treating food-related illnesses. As a result of a study in 1994–95, we have a good estimate of the total number of cases of infectious intestinal disease, but it is not possible to say what proportion of this is foodborne. The figures below, based on the study, suggest that the costs to the NHS in England and Wales of treating illness due to the major food poisoning bacteria Salmonella and Campylobacter alone was:

	£ million
1995	22.9
1996	22.6
1997	26.1
1999	27.8

It needs to be stressed, however, that as these figures are not routinely collected, the information is an estimate based on the most recently available figures, and solely on a study undertaken several years ago.

Bed Availability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 351W, concerning bed availability, if the 1998–99 figures are the starting point against which any targets he sets for bed numbers will be measured. [118090]

Mr. Denham: The National Beds Inquiry used 1998–99 data as the basis for projections. No targets have been set. The report of the National Beds Inquiry is out for consultation until 15 May 2000.

Nursing

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements have been made to ensure nurses are represented on the five project areas to modernise the NHS. [117349]

Mr. Denham: I announced membership of the modernisation action teams on Tuesday 4 April. Nurses are well represented on all six groups.

Overseas Ministerial Visits

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the overseas ministerial visits that have taken place since May 1997, indicating the purpose of each visit. [112770]

Ms Stuart [pursuant to her reply, 13 March 2000, c. 62W]: I regret that there was an error in my previous reply.

Between May 1997 and March 2000 Department of Health Ministers have made 44 overseas visits in an official capacity as listed. All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

DEFENCE

Service Accommodation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Army, (b) Navy and (c) RAF officers live in privately-rented accommodation funded by his Department; how much this has cost in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [118060]

Dr. Moonie: It is a condition of service that Service personnel are provided with publicly funded accommodation at or within an appropriate distance from their place of duty. When family and single accommodation is not available, suitable equivalent property is rented from the commercial rental market. Until 1 February 1997, MOD satisfied this requirement in GB through the payment of an allowance to personnel to enable them to find rented accommodation under private arrangements (Excess Rent Allowance for family accommodation and Lodging Allowance for single accommodation). However, with effect from 1 February 1997, MOD established an Accommodation Agency which utilises an MOD contractor to obtain equivalent rented accommodation for Service personnel. This has since superseded the allowance regimes.

As at 31 March 2000, there were 1,943 officers in occupation of rented family and single accommodation in GB. The breakdown by Service is as follows:

	Number
Army	709
Total	1,943

The cost to the Department of providing rented accommodation throughout GB is only available for the last three Financial Years following the formation of the Defence Housing Executive and the MOD Accommodation Agency, and these are summarised in the table. The figures represent the full cost of providing rented accommodation for all ranks since it is not possible to extract the costs for officers alone. Prior to FY 1997–98 costs for Excess Rent Allowance and Lodging Allowance were met by respective budget holders. This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost:

	£ million
Financial year	Total cost per FY
1997–98	44.9
1999–2000[1]	49.8

[1] Estimated

Chinook Helicopters

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the improved actuators were fitted to the RAF Chinook fleet; and if he will make a statement. [118099]

Mr. Spellar: All RAF Chinooks had an improved standard of actuator fitted during conversion to HC Mk2.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the US authorities have determined the cause of the incident involving a US Army Chinook helicopter on 11 April 1997; and if he will make a statement. [118064]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my predecessor gave him on 14 July 1999, Official Report, column 230W, which explained that my Department had evaluated an extract from the US Army investigation report into this incident. However the content of the report, and its conclusions are a matter for the US authorities.

South Africa

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of Her Majesty's armed forces are acting as military advisers in South Africa; if their responsibilities include advice to the Government of Zimbabwe; what terms of reference they have; and if he will place relevant items in the Library. [118294]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 7 April 2000]: A British Military Advisory Training Team (BMATT), currently comprising 16 armed forces personnel, has been providing advice to the South Africans since 1994 on the integration of former statutory and non-statutory forces into the new South African National Defence Force (SANDF). The team helps to validate standards; monitor training; and adjudicate in disputes. Its responsibilities do not include advice to the Government of Zimbabwe. The detail of the terms under which the BMATT operates is subject to a confidential agreement between the UK and South African governments.

General Service Medal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the deployments or campaigns involving British Armed Forces (a) from 1990 to 2000, (b) from 1980 to 1989 and (c) from 1970 to 1979, for which the General Service Medal has been awarded. [118234]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 7 April 2000]: The deployments and campaigns involving British Armed Forces for which a clasp to the General Service Medal 1962 has been awarded are as follows:

(a) 1990 to 2000

Clasp Kuwait for service between 8 March 1991 and 30 September 1991 inclusive.

Clasp Northern Iraq and Southern Turkey for service between 6 April 1991 and 17 July 1991 inclusive.

Clasp Air Operations Iraq for service between 16 July 1991 and a date to be agreed.

(b) 1980 to 1989

Clasp Lebanon for service between 7 February 1983 and 9 March 1984 inclusive.

Clasp Mine Clearance—Gulf of Suez for service between 15 August 1984 and 15 October 1984 inclusive.

Clasp Gulf for service between 17 November 1986 and 31 October 1988 and for continuing Mine Counter Measures Operations within the Gulf between 1 November 1988 and 28 February 1989 inclusive.

(c) 1970 to 1979

Clasp Northern Ireland for service between 14 August 1969 and a date to be agreed.

Clasp Dhofar for service between 1 October 1969 and 30 September 1976 inclusive.

Serle's House

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will enter into negotiations with Hampshire county council on the purchase of the remembrance garden at Serle's House, Winchester. [118367]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 282W, and to the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) on 2 March 2000, Official Report, column 718. I expect to be able to take a final view shortly, once I have been able to consider fully all of the issues involved.

Burma Railway Memorial

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received concerning funding for a memorial on the Burma Railway for British servicemen who lost their lives whilst prisoners of the Japanese during the Second World War; and if he will make a statement. [117938]

Dr. Moonie: My Department has not received any recent representations on this subject. It has been a long-standing policy of successive Governments that the cost of memorials is not usually met from public funds, but from private donations or public subscriptions.

Heavy-lift Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how transport to Saudi Arabia would differ from present arrangements following the purchase of (a) the Antonov 124 and (b) the Boeing C17. [116499]

Dr. Moonie: Currently there are two C-130 and one VC10 resupply flights to Saudi Arabia every week; these flights also serve Kuwait in their schedule. If the Antonov An-124 were employed, it could substitute for the two C-130s, but the VC10 would have to be maintained for passengers. As the C-17 can also carry passengers, only one C-17 flight per week would be necessary to meet the total requirement.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how (a) refuelling and (b) diversion arrangements would differ from those which currently apply, in respect of transport to the Falklands, following the purchase of (i) the Antonov 124 and (ii) the Boeing C17. [116498]

Dr. Moonie: The current six Tristar C2 passenger and one Tristar KC1 freighter flights to the Falkland Islands all refuel at Ascension Island and rely on Rio de Janeiro or Montevideo for their diversions. If the Antonov An-124 or the Boeing C-17 were used in place of the Tristar KC1 freighter, the present refuelling and diversion arrangements would not change.

Iraq

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the targets by type engaged by the Royal Air Force over Iraq in 1999. [117567]

Mr. Hoon: In response to Iraqi threats to coalition aircraft, RAF aircraft took action, in self-defence, against 36 targets in Iraq during 1999. All targets were part of the Iraqi Integrated Air Defence System and included Anti-Aircraft Artillery, Surface-to-Air Missiles and Military Command and Control facilities.

Injunctions

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many injunctions are in force to prevent the publication of materials deemed potentially harmful to the national interest; if he will list the publishers against which injunctions are in force; and if he will list the titles, publications and authors so affected. [117260]

Mr. Spellar: There are nine temporary injunctions currently in force which were applied for by the Ministry of Defence against authors or publishers in relation to the disclosure of material harmful to national security or in breach of confidentiality obligations owed to the MOD. I am withholding further information under exemptions 4 and 14 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

British Irish Rights Watch

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will summarise the principal arguments he has advanced in response to the submission of British Irish Rights Watch to the United Nations Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression concerning allegations made by Mr. Martin Ingram; and if he will place a copy of his full response in the Library. [117261]

Mr. Spellar: The Government have not seen any submission from British Irish Rights Watch to the United Nations Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression, and therefore have not prepared a response.

Sectarian Harassment Policy (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library (a) the Northern Ireland Sectarian Harassment Policy and Guidelines and (b) Standing Orders of the General Service Battalion of the RIR (i) prohibiting a display of paramilitary insignia and emblems, (ii) on sectarian harassment and procedures and (iii) on improper retention of photographic or other material to which access is granted in the course of official duties. [117265]

Mr. Spellar: I have made arrangements for copies of the text of the documents to be placed in the Library of the House.

TREASURY

Youth Unemployment

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the figures underlying Chart 3, on long-term youth unemployment, in the Treasury paper "The Goal of Full Employment: Employment Opportunities for all Throughout Britain", published in February. [116852]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 4 April 2000]: The figures refer to those aged 18–24 claimant unemployed for six months or longer. Since the data are not seasonally adjusted a moving average over one year was taken to smooth out seasonality. Prior to 1995 data are available only quarterly and missing months were estimated by interpolation. The figures for December, being representative of each year, are shown in the table.

Long-term youth unemployment[1]

Year	Number
1979	114,864
1980	146,645
1981	327,438
1982	453,931
1983	486,239
1984	525,466
1985	527,531
1986	483,810
1987	398,838
1988	283,460
1989	193,960
1990	159,035
1991	238,320
1992	340,254
1993	370,381
1994	323,078

Long-term youth unemployment[1]

Year	Number
1995	270,308
1996	229,548
1997	146,793
1999	58,651

[1] Those aged 18–24 claimant unemployed for six months or more. Figures refer to the average over the previous 12 months of non-seasonally adjusted data in December for each year.

Genetic Testing

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what role he plans for the Financial Services Ombudsman in the regulation of the use of genetic information by the insurance industry. [116567]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Financial Services Authority has recently consulted on this subject and will decide on its policy shortly.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Human Rights Legislation

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the number of additional court cases which will be brought in England and Wales (a) in the year to October 2001 and (b) subsequently in each year, as a result of the coming into force of provisions of the Human Rights Act 1998 in October 2000; what the cost to public funds and the amount of court time taken up will be in (i) the High Court, (ii) the Court of Appeal and (iii) the House of Lords; and what discussions he has had with the Scottish Executive regarding the operation of human rights legislation in Scotland. [118544]

Jane Kennedy: The Government anticipate that the vast majority of human rights points will be raised in existing cases, rather than new cases, save for applications for leave to move for Judicial Review which may rise from the 300 received in 1998 to 600 per year. We expect a significant number of human rights points to be raised in the months following implementation but it is anticipated that the level of challenges will reduce subsequently as the higher courts determine the basis on which the Act and Convention are to be applied.

The Government have made annual provision for the overall costs of implementing the Human Rights Act in the courts—£60 million, including £39 million for legal aid. In addition, £4.5 million has been set aside to ensure that all full and part-time judges, lay magistrates and their legal advisers are trained to deal with Convention points effectively, which should reduce the impact on court time.

On an annual basis, the High Court and Court of Appeal estimate that 2,300 to 2,800 extra sitting days would be required as a direct result of Human Rights Act cases, but the need for additional sittings will, in part, be offset by other changes in workload.

Officials in my Department have been, and remain, in contact with officials of the Scottish Executive to benefit from an understanding of how their business has been affected by human rights litigation.

PRIME MINISTER

Downing Street Records

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister in what form records are kept of persons visiting 10 Downing Street for meetings (a) with him and (b) with officials; and for how long such records have been maintained. [116924]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 3 April 2000]: There is no requirement for this information to be kept. Since February 1998 a visitor notification system has been kept for operational purposes of persons visiting 10 Downing Street. I have continued the practice of previous Prime Ministers of keeping an official diary which includes the names of my visitors. This is deposited in due course in the Public Record Office.

Press Office

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what was the reason for his Press Officer's attendance at the 27 March Conference in Portsmouth on promoting Europe; and if he will deposit a copy of the Press Officer's speech in the Library. [118023]

The Prime Minister: No member of staff from my Office attended the Council of Europe Parliamentary and Public Relations Committee visit to Portsmouth from 25–28 March.

Strategic Communications Unit

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the total cost so far of the Strategic Communications Unit, broken down by (a) salaries, (b) capital equipment and (c) other costs. [108898]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 February 2000]: Expenditure for the Strategic Communications Unit (SCU) was £77,633 in 1997–98 (during which year the SCU was only functioning for approximately three months) and £716,672 in 1998–99. The budget for 1999–2000 is £839,440. The rise between expenditure in 1998–99 and the budget for 1999–2000 is principally due to the additional costs of the re-design and re-launch of the No. 10 internet site which included the replacement of outdated computer equipment and the creation of two additional established Civil Service posts. Savings have of course been made in other departments as a result of the transfer of work to the SCU and its role in providing consultancy services to departments which are not reflected in these figures.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mr. M. R. Bacon of Thanet will receive his Winter Fuel Payment. [118216]

Angela Eagle: We are unable to trace any record for Mr. Bacon without further information.

Deportees

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will introduce legislation to treat people who are deported to the UK as being habitually resident in the UK. [118799]

Mr. Bayley: We have today laid regulations that will automatically treat deportees, who may not otherwise be covered, as being habitually resident in the United Kingdom for the purposes of Income Support, income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action is being taken by his Department to monitor the quality of advice given by SEMA Medical Service doctors about the awarding of Incapacity Benefit on the basis of scrutiny of documents without commissioning a medical examination. [118800]

Mr. Bayley: In February 1999, new guidelines for doctors undertaking scrutiny were produced by SEMA Medical Services and the Department's Chief Medical Adviser.

A recent survey by the Department's Medical Policy Group has shown that some Medical Services doctors are not following the scrutiny guidelines which means that some Incapacity Benefit awards may have been made incorrectly.

The Benefits Agency has written to SEMA Group's Director of Medical Services to instruct Medical Services to take corrective action immediately to ensure compliance with the medical quality standards specified in the contract.

SEMA has also been informed that the Department's Chief Medical Adviser will be carrying out further audits of the scrutiny process, to ensure that advice to award Incapacity Benefit on the basis of scrutiny, without medical examination, is given only where there is sufficient medical evidence already on file to justify it.

In addition, the Chief Medical Adviser's Medical Quality Surveillance Group is making arrangements for a joint audit, with Medical Services, of the standard of each individual doctor undertaking scrutiny. This exercise will begin next month.

Medical Services, through their own medical quality monitoring procedures, already identified some doctors who are not following the scrutiny guidelines and have instituted remedial training for them.

Personal Capacity Assessment

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on progress with the pilots for Personal Capacity Assessment. [118242]

Mr. Bayley: The Personal Capability Assessment replaced the All Work Test on 3 April. From that date, and initially only for people in the 12 ONE pilot areas, the examining doctor will produce not only a report on the claimant's incapacity, to inform the decision on benefit entitlement, but also a separate "capability report" with advice on what the person can do despite their medical condition and about assistance, such as workplace adaptations, that may enable them to work. These reports will be used by Personal Advisers to help claimants who want to plan a return to work. The new process is still at a very early stage but some feedback is available from the initial voluntary pilots that began last December, where claimants who wished to participate had a Capability Report prepared. The early indications are that the information in the reports is helpful to claimants and their Personal Advisers.

Family Statistics

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many adults living in poverty are (a) unmarried mothers and (b) divorced women. [117569]

Mr. Bayley: Poverty is a multi-dimensional problem which cannot be defined solely on the basis of a particular level of income. One indicator which may be used, however, is whether the income of the household is below 60 per cent. of median. The following table provides this information for unmarried and divorced women.

Number of unmarried mothers and divorced women living in households below 60 per cent. of median income, 1997–98

Million

	Before housing costs	After housing costs
Unmarried mothers	0.3	0.5
Divorced women with children	0.2	0.3
Divorced women without children	0.1	0.2

Notes:

1. All estimates are subject to sampling error or response biases.
2. Estimates of household income are presented both before and after housing costs in line with HBAI conventions.

Source:

Households Below Average Income (HBAI). Figures are drawn from the Family Resources Survey.

We are determined to tackle poverty and its causes. Work is the best route out of poverty. That is why we have introduced Welfare to Work programmes such as the ONE pilots and New Deals to advise all groups of working age people, including unmarried mothers and divorced women, about the options available to them and to help them into work. And through the introduction of the National Minimum Wage and tax and benefit reforms we are making sure that work pays. These programmes are working, producing results. For example, up to December 1999, 103,000 lone parents had volunteered to participate in the New Deal for Lone Parents and 35,000 had found work.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many divorced women without dependent children were in receipt of social security benefits in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1999; and what was the cost of such benefits in each of those years. [117532]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available.

The Department does not routinely collect information on the marital status of benefit recipients.

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117808]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested as records are held for two years only. Such information as is available is as follows.

As at 1 April 2000, this Department employed 111 Lawyers and in addition has seven Legal Trainees.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he plans to use local authority Housing Benefit data in order to identify pensioners who should receive letters as part of his Minimum Income Guarantee take-up campaign. [117871]

Mr. Bayley: As part of the Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG) take-up campaign we will be writing to around two million pensioners whom our records suggest are most likely to have underlying entitlement. This targeted group will be pensioners who our pension records suggest have incomes below the MIG level. We will also be using information from other available sources including Housing Benefit data.

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his oral statement of 27 March 2000, Official Report, column 47, concerning the number of people who will benefit from stakeholder pensions, if he will set out the basis for the figure of five million. [118223]

Mr. Rooker: Our estimate of the target group of five million people for stakeholder pension schemes is based on the number of people earning between around £10,000 and £20,000 who are not in an occupational pension scheme. Some of those initially in this group will have personal pensions and will therefore be unlikely to take up stakeholder pensions when they are first introduced. But the majority are making no personal contributions to a private pension scheme.

People outside this target group will also benefit from stakeholder pension schemes. We expect that some people on higher earnings will want to join a stakeholder scheme and our decision to relax the rules linking earnings and pension contributions will mean that, for example, carers, women taking breaks from work, students and children will also be able to contribute.

The number of people actually taking out a stakeholder pension scheme will depend on how stakeholder and other pensions are marketed by providers, and on individual choices by savers.

Organophosphates

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims have been allowed for Disability Living Allowance to persons suffering from the toxic effects of the use of organophosphates in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [118400]

Mr. Bayley: This information is not available. Entitlement to Disability Living Allowance is based on the effects of disability on a person's care and mobility needs. The Department does not seek information about what has caused claimants' disabilities.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the impact on benefit payments in the next financial year of a single minimum wage for all age groups of (a) £4.00 per hour, (b) £4.20 per hour and (c) £4.50 per hour. [108674]

Angela Eagle [pursuant to her reply, 8 February 2000, c. 131W]: The information is in the table.

Estimated savings in 2000–01 on benefit payments of a National Minimum Wage of £4.00, £4.20 and £4.50

£ million

	£4.00	£4.20	£4.50
Income Support/JSA (IB)	−30	−50	−70
Housing Benefit	−50	−70	−100
Council Tax Benefit	−10	−15	−20
Total	−90	−135	−195

Notes:

1. Estimates based on 1996–97 Family Resources Survey data, uprated to 2000–01 prices and benefit rates.

2. Estimates rounded to the nearest £5 million. Totals may not sum due to rounding.

3. Estimates assume no secondary effects on employment or wages.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of the Debt Accounting and Management System for Housing Benefit; and when was the installation cancelled. [118208]

Angela Eagle: Administration of benefits and recovery of overpayments are a matter for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. He will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 7 April 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent question asking what was the cost of the Debt Accounting and Management System for housing benefit; and when the installation was cancelled.

The Debt Accounting and Management System (DAMS) was to provide integrated debt management and accounting capability for the Benefits Agency's programme debt. Housing Benefit is administered by local authorities and therefore was not part of the DAMS development.

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South will receive a reply to his letter of 8 November 1999 (Reference: C/ST/5638/RB/BHD). [117820]

Angela Eagle: A reply was sent on 3 December 1999.

Hospital Downrating

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have had their state pensions reduced as a result of hospital downrating; and what the total benefit savings were in (i) 1979, (ii) 1984, (iii) 1989, (iv) 1994 and (v) 1999. [117872]

Mr. Rooker: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

It is estimated that in 1999, the total reduction in benefit as a result of downrating was £60 million (to nearest £10 million). Figures for the earlier years are not available.

The number of people whose state pensions were reduced by hospital downrating on a specific date during each of the requested years

Thousand

Date	All cases
30 November 1979	90
31 March 1984	85
31 March 1989	66
31 March 1994	39
31 March 1999	32

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand
2. The benefit savings estimate assumes a constant stock of pensioner in-patients throughout the year

Disabled People

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what publicity he has given to recent changes in the Linking Rules for benefit for disabled people. [118241]

Mr. Bayley: In October 1998 we extended the linking period from eight weeks to 52 weeks for people leaving incapacity benefits to start work or training. Everyone who can gain from the protection is sent details about it. Details about the rule also appear in the appropriate Benefits Agency leaflets and guidance. In addition we have worked with some of the main welfare rights organisations to produce and promote guidance on the rules.

State Pensions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who became eligible for the basic state pension in December 1999 and January 2000 experienced a delay in obtaining their first pension payment. [118320]

Mr. Rooker: The number of people eligible to receive their basic pensions in December 1999 and January 2000 but who did not receive payment by their first pension pay day is not known and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

It is known, however, that some 37,000 claims were received in December, and 59,000 in January. Most of these people would not be eligible to receive their pension in those months, because Retirement Pension can be claimed up to four months in advance of the date pension is payable.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tourism and Culture (North-east)

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to promote tourism and culture opportunities in the North-east. [117942]

Janet Anderson: The Northumbria Tourist Board (NTB) will receive £340,687 for tourism projects in the region from the English Tourism Council in 2000–01—an increase of 31 per cent. on the current year. These projects include the development of information and communications technology to improve regional competitiveness and deliver added value for tourism businesses, which will help promote tourism throughout the North-east. The region, in common with all parts of England, also benefits from the promotion work of the British Tourist Authority (BTA), which promotes Britain as a visitor destination in overseas markets. The BTA is receiving £37 million from my Department this year.

Tourism and culture in the North-east have also benefited, both directly and indirectly, from the National Lottery (3,083 projects in the region have received awards totalling £334,087,674 according to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport's National Lottery Awards Database which uses information supplied by the distributing bodies).

We have also established Regional Cultural Consortiums in each of the regions in England to champion the whole spectrum of cultural and creative interests, including tourism. The consortium for the North-east met for the first time in December last year. It is currently preparing a regional cultural strategy which will be seeking to identify the key tourism and cultural opportunities and priorities. Regional Development Agencies are also a key part of Government's commitment to regional development. My Department has sought to ensure, in consultation with One North East, the RDA for the North-east, that the contribution that tourism and culture can make to the regional economy is fully acknowledged in the economic strategy.

London Hotels

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will estimate the average percentage increase in hotel room rates in Central London between March 1994 and March 2000. [117520]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 5 April 2000]: The Government do not research and estimate average hotel room rates. However, I understand the information is available from travel and tourism consultancy firms.

Euro

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the effect membership of the euro would have on (a) the domestic tourism industry and (b) overseas visitors to the United Kingdom. [117927]

Janet Anderson: It is difficult to predict trends in visitor numbers and expenditure by tourists one year ahead, and we would be unwise to try to do so for the next decade. We are not able to forecast the possible effects of exchange rates on the tourism industry in or out of the euro zone in this way.

We are working hard, however, to ensure that tourism businesses in the UK are fully informed about the euro and the introduction of euro currency. My Department chairs a working group which seeks to raise awareness of the impact of the euro on tourism businesses and to disseminate information to the industry.

Resorts Taskforce

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if the Resorts Taskforce will report on (a) health and safety, (b) employment, (c) environmental and (d) other regulations as they affect hotels and guest houses in seaside resorts; [117928]

(2) if the Resorts Taskforce will report on the effects of the six bed rule on small hotels and bed and breakfast establishments; [117921]

(3) if the Resorts Taskforce will report on the effects of UK (a) membership and (b) non-membership of the euro on (i) domestic tourism and (ii) foreign visitors to the UK; [117933]

(4) if the Resorts Taskforce will report on the effects of VAT rates on accommodation (a) in the UK and (b) in the UK's European competitors; [117934]

(5) if the Resorts Taskforce will report on the deregulation of dry rooms in licensed hotels. [117935]

Janet Anderson: The Resorts Taskforce has not been set up specifically to consider any of the above points, many of which apply more widely than just to resorts. However, I will draw them to the attention of the Taskforce chairman, Peter Moore, who is a board member of the English Tourism Council (ETC).

The Resorts Taskforce was set up by the ETC in response to "Tomorrow's Tourism", which sets out the regeneration of our traditional resorts as one of its 15 key action points. The Taskforce's remit is to suggest ways in which resorts can be repackaged for tourism purposes and to highlight examples of best practice in successful resort regeneration for tourism. In order to produce its report it will consider a range of issues, including the history of resorts, the problems they face now, other matters affecting them and possible solutions based on existing best practice and new ideas.

Tourism

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact of the value of the pound on the (a) domestic tourism industry and (b) number of overseas visitors to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [117936]

Janet Anderson: UK residents spent 16 per cent. more and took 19 per cent. more trips within the UK in 1999 compared with 1998, according to the UK Tourism Survey. I am advised by the British Tourist Authority (BTA) that a strong economy and lower unemployment levels are likely to be among the factors which have been encouraging UK residents to take more holidays in Britain as well as abroad.

The number of overseas visitors to the UK in 1999 was the second highest on record, according to International Passenger Survey estimates. While sterling appreciated more substantially against the euro than it did against the US dollar, the number of visitors from North America and Western Europe remained about the same as in 1998. The value of sterling is one of many factors that overseas visitors take into account when deciding whether to visit Britain.

Digital Radio

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects digital radio to reach (a) 90 per cent., (b) 95 per cent. and (c) 100 per cent. of the UK population. [118194]

Janet Anderson: I understand from the BBC and the Radio Authority estimates, that national BBC services and the commercial services broadcast by Digital One each presently reach over 60 per cent. of the UK population. I also understand from the Radio Authority that Digital One plans to extend its services to over 85 per cent. over the next two years. Digital radio is at an early stage and plans for the further expansion of the national networks have yet to be developed.

National Lottery

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much money has been awarded in National Lottery grants to finance CCTV schemes (a) nationally and (b) in Gloucestershire; and if he will make a statement. [118214]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 7 April 2000]: Where Lottery funds are used to fund CCTV, CCTV is usually an element of a larger scheme. It is therefore not possible to identify separately how much Lottery money has been used to finance CCTV except at disproportionate cost.

My Department's National Lottery Awards Database shows only one award of £5,000 exclusively for CCTV. This award was not in Gloucestershire.

Museum Charges

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds, in the case of each of the national museums which currently charge adult entry fees, of reducing the entry fee to £1. [118257]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 7 April 2000]: The overall cost is currently estimated at £7.1 million in 2001–02. Detailed allocations are subject to discussion with individual institutions.

Digital Television

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action he is taking to ensure that communal aerials in social housing are upgraded to enable the tenants to purchase and use digital television and receive an adequate digital signal. [117585]

Janet Anderson: The installation of domestic television aerials is a matter for those responsible for individual properties. I appreciate that many consumers rely on shared aerial systems, over which they have no direct control. My officials are in touch with the ITC, the BBC, and the digital broadcasters to ensure that this does not present a significant obstacle to those consumers having access to digital television. I understand that many homes with shared aerial systems can obtain satisfactory reception of digital television using their existing receiving equipment. Where upgrades are required, I would encourage tenants or landlords to approach the digital broadcasters, the ITC or the BBC who can advise on how to achieve this in the most cost-effective manner.

Charleroi Stadium

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received regarding the suitability of the Charleroi Stadium for hosting the England v Germany football international. [117242]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 3 April 2000]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Sport has received one representation on this subject, a letter from BBC Production.

National Athletics Stadium

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with Sport England about the development of a major athletics facility at Picketts Lock. [118115]

Kate Hoey: The Government have given no financial help or guarantees to UK Athletics to date. However, the Picketts Lock project is still at its very early stages and my officials remain in close contact with UK Athletics and Sport England to offer what non-financial assistance they can in taking forward the project.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what undertakings he gave to the International Amateur Athletics Federation about the development of an athletics stadium at Picketts Lock, Enfield, as a suitable venue for the World Athletics Championships 2005; and if he will make a statement. [118119]

Kate Hoey: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State assured the IAAF that the Government would ensure that a suitable London stadium would be ready to stage the World Athletics Championships in 2005.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what undertakings he has received from Sport England on the availability of Lottery funding to finance the proposed athletics facility at Picketts Lock. [118118]

Kate Hoey: None. Sport England will assess any application for Lottery funds related to any athletics facility at Picketts Lock on its merits. However, Sport England are fully supportive of UK Athletics successful bid for the 2005 championships and have already given UK Athletics an in principle agreement to contribute £15 million towards event costs which was included in UK Athletics outline bid submitted to the IAAF.

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116763]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The number of workplace car parking spaces available at buildings used and controlled by my Department is 14. We have prepared a travel plan for all our key buildings in line with the commitment set out in the Transport White Paper and have reviewed the scope for reducing our car parking requirements in that context.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Compensation Claims

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the total payments made to date to each firm of solicitors in Yorkshire involved in the compensation claims for (a) chest disease and (b) vibration white finger. [118197]

Mrs. Liddell: Payments to firms in Yorkshire to date are as follows:

Anti-bribery Convention

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the OECD's Anti-bribery Convention. [118101]

Mr. Caborn: The Government strongly support the OECD Convention on Combating the Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions. We played a leading role in the negotiations of the Convention and were among the first countries to ratify it. We have played a full part in the peer review process associated with the Convention. The Government are not, however, complacent. The Home Office will publish in May the Government's proposals aimed at modernising the existing legislation, with a view to introducing new legislation as soon as possible thereafter.

Hydropower

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what discussions he has had recently with the Environment Agency over its policy of finding suitable mill sites for the generation of hydropower; [117428]

(2) what role he plays in providing suitable mill sites for the generation of hydropower in co-operation with the Environment Agency. [117630]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 6 April 2000]: Our new policy to encourage the development of renewable energy, including new hydropower installations, was published as "New and Renewable Energy: Prospects for the 21st Century: Conclusions in Response to the Consultation" on 1 February. The Environment Agency was among the bodies consulted in the formulation of our policy.

The Government have adopted a new strategic approach to renewable energy from the regional level downwards. We intend that regional sustainable development frameworks will include regional targets for renewable energy provision, based on assessments covering all relevant renewable technologies. In turn, this will assist regional planning bodies in defining broad locations for renewable energy development and setting criteria for site selection. In dealing with applications for new hydropower installations, the Environment Agency will need to balance potential wider environmental benefits against any local interest.

EC Treaties

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the trade treaties that have been negotiated and signed on behalf of the United Kingdom by the European Community. [117580]

Mr. Caborn: Over three hundred agreements on trade and trade-related matters have been signed by the European Community/European Union since 1972. Most cover matters exclusively within the EU's competence which are applicable to the UK and other member states. Full details are available on the website of the European Council at http://db.consilium.eu.int/accords.

Among the most recent agreements are:

Agreement between the European Community and Australia amending the Agreement on trade in wine (February 2000)

Agreement between the European Coal and Steel Community and the Government of the Republic of Kazakhstan on trade in certain steel products (December 1999)

Agreement between the European Community and the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia on trade in textile products (December 1999)

Exchange of Letters concerning the amendment to the Annexes to the Agreement between the European Community and New Zealand on sanitary measures applicable to trade in live animals and animal products (October 1999)

Agreement on Trade, Development and Co-operation between the European Community and its member states, of the one part, and the Republic of South Africa, on the other part (October 1999)

Protocol adjusting trade aspects of the Europe Agreement establishing an association between the European Communities and their member states, of the one part, and the Republic of Latvia, on the other part, to take account of the accession of the Republic of Austria, the Republic of Finland and the Kingdom of Sweden to the European Union and the outcome of the Uruguay Round negotiations on agriculture, including improvements to the existing preferential arrangements (June 1999).

End of Life Vehicle Directive

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his assessment of the cost implications for the United Kingdom car manufacturing industry of the proposed End of Life Vehicle Directive; and if he will make a statement. [117336]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for South Dorset (Mr. Bruce) on 21 February 2000, Official Report, column 715W.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Government support the amendment proposed by the European Parliament to exclude historic cars from the End of Life Vehicle Directive; and if he will make a statement. [117337]

Ms Hewitt: Vehicles will be affected by this Directive only when they become waste as defined under existing legislation—in other words, only when the owners have decided to discard them. For this reason, amendments to the Directive designed to exempt 'historic' vehicles are unnecessary. However, the UK has made it clear that we would have no difficulty with amendments designed to clarify the situation, provided that suitable wording can be found.

Ofgem

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what authority the proposed Ofgem regulator has to consult on and prepare a carbon dioxide reduction plan for the industry. [117771]

Mrs. Liddell: The Gas and Electricity Markets Authority which will be established under the Utilities Bill will have power to do anything calculated to facilitate the performance of its functions under the Electricity and Gas Acts. The Authority's primary focus under the Acts is economic regulation. The Acts will also require the Regulator to take account of guidance on social and environmental matters issued by Government. A draft of such guidance is currently the subject of consultation.

In its Plan and Budget for 2000–01, Ofgem mentioned that it would develop an Environmental Action Plan. This plan will, for example, identify any barriers to fair access for renewable generation and combined heat and power (CHP) to the electricity market as a contribution to meeting government targets for renewable and CHP production.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much of the non-fossil fuel obligation income for renewable energy support remains unspent in terms of (a) income not yet spent or allocated to a non-fossil fuel obligation project and (b) income allocated to a non-fossil fuel obligation project but not yet taken up by the project sponsors; and if he will make a statement in respect of unspent and unallocated non-fossil fuel obligation income to support the development of renewable energy. [117706]

Mrs. Liddell: Receipts from the Fossil Fuel Levy can be used only for expenditure on the above market cost of electricity generated under contracts entered into as a consequence of non-fossil fuel obligations (NFFO) and the related administrative costs of the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets (Ofgem) and their agents. The surplus of receipts over expenditure is currently about £70 million. Expenditure on electricity contracted under the third, fourth and fifth non-fossil fuel obligations (NFFO-3, 4 & 5) for renewables is estimated to be £42 million in financial year 1999–2000. This figure is expected to rise to £60-£80 million next year and peak in 2003–04 as more projects commission and generate. Expenditure is likely to continue until November 2018 when the last contract ends. In the event that Fossil Fuel Levy receipts fail to cover NFFO expenditure generators might not be paid. The surplus is maintained at a level intended to guard against rapid and unexpected falls in electricity prices that would reduce levy receipts and increase NFFO expenditure.

Lawyers

Mr. Iestyn Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117807]

Mr. Byers: The Department employed 105 lawyers as at 31 March 2000.

The number of lawyers who were employed at 31 March in 1995 was 97.

North-east Economy

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to attract more business and industry to the North-east. [117941]

Mr. Caborn: A stable economic climate is vital to stimulate development. DTI policies are aimed to create an environment where new investment is attracted, business can thrive and jobs can be created. To achieve that nationally we have:

Announced a new Enterprise Grant Scheme for SMEs;

Created a £180 million Enterprise Fund to provide both debt and equity finance to UK SMEs with growth potential;

Set up the Small Business Service to provide a strong voice for small business at the heart of Government; and Created new Regional Venture Capital Funds to support growing businesses in England.

To bring a more specific regional focus, we established eight regional development agencies. They bring together the regional work of DTI, DfEE and DETR on regeneration, rural development, competitiveness and skills and training. They are the lead bodies in the regions for inward investment activity and supply chain work.

In the North-east, the regional development agency, One NorthEast, have published their Regional Economic Strategy. Their vision is that by 2010, the North-east of England will be a vibrant, self-reliant and outward looking region, with the aspiration, ambition and confidence to unlock the potential of all its people. They are working with all of their regional partners to ensure there are sites, premises and the necessary work skills available to ensure the North-east region remains an attractive location for inward investors.

Rover

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the information provided to his Department between 1 November and 29 March by (a) BMW and (b) Rover. [117555]

Mr. Byers: The release of this information is a matter for BMW and Rover. Information provided by the Group was received "in confidence"—often being of a highly market sensitive nature. It would therefore be inappropriate for me to divulge the details.

I have however lodged in the House of Commons Library documents covering my correspondence and telephone conversations between Professor Milberg (BMW AG) and Professor Samann (Rover Group) from December 1999 to the date of BMW's announcement to sell elements of the Rover Group.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what monitoring was carried out by his Department to ensure that the agreed recovery plan for Rover based on the grant of £152 million was proceeding on schedule. [R] [118067]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 7 April 2000]: The start of the R30 project depended upon approval of the grant offer by the EU Competition authorities.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was expected to be the change on the profit and loss account at the time of the announcement by BMW of withdrawal from Rover against the profit and loss account position on which he based his decision to provide a £152 million grant; [R] [118065]

(2) what was expected to be the estimated position on the profit and loss account of Rover at the announcement of sale by BMW against the position on which he based his decision to provide a £152 million grant. [R] [118066]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 7 April 2000]: The application for Government RSA support for the R30 project at Longbridge was made in March 1999. Rover's losses in 1998 amounted to £642 million. This was the figure on which the grant decision was based.

BMW's announcement that they were withdrawing from Rover coincided with the announcement of the 1999 results. Rover's losses for 1999 were £750 million.

Assisted Areas Map

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the minimum size of area required for inclusion in a regional aid map. [116594]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 28 March 2000]: Under the Commission guidelines, areas must have a minimum population of 100,000.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has had a reply from the European Commission about the regional aid map he has sent it. [116593]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 28 March 2000]: Yes.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what geographical units have been used for selecting the areas on the new regional aid map. [116596]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 28 March 2000]: Our proposals for the new Assisted Areas map are based on an aggregation of wards.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current state of the discussions with the European Commission on the new Assisted Areas Map. [118734]

Mr. Caborn: The Government's proposals for new Assisted Areas were published in the booklet, "The Government's Proposals for New Assisted Areas", on 15 July 1999. A copy of the proposals was placed in the Library. The proposals were submitted to the European Commission for approval as required by Community law.

The European Commission have informed us that the proposals published in July cannot be accepted. They have stated that the proposals, as drafted, would give the United Kingdom an unfair advantage against other member states. The Commission have further stated that if revised proposals are not submitted, they will begin a procedure under Article 88(2) of the EC Treaty. Such a procedure could delay agreement on the new Assisted Areas for up to six months.

In light of this situation and the damage that would be caused by an extended delay in the approval of the new Assisted Areas, the Government intend to submit revised proposals to meet the Commission's concerns. The amendments to the July proposals are being published today in the booklet "Amendments to the Government's Proposals for New Assisted Areas". A copy of the booklet is being distributed to each Member and a copy will be placed in the Library. There will be a three week consultation period on the amendments.

Mobile Phones

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the Consumers Association findings on the radiation risks of hands-free mobile phone connections and shields; and if he will make a statement. [118009]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 6 April 2000]: The findings of the Consumers Association will be assessed by the Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones which is expected to report in May. The Department has also passed to the Expert Group independent reports of measurements it had undertaken of shielding devices.

The Department has not undertaken independent testing of hands-free devices. I have accordingly requested that further independent testing of these devices be undertaken. The results of the tests will be published.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications have been made to the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme; and how many of these applications were successful. [117875]

Ms Hewitt: Although the final figures for the financial year 1999–2000 are not yet available, the number of new applications for guarantees received by the DTI from approved lenders is estimated at 4,496, of which an estimated 4,291 will have resulted in guaranteed loans. Since the Scheme started in June 1981 over 71,000 loans have been guaranteed. Historic data on the total number of applications received are not available.

The Department records only applications received from approved lenders where the lender is willing to lend. No information is available on the number of business proposals rejected by lenders on commercial grounds.

BNFL

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what objectives he has set for the new senior management of BNFL; if he will make a statement on his plans to monitor its fulfillment of the objectives on each of its operating sites; and if he will make a statement. [117631]

Mrs. Liddell: As shareholder, we have made clear to the new Chairman and Chief Executive that substantial changes are needed in the way in which BNFL manages and runs its business. The Chairman is conducting a fundamental review of management and the Chief Executive is looking at the company with a fresh perspective. Our joint aim is to ensure that the company is able to meet the very real challenges it faces with its customers, the regulators, and others, and can emerge strengthened and able to play its role as a major global nuclear company. We are determined to build on the relationship that has been developed with the company during the PPP process. We will be considering with them their new Corporate Plan on which they are currently working and will ensure that the performance targets set for the company continue to be rigorous, demanding and regularly monitored.

Motor Industry

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to publish the Competition Commission report on the supply of new motor cars within the United Kingdom. [118704]

Mr. Byers: I have published the report and my response today. I have announced new proposals to bring more competition to the supply of new cars and so help reduce prices.

The Competition Commission found that prices in the UK have been between 10–12 per cent. higher than in similar countries in Europe. This is despite the fact that two-thirds of the cars sold in the UK are imported. They conclude that private car buyers are paying about 10 per cent. too much—or £1,100—for the average car, after taking account of discounts, trade-ins and finance deals.

The Director General of Fair Trading estimates that the annual cost to private car purchasers could be around £1 billion a year as a result of the present system.

In my view the findings of the Competition Commission report cannot be ignored. They represent a clear and unambiguous call for change which requires a positive response.

For many private buyers, a car is the second most expensive purchase of their lives. This report confirms what many people have thought was the case—that in Britain we are paying over the odds for new cars. The reason for this is that the market is not operating as competitively as it should.

I will be introducing measures to bring about greater competition in the supply and selling of new cars which should mean lower prices and increased sales. These measures should restore consumer confidence and bring certainty to the car market.

The Competition Commission has identified a number of ways in which this market fails to function properly. It recommends substantial changes to the distribution of new cars—particularly in the relationship between manufacturers and dealers.

To make the market more competitive, I am taking the immediate steps recommended by the Competition Commission and the Director General of Fair Trading. As the Consumers' Association said in its evidence to the Competition Commission, steps such as insisting dealers are offered the same bulk discounts as fleet customers should make this market function more fairly and put downward pressure on prices.

These immediate remedies will be imposed by Order under the Fair Trading Act 1973. I have published a notice of this order today. By law interested parties must have an opportunity to comment on these proposals. Representations are invited by 19 May 2000, and I intend to make the Order within two months of today.

Among the measures are:

Requiring suppliers to offer dealers who buy cars outright equivalent terms, including volume discounts, to those offered to fleet buyers.

Requiring suppliers to provide their dealers with regular statements of terms they are prepared to offer which reflect the terms given to fleet customers.

Dealers who buy a large quantity of new cars outright will therefore be able to benefit from the sort of volume discounts currently enjoyed by fleet customers and pass on the benefits to customers.

Prohibiting suppliers from discriminating in their dealings with contract hire companies by giving less attractive discounts if the end-user is not a fleet customer.

This will allow contract hire companies to offer a better deal to their private customers and encourage more competitive pricing to private customers generally.

Prohibiting suppliers from imposing contract terms on dealers that prevent or inhibit dealers from advertising prices at which they are willing to sell.

Prohibiting suppliers from refusing to supply on the grounds of the price at which a dealer advertises it is willing to sell.

The current practices can mislead consumers about prices. These measures will ensure that dealers are free to advertise the price at which they are prepared to sell, without fear of penalty from suppliers. The Secretary of State has also not ruled out a ban on recommended retail prices if these two specific remedies need to be reinforced.

Suppliers will be prohibited from imposing conditions or targets on dealers in respect of the number of cars a dealer registers during a certain period, or giving a dealer an advantage which is dependent on the number of cars the dealer registers during a certain period.

Requiring suppliers to publish information on a regular basis concerning the number of cars they have pre-registered.

These should increase transparency and price competition by encouraging suppliers and dealers to set a market clearing price for new cars.

The Competition Commission also makes a number of recommendations for more fundamental change which relate to practices permitted by the European Union's Car Block Exemption rules. I believe these are important changes for the longer term in altering the structure of the market. We are discussing these issues with the European Commission now that the report is published.

Although the Block Exemption formally runs until September 2002, our discussions with the European Commission could bring about changes in the UK before then.

However, owing to the complicated legal and other factors that surround this issue, a point recognised by the Competition Commission, I expect it to take at least a year to resolve.

I will also be pressing the European Commission to enforce the existing Block Exemption rules vigorously to ensure that dealers are free to import new cars from dealers in the manufacturer's franchised network in other EC member states, and that they will not be disadvantaged if they do so and that private buyers are not obstructed if they wish to buy abroad for import into the UK.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Young People

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the Government will publish the findings of the joint Women's Unit and Home Office's dialogue with young people. [118770]

Ms Jowell: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office and I are launching "Listen Up!", our report on the dialogue, which is being published today; copies will be placed in the Library.

The report describes a major consultation exercise with young people run by the National Youth Agency.

This consultation was the first time in which Government consulted young women and young men separately. The report sets out their views and concerns. It looks, in particular, at issues such as the importance of family and parenting; preparation for adult life including school; careers choices; pressures to conform and self-esteem; vulnerability to risks; health, and crime. The report considers the significance of gender differences and looks at ways of involving young people more as policies are developed. It sets out the Government's response to the key concerns raised by young people, giving an outline of those areas where gender specific policies could make a difference.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance he has given to Ministers of the Crown in respect of their involvement in campaigning for grammar school ballots. [118428]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are keen to encourage all debates on the issues of grammar schools to be conducted fairly. That is why we drew up the Ballot Information Code, which applies specifically to relevant national or local organisations engaged in providing material for parents relating to a petition or a ballot. We commend its principles to all those involved in the debate. A breach of the principles of the Code may lead the Secretary to State to declare a ballot void if, in his opinion, it is likely to have had a significant effect on voting.

Schools (Books and Equipment)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the extra funds for schools for books and equipment will be paid. [118368]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend laid a special grant report before the House on 6 April, under section 88B of the Local Government Act 1988. Once approved, it will empower him to make payments to local authorities on condition that they pass those payments to schools, within a specified time period. It is expected that payments will be made to schools in May. The funds are not specifically for books and equipment, but may be used by schools for any purpose.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how the money for books and equipment announced by the Chancellor in the Budget Statement will be paid to schools that do not maintain a bank account separate from the local education authority. [118369]

Ms Estelle Morris: The funding will be paid to local authorities on condition they make it available for use by such schools. Regulations will be made that will require local education authorities to increase the budgets of all their schools by the amounts of grant indicated in special grant report No. 61. My right hon. Friend is minded to direct all local authorities to make available these sums within seven days of the budget increases required by the regulations. The funds are not specifically for books and equipment, but may be used by schools for any purpose.

Disabled People

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was spent in the past three years on publicising the Access-to-work scheme; and what assessment he has made of the take-up of opportunities for recruitment and the retention of disabled employees. [118240]

Ms Jowell: Access-to-work is one of a number of programmes and services, provided through the Employment Service, to help disabled people get, or stay in, a job. As such, Access-to-work does not have a separate budget for publicity. During the first 10 months of the last financial year the Employment Service spent £314,000 marketing and promoting the full range of their services for disabled people and their employers. The following table shows how much was spent by the Employment Service, over the previous two financial years:

Year	Amount (£)
1998–99	388,012

The Access-to-work programme has been successful in helping an increasing number of disabled people in, or into, employment year on year. Over the current financial year we expect to help more than 23,000 disabled people through Access-to-work at a cost of nearly £26 million. This an increase of 3,000 on last year.

Furthermore, the Employment Service has, through its range of job placing services, helped over 88,500 disabled people find employment during the last financial year. In addition to this, it has helped over 4,500 disabled people retain their employment, by providing advice and support through their Disability Employment Advisers.

Further Education Colleges (Governors)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information he has collected as to the declared political position of persons appointed as governors of further education colleges since April 1998. [118091]

Mr. Wicks: This information has never been collected for further education.

Learning and Skills Bill

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment to what extent he intends that the role of career guidance professionals will be maintained and enhanced as a result of the Learning and Skills Bill [Lords]. [117781]

Mr. Wicks: Careers guidance will be a core element of the new ConneXions Service for 13 to 19-year-olds. ConneXions Personal Advisers will give careers advice and guidance as part of the comprehensive support to help raise young people's aspirations and overcome barriers to effective learning. The level and mix of skills required of Personal Advisers in the ConneXions Service represent a new profession. A training programme for Personal Advisers will underpin delivery of the new service and will ensure that Personal Advisers have the necessary skills in areas such as intervention, assessment, brokerage and careers advice and guidance.

Existing careers guidance professionals already have some of the skills required for this new profession and the expectation is that the majority will move to this new role. The DfEE will be consulting shortly on the Professional Framework for Personal Advisers and this will play an important part in developing the profession and the new role of Personal Adviser.

ConneXions Service

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will ensure that the ConneXions Service will be available to all 13 to 19-year-olds and that the level of support available to young people will not be less than that provided by the Careers Service at present. [117780]

Mr. Wicks: ConneXions will provide a major new integrated advice, guidance and support for young people. It will be a universal service which will improve the level of support for all young people aged 13–19.

ConneXions will continue to offer at least the same level of careers information, advice and guidance as is currently provided by the Careers Service.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how he will ensure that the knowledge and experience developed by career guidance practitioners will be used by the ConneXions Service. [117779]

Mr. Wicks: The ConneXions Service will offer at least the same level of careers information, advice and guidance for 13 to 19-year-olds as is currently provided by the Careers Service. But in order to remove the significant barriers to learning that many young people face, careers information, advice and guidance needs to be extended to cover matters relating to social welfare, criminal justice and health, in addition to vocational issues.

The majority of Personal Advisers in the first phase of implementation will be drawn from existing careers and Youth Service practitioners. Over time the ConneXions training programme will ensure that all Personal Advisers are professionally qualified in all relevant aspects of information, advice and guidance to agreed standards for the profession.

A major training programme for Personal Adviser will be developed and the DfEE will shortly be consulting on the professional framework for this new profession.

Education Maintenance Allowance

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his announcement on 30 March of an extension of Education Maintenance Allowance to further areas, on what criteria these areas were chosen; and what are the staying-on rates (a) in each of these areas and (b) as a national average. [117632]

Mr. Wicks: Following promising early evidence from the existing pilots, we have decided to extend the Education Maintenance Allowance (EMA) to a further 40 areas. These have been chosen as being representative and because they have relatively low post-16 participation, low GCSE attainment and high deprivation. The choice of areas also includes some additional rural areas where we will be concentrating on transport costs. For this, four areas have been chosen on the basis of the representative nature of their existing support for transport.

The following table shows the average staying on rates for 16-year-olds from 1995–98, and the national average for the same period:

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117467]

Mr. Wills: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 392–93W, which sets out information relating to the Government Art Collection (GAC). Works of art from GAC are displayed in the London head office buildings of the Department for Education and Employment. The Department has also purchased paintings and prints to the value of £28,000 since 1992 (£18,000 in 1996–97 and £10,000 in 1997–98). These are displayed in areas of common use in Caxton House, one of the London head office buildings. No costs have been incurred on their upkeep.

Schools Funding

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what mechanism will be used to deliver the extra funds announced in the Budget to schools; when the schools will receive the money; and what the basis will be for determining the relevant sum for each school. [117514]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 3 April 2000]: My right hon. Friend laid a special report before the House on 6 April, under section 88B of the Local Government Act 1988. It will empower him to make payments to local authorities on condition that they pass those payments to schools, within a specified time period. It is expected that payments will be made to schools in May. Each school will receive the amount set out in the following table. The pupil numbers to be used will be those recorded for the schools' census on 20 January 2000.

School	Grant £
Primary school with 100 pupils or fewer	3,000
Primary school with more than 100 pupils, but fewer than 201 pupils	6,000
Primary school with 201 pupils or more	9,000
Middle deemed primary school which does not have a year 8 or 9	9,000
Special school	15,000
Secondary school with 600 pupils or fewer	30,000
Secondary school with more than 600 pupils, but less than 1,201 pupils	40,000
Secondary school with 1,201 pupils or more	50,000

For the purposes of calculating grant, all middle schools deemed secondary schools, and all middle schools deemed primary schools which have a year 8 or 9, are to be treated as secondary schools. CTCs are to be funded on the same basis as secondary schools. Nursery schools are to be treated as primary schools. No grant is payable in respect of a school which is to close during the financial year 2000–01.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what requirements secondary schools have to meet to receive the extra funding announced in the Budget, as referred to in the Red Book. [117513]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The additional funding will be part of secondary schools' delegated budgets, so they will be free to decide what to spend it on. It will give extra support to secondary schools in the raising of standards at Key Stage 3 programme, including the setting of challenging school-level targets, and preparation for new Year 7 tests for pupils who have not yet achieved level 4 in English and maths.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the allocation of the extra budget funding for each school in Shrewsbury and Atcham; and if he will make a statement. [118326]

Ms Estelle Morris: The provisional allocation of the extra budget funding for schools in Shropshire is £1.693 million. This is based on January 1999 number pupil data, and will be updated when January 2000 pupil number data become available. The funding to be paid to each school will be based on January 2000 pupil numbers. It is not therefore possible at the moment to list individual school allocations, but I will place in the Library a complete list by constituency when the data enabling me to do so become available.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of (a) total funding for schools and (b) the additional funding allocated for schools (i) since May 1997 and (ii) in the recent Budget, have been allocated to (A) nursery, (B) primary and (C) secondary schools; what reasons underlie the disparity per head in the distribution of the funding between the three sectors; what plans he has to review that distribution; and if he will make a statement. [118273]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table sets out: (a) total standard spending (TSS) for education for 2000–01; (b) the increase is TSS since May 1997; and (c) the recurrent funding announced in the Budget on 21 March 2000, together with the percentages of these amounts going to under-5s, primary, secondary and other education. The principal reason for the greater historic funding per head for secondary schools is their lower pupil teacher ratios. The table demonstrates that a greater percentage of the additional funding announced since May 1997 is going into under-5s and primary than the proportions for TSS in 2000–01; that reflects the extra funding the Government have made available to boost standards for pupils in the vital early years of their school career.

	(a) TSS for 2000–01	(b) Increase in TSS since May 1997	(c) Extra funding in Budget
Total (£ million)	23,003.6	4,495.3	297
Under-5s	7.0%	11.2%	—
Nursery	—	—	0.6%
Primary	42.8%	44.7%	45.3%
Secondary	47.6%	45.4%	47.5%
Other	2.6%	−1.3%	0%

Note:
Column (c) does not total 100 per cent., since it does not include funding for special schools, CTCs or pupil referral units.

Foundation Degree Courses

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to allow private companies to offer foundation degree courses; and if he will make a statement. [117347]

Mr. Wicks: In February, the Department issued a consultation paper setting out the Government's proposals on Foundation Degrees. It is our intention that these are degrees and therefore should be awarded only by institutions with degree awarding powers. However, employer involvement in both the design and delivery of Foundation Degree programmes will be critical. In particular, we expect prototype courses to be delivered by consortia which will include employer representation.

Employment Credit (Over-50s)

Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact the new employment credit for the over-50s will have in London. [116635]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 6 April 2000]: New Deal 50 plus will bring new hope to people over 50, including over 200,000 eligible Londoners. It includes a tax free employment credit, which guarantees a minimum take home income of £170 a week or £9,000 a year for those going into full-time work. It is a major new programme of personal advice, jobsearch support, in-work training grant and the employment credit to help people on benefits who are looking for work. The programme has been available nationally from 3 April 2000 after operating in nine selected areas since last October. In only five months over 1,000 people were helped off benefit and back into work.

Academic Freedom

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure academic freedom in (a) the conduct and publication of research and (b) university teaching. [118012]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 6 April 2000]: Higher education institutions are independent bodies, whose autonomy is enshrined in legislation. They conduct their own academic programmes, whether teaching or research, as they see fit. Research directly commissioned by this Department is published as a matter of course, either by the Department or by the research institution. Our research contracts place no restrictions on the right of researchers to draw independent and objective conclusions.

School Computers

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools have appointed technicians to assist in the running of schools' computer systems; and what estimate he has made of the number of unfilled vacancies within schools. [118235]

Mr. Wills [holding answers 7 April 2000]: There are no figures available for the number of primary or secondary schools that have appointed technicians to assist in the running of school computer systems, nor are there figures available for the number of unfilled vacancies. However, the Government are supporting £657 million of investment in schools' ICT provision up to 2002 as part of the National Grid for Learning initiative. This funding is devolved to schools to help enable them to address the priorities identified in their ICT development plan, including securing appropriate technical support.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if all teachers are eligible for assistance with the purchase of a computer; and if he will make a statement. [114998]

Mr. Wills: Any serving, DfEE-registered teacher in current employment in a state maintained school in England or employed by a local education authority in a recognised teaching role who complies with the following conditions is eligible to apply for a subsidy of half the cost of specified computer packages, up to a maximum subsidy of £500, under the scheme. These conditions are:

signed confirmation from the teacher, and his or her headteacher, or local education authority of this employment status;

signed confirmation either that the teacher has been on, is currently attending, or is definitely scheduled to attend a New Opportunities Fund teacher training course or alternatively is a newly qualified teacher who entered initial teacher training on or after September 1998 and is therefore deemed to be competent in ICT in accordance with the ICT Subject Teacher Training National Curriculum; a signed commitment by the teacher that the computer is for his or her own use.

£20 million has been made available for this scheme. The operation of the scheme is subject to the availability of funding.

Internet (Schools)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact on the timetable for the connection of schools to the Internet of the Competition Commission's review of the proposed acquisition by NTL of Cable and Wireless Communications' cable interests. [116644]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 28 March 2000]: The Competition Commission has concluded that the merger may be expected not to operate against the public interest. Choices about schools' connections to the Internet rest with schools themselves in the light of the telecommunications services and funding available to them, and advice from local education authorities and the British Educational Communications and Technology Agency. Good progress is being made in connecting schools to the Internet, with 93 per cent. of schools and 62 per cent. of primary schools connected as at March 1999.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will list the education Standard Spending Assessments for (a) each primary pupil and (b) each secondary pupil for each English local education authority for 2000–01; [115849]

(2) when he will reply to the question from the hon. Member for Northavon tabled on 21 March regarding SSAs for education. [118516]

Ms Estelle Morris: I am now able to answer the hon. Member's question. The following table shows the primary and secondary Standard Spending Assessment (SSA) per pupils and the special and specific grant allocations per pupil for each local education authority in England for 2000–01. The special and specific grant totals include the £290 million for schools announced in the Budget on 21 March, and the £50 million announced on 25 November 1999, decisions on the allocation of which my right hon. Friend has now taken.

Departmental Staff

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what childcare provision was made available in the financial year 1998–99 for use by (i) his departmental staff and (ii) employees of executive agencies under the control of his Department; what was the cost to parents of this childcare; and how many parents used the facilities. [108836]

Mr. Wills: The information is as follows:

(i) Provision for DfEE Employees

Workplace Nurseries are available for departmental staff working in Sheffield and Runcorn. The Sheffield nursery has places for 50 children aged six months to school age. The Runcorn nursery has places for 35 children aged three months to school age. Playschemes, operating during the school holidays, are available for DfEE staff working in Sheffield, Runcorn, Darlington and London.

(ii) Provision for Employees of Executive Agencies

The workplace nursery and playscheme located in Sheffield are available to Employment Service Head Office employees working in Sheffield.

(iii) Costs

In 1998–99 the costs to parents per day were as follows:

Sheffield nursery £12.00
Runcorn nursery £12.60
Sheffield playscheme £6.50
Runcorn playscheme £8.00
Darlington playscheme £6.50
London playscheme £8.40

(iv) Usage

In 1998–99 the number of parents using these facilities were as follows:

Sheffield nursery: 81 parents;
Runcorn nursery: 45 parents;
Sheffield playscheme: 37 parents;
Runcorn playscheme: 24 parents;
Darlington playscheme: 48 parents;
London playscheme: 25 parents.

Departmental Functions (Food)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if all food served at his Department's official functions meets the standards of production required of domestic producers. [109781]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 11 February 2000]: My Department's caterers are required to comply with all legal requirements and relevant regulations governing the procurement and preparation of food and related activities.

Deregulation

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what orders his Department has made under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 in each year since 1994; and what plans it has to introduce such orders. [106088]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 20 January 2000]: The Department has made two orders under this Act:

The Contracting Out (Administration of the Teachers Superannuation Scheme) Order 1996 (SI 1996/178) enabled the Secretary of State to authorise another person, or that person's employees, to carry out functions regarding the teachers' superannuation scheme and the payment generally of pensions, allowances and gratuities to or in respect of teachers.

The Deregulation (Provision of School Action Plans) Order 1997 (SI 1997/1142) amended sections 17 and 21 of the School Inspections Act 1996 so as to reduce a burden on the appropriate authority for a school to take reasonably practicable steps to secure that every parent of a pupil at the school receives a copy of the authority's statement of action following an inspection of the school under that Act.

We will continue to look for opportunities to use such orders to remove legislation where we can.

Computers (Fraud and Theft)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many cases of computer (a) fraud, including fraudulent use of computer chips and (b) theft his Department has recorded in the last five years. [106219]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 31 January 2000]: During the last five years there have been no cases of computer fraud (including fraudulent use of computer chips) in my Department. There have been 49 cases of computer theft since my Department was formed on 5 July 1995.

CABINET OFFICE

Regulatory Impact Assessments

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) if she will make it her policy to include a general assessment of the impact on economic activity and competitiveness of the regulations in Regulatory Impact Assessments; [118619]

(2) what assessment has been made of the effectiveness of Regulatory Impact Assessments by Government departments. [118618]

Mr. Stringer: In August 1998, the Government introduced Regulatory Impact Assessment to develop a more open system of assessing the risks, costs, benefits and economic impact of new legislative proposals. Regulatory Impact Assessment is currently being reviewed to identify any further improvements to the effectiveness of the system and guidance.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring for BSE in cattle the Government proposes to undertake in 2000–01. [118693]

Mr. Nick Brown: In line with advice from SEAC, the Government's Scientific Advisory Committee on BSE, the Government propose to test for BSE in 10,000 cattle aged over five years slaughtered under the Over-Thirty-Months-Scheme. This programme will start in April 2000. It will follow on from last year's similar survey of almost 4,000 cattle. The aim of this second survey will be to monitor the decline in the BSE epidemic in the UK.

This initiative will be additional to the EU-wide testing programme of casualty and fallen stock which was agreed in the Standing Veterinary Committee on 4 April with UK support. It will start in January 2001, and require the UK to examine about 7,000 cattle annually.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in his charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by his Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116919]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The Ministry is currently responsible for 13 empty properties, which represent 5 per cent. of its estate.

The Ministry maintains an active programme to dispose of surplus properties. With the exception of one contaminated site in a rural environment (for which remediation proposals are being prepared) all of the empty properties are in the course of disposal.

Action Plan for Farming

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reason the Action Plan for Farming, published on 30 March, contains no proposals to assist the development of the specialist cheese sector; and if he will make a statement. [117696]

Ms Quin: The Action Plan for Farming is a package of long-term structural measures and short-term financial aid for British farming. It contains proposals aimed at encouraging collaboration and improving marketing performance and competitiveness which may assist the development of the specialist cheese sector.

The Ministry is already supporting the specialist cheese sector through its sponsorship of Food For Britain (FFB) which has day-to-day responsibility for the speciality food industry; its promotion of the EU scheme for protecting food names; and its secondment of an official to the Specialist Cheesemakers Association (SCA), for 12 months, to assist on legislative, regulatory and promotional issues.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reason the Action Plan for Farming, published on 30 March contains no proposals to reduce the impact of the climate change levy on horticulture; and if he will make a statement. [117695]

Ms Quin: Proposals to reduce the impact of the climate change levy on horticulture were announced in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget statement on 21 March. This pre-dated the publication of the Action Plan for Agriculture. The measures announced in the Budget include a discount of fifty per cent. on the levy for a period of up to five years (subject to state aid rules) the allocation of a special package of support from the £50 million energy efficiency fund set up under the levy and the extension of the list of energy investments which qualify for enhanced capital allowances to include thermal screens used in glasshouses.

Some horticultural companies should also be able to take advantage of the measure, announced in the Chancellor's pre-Budget statement last November, to exempt from the levy electricity generated from 'new' forms of renewable energy and in 'good quality' combined heat and power plants.

Payroll Systems

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance is available to small growers and farmers for their payroll systems under schemes operated by (a) his and (b) other Government Departments. [117689]

Ms Quin: MAFF does not offer any assistance to small growers and farmers for their payroll system. However the Department of Trade and Industry conducted a consultation exercise in 1999 on the possible development of a payroll service for small business. As a result it was agreed that the Inland Revenue's New Enterprise Support Initiative (NESI) would be extended to provide on-going, one to one support for payroll assistance. As from 1 April 2000, the expanded NESI includes, free of charge, the following:

a dedicated helpline;

the offer of a visit from locally based Business Support Team;

a detailed "health check" of the employers payroll system;

the offer of further help including one-to-one visits and increased support where new employers are experiencing difficulties with payroll; cross referral to the full services of the Small Business Service, both nationally and locally.

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117418]

Ms Quin [holding answer 4 April 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 385W.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 189W, on live animal exports, what were the countries of destination of the live sheep exported from the United Kingdom in 1999 for (a) slaughter and (b) further fattening; and how many were exported to each country of destination. [116647]

Ms Quin: The total number of live sheep exported from the UK during 1999 for slaughter and further fattening are shown in the following table:

Destination country	Sheep for slaughter	Sheep for fattening
Belgium	—	452
Denmark	757	—
France	—	353,217
Germany	—	44,354
Ireland	420	—
Italy	—	143,183
Netherlands	—	506,899
Portugal	5,647	16,790
Spain	—	54,565
Total	6,824	1,116,202

Our records show that no live sheep were exported to third countries for slaughter or further fattening during 1999.

These figures are derived from the computer system used to issue export health certificates and are subject to updating and amendment.

Fallen Stock

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of carcases that were destroyed by (a) professional knackermen and (b) hunt incinerators in (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99. [117957]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 April 2000]: Records are not collected of the number of animal carcases destroyed by knackermen or hunt kennels and no estimates were made of the numbers destroyed during 1997–98 or 1998–99.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last issued advice to farmers on methods of disposal of fallen stock. [117960]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 April 2000]: Advice on the disposal of fallen stock was last given to farmers when the Water Code was revised and re-issued in October 1998. A summary of the Water, Air and Soil Codes, which included this advice was circulated with IACS information to 80,000 farmers in February 1999.

Organic Farming

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the United Kingdom's balance of trade with regard to organic produce in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [116298]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 7 April 2000]: No such figures are available. Organic products are not separately identified in Customs and Excise trade data.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of how many farmers will request support for conversion under the organic farming scheme before April 2001. [118300]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 7 April 2000]: None. The Organic Farming Scheme is closed to new applications while a review is underway.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people are employed in the organic farming sector. [118297]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 7 April 2000]: We estimate the number of registered organic farmers and growers in the UK at the end of January to be 2,500. In addition to primary producers, we estimate that just over 1,000 operators are registered for processing and/or importing organic products.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has carried out into improving the efficiency of organic farming in the last three years; and what was the cost of the research. [118299]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 7 April 2000]: The three main objectives of the MAFF Organic research programme and the spend on these objectives for the last three years are as follows:

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Constraints on production	801	1,320	1,828
Costs of the conversion period	34	53	49

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Rents

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each council area in Northern Ireland the number of dwellings with (a) controlled and (b) registered rents. [116359]

Mr. George Howarth: As there is no requirement on landlords to register controlled rents, this information does not exist.

The number of registered rents is given in the table.

Council area	Total number of dwellings with registered rents
Antrim	44
Ards	346
Armagh	43

Heritage Lottery Funding

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for Heritage Lottery funding were made and how many projects approved in each of the last three years; if sufficient funding was available to match applications; and if he will make a statement. [116516]

Mr. George Howarth: Details of applications received and approved in the last three years are as follows:

	Applications received	Applications approved
1997–98	57	26
1998–99	109	59

[1] 34 applications are still live

The Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) takes a flexible approach to Partnership Funding. Applications made through the Mains Grant or Revenue programmes can receive up to 90 per cent. HLF funding for projects up to £100,000 and 75 per cent. for projects over that amount. Through these programmes in Northern Ireland the Heritage Lottery Fund is not aware of any projects which have received HLF awards failing because of applicants' inability to secure partnership funding.

Student Awards

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many awards were made available, and at what cost, to Northern Ireland students undertaking courses at residential institutions for adult education in Great Britain in each of the last 10 years. [117581]

Mr. Ingram: The number of awards is as follows:

Financial year	Number of awards
1990–91	8
1991–92	8
1993–94	8
1994–95	12
1995–96	12
1996–97	12
1998–99	12

The actual expenditure in 1998–99 was £46,104, when only 11 of the awards made available were taken up. Figures beyond this year are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Education Budget

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) amount and (b) percentage of money from the education budget was devoted to transport in (i) 1991, (ii) 1995 and (iii) 1999. [117342]

Mr. George Howarth: The information is as follows:

Financial year	Transport costs £ million	Percentage of education budget
1991–92	27.5	2.45
1995–96	38.1	2.84
1996–99	46.2	3.15

Audited figures for 1999–2000 are not yet available.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) amount and (b) percentage of funding was retained by his Department from the education budget in (i) 1991, (ii) 1995 and (iii) 1999. [117341]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is as follows:

Financial year	Amount retained (£ million)	Percentage retained
1991–92	15.2	1.36
1995–96	16.3	1.22
1998–99	19.5	1.33

Audited figures for 1999–2000 are not available.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount allocated to the education budget for Northern Ireland in 1991. [117339]

Mr. George Howarth: The total for the 1991–92 financial year was £1,121 million.

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117479]

Mr. Ingram: The Department of Finance and Personnel for Northern Ireland is responsible for the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) Art Collection which is independent from the Government Art Collection.

Expenditure on the NICS art collection since 1992 is as follows:

	Upkeep	Purchase of works of art
1992–93	346	39,000
1993–94	290	30,000
1994–95	285	27,000
1995–96	270	39,000
1996–97	655	31,000
1997–98	215	23,000
1998–99	958	30,000
1999–2000	1,594	59,000

I would also refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts on 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 393–94W.

Management Trainee Assessment Centre

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many companies were invited to tender for the development of the 1999 Management Trainee Assessment Centre; to which company the contract was awarded; what use was made of the materials developed by the contractor; what plans he has for future use of those materials; how much was paid to the contractor for work relating to the 1999 Management Trainee Assessment Centre as a percentage of the initial quoted costs; and if he will make a statement. [117316]

Mr. Ingram: The contract for the development of the 1999 Management Trainee Interim Assessment Centre was awarded to the same company as has undertaken the development of the 1998 Assessment Centre—ASE Consultants; no use was made of materials developed by the contractor for the 1999 Management Trainee Assessment Centre; there are no plans to make use of these materials in the future; nothing was paid to the contractor for work relating to the 1999 Management Trainee Assessment Centre.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met European Commissioners to discuss EU structural funds allocated to Northern Ireland. [117524]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State discussed EU Structural Funds issues with Commissioner Neil Kinnock, Vice-President of the European Commission, on 25 November 1999. He was scheduled to meet Michel Barnier, Commissioner for Regional Affairs, when he visited Northern Ireland on 4 February 2000 but was unable to do so because of other pressures. However, I represented the Secretary of State on that occasion.

Liam Averill

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if an extradition warrant has been issued for Liam Averill. [117679]

Mr. Ingram: Six warrants of arrest were issued in respect of Liam Averill by Lisburn Magistrates Court on 12 December 1997. It is the Government's normal policy not to comment on extradition proceedings in individual cases.

Security Industry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what statutory provisions govern the private security industry in Northern Ireland, including nightclub doormen; and who is responsible for their enforcement. [117350]

Mr. Ingram: In Northern Ireland, any individual or employer who wishes to offer security services for reward must hold a certificate issued under Part V of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1996. Responsibility for the enforcement of these statutory provisions rests with the Security Policy and Operations Division of the Northern Ireland Office and the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

There are no statutory provisions covering the regulation of security staff employed to guard premises owned or occupied by their employer although some local authorities require such persons to be registered with them.

Petrol Stations

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many petrol stations in each council area which abut the Irish Republic ceased to trade in motor vehicle fuel in each of the four years prior to 31 March; and what was the rateable value of those stations in each council area in total. [117676]

Mr. Ingram: Information in the form requested is not readily available from government departments and could only be compiled at disproportionate cost.

Meningitis Vaccine

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many doses of the new meningococcal vaccines have been discarded because of poor storage or distribution conditions at the hospital in Omagh; and what proportion this is of that total vaccine. [117636]

Mr. George Howarth: None.

Civil Service

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those Civil Service positions reserved for British citizens. [117256]

Mr. Ingram: Posts in the Northern Ireland Civil Service are reserved for UK nationals where the post constitutes "employment in the public service" within the meaning of the Treaty of Rome. The assessment is a functional one dependent on the current duties and responsibilities of the post, and is considered as and when necessary, for example, when a vacancy is to be filled by recruitment. Individual or definitive assessments for every post in the Service do not exist.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland from whom he has sought legal advice on the exclusion of Irish citizens from Civil Service posts. [117257]

Mr. Ingram: General entry requirements for the Northern Ireland Civil Service, including nationality requirements, are specified by the Department of Finance and Personnel under the direction and control of Ministers. The Department seeks legal advice on these matters, as and when appropriate, from the Departmental Solicitor's Office.

Border Crossings

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in re-opening border crossing points at Knockaginney Bridge and Annaghroe Bridge. [117258]

Mr. Ingram: No progress has been made to date.

Key Persons Protection Register

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he was first informed of the threats to the life of Belfast solicitor Padraigin Drinan; if he will itemise those threats of which he has been informed; if he will itemise incidents that may reasonably be perceived as designed to intimidate the solicitor; on how many occasions and on what dates (a) her home, (b) the premises of her legal practice and (c) her car has been attacked; what steps the RUC have taken to protect the safety of Ms Drinan; and what steps he will take to ensure Ms Drinan is placed on the Key Persons Protection Register. [117262]

Mr. Ingram: It has been a long-standing convention and practice of successive Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland not to comment on or publicly disclose any matters relating to the personal circumstances and security of specific individuals where those persons are being protected, have been refused such protection or are being considered for protection under the Key Persons Protection Scheme. These matters are by necessity confidential.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals are listed on the Key Persons Protection Register; what is the percentage breakdown of the Register in terms of perceived community origin of key persons; if he will describe the type of risk faced by those on the Register; what are the criteria for a person to be entered on the Register; and what additional protection is available for those persons on the Register [117263]

Mr. Ingram: The Key Persons Protection Scheme exists to provide physical protection measures, at public expense, at the homes and occasionally the workplaces of people in certain jobs and occupations in Northern Ireland whose death or injury from terrorist attack could damage or seriously undermine:

1. the democratic framework of Government;
2. the effective administration of Government and/or the Criminal Justice system; or
3. the maintenance for Law and Order.

The individual must be assessed as being under serious or significant threat.

There are currently 1,260 persons protected by the Scheme.

Records are not maintained on the basis of perceived community origins of persons protected by the Scheme and the information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Malicious Phone Calls

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken by the RUC in Lurgan to investigate the source of malicious phone calls to business clients of Mrs. Susan Duffy; on what date he was informed that the Northern Ireland Advisory Committee on Telecommunications had traced a malicious call to a registered mobile phone user; how many individuals have been interviewed at this address; and if he will make a statement. [117264]

Mr. Ingram: This matter is currently the subject of an investigation being supervised by the Independent Commission of Police Complaints and it would therefore be inappropriate for me to comment further.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Tagging

13. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which categories of offenders are eligible for release from custodial sentences subject to electronic tagging. [116797]

Mr. Boateng: Prisoners are eligible for early release under the Home Detention Curfew scheme on the basis of the length of their custodial sentence, not the category of their offence. Subject to certain statutory exceptions, prisoners who are sentenced to between three months and four years of imprisonment are eligible for release under the scheme.

Sex offenders required to register under the Sex Offenders Act 1997 are not eligible unless there are exceptional circumstances, and then only with the personal approval of the Director General of the Prison Service.

Asylum Seekers

14. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his target date for reducing the backlog of asylum seekers to the same level as May 1997. [116798]

Mrs. Roche: We have all but cleared the backlog of pre-1993 cases and expect to clear the backlog of 1993–95 cases by the summer of this year. We expect to start making significant inroads into the backlog of post 1996 cases by late spring of this year, and are aiming for a very substantial reduction in the backlog by April 2001.

25. Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with local authorities outside the south-east about the policy of dispersal of asylum seekers. [116812]

Mr. Straw: We have had many discussions with local authorities about the dispersal of asylum seekers. The National Asylum Support Service began operating last Monday in respect of all new applicants who claimed asylum at their port of entry.

The new asylum support scheme will be extended to cover asylum seekers who claim asylum in-county, while within the county of Kent, on or after Monday 17 April. The effect of this is that no asylum seeker making a claim for asylum in Kent, on or after that date, will be eligible for support from Kent County Council, or Medway Council. This will, I hope, bring considerable relief to the local authorities in Kent. This is the first stage of the roll-out of the support scheme to all in-country applicants.

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to speed up the processing of asylum claims. [116820]

Mrs. Roche: We have already recruited hundreds of new asylum caseworkers in the Integrated Casework Directorate and plan to recruit more; in Croydon, Liverpool and elsewhere. We are also thoroughly overhauling processes across the system from end-to-end and across directorate and departmental boundaries. The provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 will also provide much needed support for the system as a whole.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what amounts each London borough has claimed in excess of the maximum asylum grant available from his Department for (a) single asylum seekers and (b) asylum seekers with children for (i) 1998–99 and (ii) each calendar month in 1999–2000. [117929]

Mrs. Roche: We do not hold this information on a monthly basis. 1999–2000 was split into two periods, the first from 1 April 1999 to 5 December 1999 and the second from 6 December 1999 to 31 March 2000. The information for the first period on the excess of claim over Special Grant is set out in the table, subject to audit, for both adults and families. Information on the second period is not yet available. A number of claims have been received and are being processed but I am unable to give the information requested at this stage.

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what criteria asylum seekers are selected for a fast-track system of processing in respect of their claim. [116808]

Mrs. Roche: We are fast-tracking cases which appear to be straightforward or where there are strong public interest grounds for doing so.

Hilda Murrell

15. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report on the case of Hilda Murrell of Shrewsbury from the West Mercia police. [116799]

Mr. Straw: I understand from West Mercia Constabulary that the case, including the remaining forensic evidence, is subject to regular review.

Immigration

16. Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to reduce the backlog of immigration applications at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [116800]

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in reducing the backlog of outstanding immigration cases. [116801]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The backlog of immigration (that is general and settlement) cases has been reduced from 38,000 in June 1999 to 29,000 at the end of February.

We aim to clear the backlog by July this year. We have streamlined the process for dealing with the intake of after-entry casework. We have introduced revised procedures to speed up the consideration of cases and are allocating around 100 caseworkers to deal exclusively with backlog cases.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken by the Immigration and Nationality Department to speed up the processing of applications for indefinite leave to remain. [117330]

Mrs. Roche: New applications for indefinite leave to remain are currently being completed within about a week of receipt in straightforward cases that do not require any further inquiry or information. Those cases that cannot be decided upon initial examination will from 10 April be sent directly to dedicated caseworking teams for consideration which should help reduce delays caused by cases awaiting allocation to caseworkers for action. The time taken to complete each case will depend entirely upon its complexity.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used in assessing claims for indefinite leave to remain made by foreign nationals. [117331]

Mrs. Roche: All applications for indefinite leave to remain are assessed against either the requirements of the relevant categories of the Immigration Rules or the criteria in any specific concessions outside the Rules, or are considered exceptionally in the light of the particular circumstances of the individual case where the application is made on compassionate grounds.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the average and (b) the longest time taken by the Immigration and Nationality Department to process applications for indefinite leave to remain first lodged in (i) January 1996, (ii) January 1997, (iii) January 1998, (iv) January 1999 and (v) January 2000. [117329]

Mrs. Roche: The available information, which relates to applications decided in calendar years 1996 to 1998, is set out in the table. There was a reorganisation of caseworking practices at the beginning of 1999, and an analysis of decisions taken subsequently has not yet been undertaken.

The time taken to process an application for indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom is affected by a number of factors, including the complexity of individual cases. About 70 per cent. of all new applications are currently being decided within two weeks. New applications for indefinite leave to remain that do not require further inquiry or information are currently being completed within about a week. Applications where further inquiries are needed may take considerably longer. However, streamlined procedures have been introduced throughout the Integrated Casework Directorate to speed up the consideration of all applications and these processes are regularly reviewed.

Year of decision	Average time (in days) to decide applications for indefinite leave to remain
1997	53
1998	72

Convictions

17. Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of convictions secured in the past three years. [116802]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The latest totals for the number of defendants convicted for indictable offences, summary non-motoring offences and summary motoring offences are:

Year	Number
1996	1,441,000
1997	1,386,000
1998	1,470,000

These figures cover all offences, including the numerically large categories of television and vehicle licence evasion.

Asylum Seekers (Iraqi Nationals)

18. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications have been lodged by Iraqi nationals since 1 May 1997; and how many of those applications have been approved. [116804]

Mrs. Roche: The number of asylum applications lodged by Iraqi nationals since the beginning of May 1997 to the end of December 1999 was 3,870. There were a total of 1,680 decisions made; of which 740 were grants of asylum and 735 were grants of exceptional leave to remain.

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

19. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress in the use by local authorities of anti-social behaviour orders. [116805]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I understand that about 35 orders are currently in force and a number of local authorities, in consultation with the police, are actively considering applications for further orders. Where orders have been made they have generally been found to be effective and I would encourage both local authorities and the police to make full use of the orders in appropriate cases.

21. Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what encouragement he is giving to local partnerships to use the orders made available under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [116807]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have in place a full programme of support to partnerships in using the orders made available under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. In the case of anti-social behaviour orders, for example, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has established an action group under the chairmanship of Lord Warner to identify what additional help needs to be given to the police and local authorities. The group is producing a model protocol for applying for an order and has arranged a series of seminars around the country to spread best practice.

Prisoners (Early Release)

22. Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure the greater involvement of victims and their families in the assessment process of prisoners for early release on parole. [116809]

Mr. Boateng: We have announced a comprehensive review of the parole and lifer review processes. The review will consider how victims and their families are currently involved in these processes and whether improvements mights be made.

Victim support and other interest groups will be consulted as part of the review.

CCTV

23. Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the impact on crime levels of CCTV in small towns; and if he will make a statement. [116810]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Police operational experience and a number of research studies reveal that Closed Circuit Television has considerable crime reduction and detection success in small towns and elsewhere, particularly when used as part of a wider crime strategy.

Demand under the first round of the £153 million CCTV Initiative demonstrates that crime and disorder partnerships regard CCTV as a valuable asset: we have already invested around £60 million over 320 schemes in England and Wales, including small towns and rural areas.

I announced the second round of the Initiative on 31 March. Around £90 million remains available for allocation, and increased emphasis will be given to proposals from rural areas and community shopping centres where crime and the fear of crime are having a significant adverse effect on local people.

Sentencing (Young Offenders)

24. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the speeding up of sentencing for persistent young offenders. [116811]

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the speeding up of sentencing for persistent young offenders. [116806]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We are making continued progress towards achieving our pledge to halve the time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders. Alongside the measures to reduce delay introduced by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, work is being taken forward with local areas to ensure the effective fast tracking of persistent young offenders in both youth and Crown Courts.

Firearms Licences

26. Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the obtaining of firearms licences by foreign nationals. [116813]

Mr. Charles Clarke: All applicants for firearm certificates must satisfy the chief officer of police that they have "good reason" to possess the firearms in question and that they are fit to be entrusted to do so without danger to public safety or to the peace. Since 1998, applicants must supply the police with details of two referees to the application. Referees must have known the applicant personally for at least two years. The Association of Chief Police Officers have recently reinforced the need to carry out background checks through Interpol in relation to all foreign applicants and those who have been resident overseas.

Truancy

27. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what help he proposes to give schools and local authorities in combating truancy. [116814]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Truancy is a major contributor to youth offending and can in itself have a devastating impact on a child's prospects for later life. That is why my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education has allocated extra resources through the Social Inclusion Pupil Support Grant Programme, worth some £500 million over three years, to help reduce levels of unauthorised absence and exclusion.

Secondly, we are introducing, as part of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, an increase in penalty on parents for failing to ensure that a child attends school regularly.

And, thirdly, we are considering actively whether we can encourage the type of scheme which is active in York, for example, where police, education welfare officers, and social services officers, work together as a team, to pick up children who are truant on the streets and bring them back into education.

Police Forces (Non-territorial)

28. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reform the governance of non-territorial police forces. [116815]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The then Minister, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton, North and Bellshill (Dr. Reid) announced in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Mr. Shaw) on 31 July 1998, Official Report, columns 637–38W, our intention to seek to establish, when a suitable legislative opportunity arises, an independent national police authority for the British Transport Police.

Prisons (Health Care)

29. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on improving the standard of health care in prisons; and if he will make a statement. [116817]

Mr. Boateng: Pilot health needs assessment projects have started in 12 prisons. All prisons and local health authorities have been asked by March 2001 jointly to assess prisoners' health needs and to identify appropriate services to meet them and effective ways of delivery. Implementation of improvements through individual prison health plans is scheduled to begin from April 2001.

Farm and Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

30. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he plans to take to support farm and neighbourhood watch schemes. [116818]

Mr. Charles Clarke: A partnership approach between local communities and the police is the most effective means of tackling crime in rural areas. Neighbourhood and farm watch schemes are excellent examples of this partnership approach in action and we take every opportunity to encourage their establishment. Watch schemes have a valuable role to play in the local crime and disorder reduction partnerships established by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998.

CS Spray

31. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of indiscriminate use of CS spray have been the subject of police disciplinary proceedings. [116819]

Mr. Charles Clarke: For the period October 1998 to October 1999, 135 complaints of inappropriate use of CS spray were received by the Police Complaints Authority, 10 per cent. of which led to some form of disciplinary action. Two cases resulted in formal disciplinary charges.

Minimum Sentences

33. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring forward legislation to increase the number of mandatory minimum sentences for persistent offenders. [116821]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government have no plans to bring forward legislation for this purpose.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what agreement has been reached between EU member states in respect of EU-wide minimum prison sentences; in respect of what criminal offences; and if he will make a statement. [118077]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 7 April 2000]: Article 31(e) of the Treaty on European Union, as amended by the Treaty of Amsterdam, provides that common action on judicial co-operation in criminal matters shall include > "progressively adopting measures establishing minimum rules relating to the constituent elements of criminal acts and to penalties in the fields of organised crime, terrorism and illicit drug trafficking".

The conclusions of the Tampere European Council state that > "efforts to agree on common definitions, incriminations and sanctions should be focused in the first instance on a limited number of sectors of particular relevance, such as financial crime (money laundering, corruption, euro counterfeiting), drugs trafficking, trafficking in human beings, particularly exploitation of women, sexual exploitation of children, high tech crime and environmental crime" (paragraph 48).

The Government support the priorities established at Tampere, and consider that steps taken to implement action in furtherance of these priorities can make a significant contribution to combating cross-border and organised crime.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which criminal offences in England and Wales are punishable by the imposition of a minimum determinate prison sentence for the first or second offence, indicating the minimum in each case. [118074]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 7 April 2000]: There are no criminal offences that attract an automatic minimum determinate prison sentence for either a first or second offence by a given offender.

Section 2 of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 provides for those who are convicted of a second serious sexual or violent offence to be sentenced to life imprisonment (an indeterminate sentence).

Information Commissioner

34. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for the role of the Information Commissioner. [116822]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The functions of the Information Commissioner are set out in the Freedom of Information Bill which is currently before Parliament. The Information Commissioner will have extensive powers to monitor and encourage good practice and to enforce compliance with the requirements of the Bill.

Security Industry

35. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on regulation of the private security industry. [116823]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Our White Paper, "The Government's Proposals for Regulation of the Private Security Industry in England and Wales", published last year, sets out plans to introduce statutory regulation of the industry. The proposals include plans to establish a Private Security Industry Authority to be responsible for maintaining and improving standards within the industry, and for licensing people employed in the industry. We intend to introduce legislation as soon as parliamentary time permits.

West Mercia Police

36. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the funding of West Mercia police. [116824]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The West Mercia Police Authority have set a net budget of £125.7 million for 2000–01. This represents an increase of 7.9 per cent. on the budget for 1999–2000.

Police Numbers (London)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers the Metropolitan Police will have by the end of 2000–01; and what the figure was in 1997. [116789]

Mr. Straw: In March 1997, the Metropolitan Police Service had a strength of 27,166. In March of this year, estimated strength was 26,034. From 1 April, 474 Metropolitan Police officers are being seconded to county constabularies as a result of the boundary changes to the Metropolitan Police District, bringing total numbers to 25,556. The Commissioner intends to maintain overall numbers at around this level for the current financial year.

In addition, administrative changes made by the new Commissioner should have the effect of putting an extra 300 officers on the streets by the end of the financial year.

Organised Crime

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the amount of organised crime in the UK that is organised by foreign nationals living in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [117823]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The threat posed to the United Kingdom by organised crime is assessed each year by the National Crime Intelligence Service (NCIS). NCIS's threat assessment for 1999 showed that while there was evidence of the involvement of foreign nationals, the major part of organised crime activity was carried out by British criminals based in the United Kingdom.

Freedom of Information Bill

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consult interested parties about the contents of the publication scheme that his Department will be required to adopt under the Freedom of Information Bill. [117969]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The publication scheme which every public authority will be required to adopt and maintain under the provisions of clause 17 of the Freedom of Information Bill is an important part of the drive to greater openness across the whole of the public sector.

The Home Office publication scheme will be agreed with the Information Commissioner and will be developed in accordance with any advice and guidance which the Commissioner may issue.

Welsh Police Forces

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police officers were in service in the Welsh police forces in (a) 1990 and (b) 1995;

[118379]

(2) how many police officers are serving in police forces in Wales. [118399]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is given in the table:

Year	Number of police officers
1990	6,390
1995	6,289
1999	6,692

The figures given are strength for ordinary duty (full-time equivalent) as at 30 September.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many licences were granted for LD50 tests in each of the last four years. [117851]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since 1995, 14 licences have been issued authorising the LD50 (Organisation for European Co-Operation and Development Guideline 401) test as shown:

1995: 3
1996: 3
1997: 3

In my reply of 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 437W, I reported that 12 of these licences have now been varied to remove authority for the LD50 (Guideline 401) test and that the remaining two licences were the subject of representations from the licence holders under section 12 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. I understand that the holders of these two licences have now agreed to withdraw their representations and to submit their licences for removal of authority for the LD50 test. This action will be completed shortly.

No licences authorising the test have been issued this year and we will no longer grant new licences for the test.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Metropolitan Police will appoint coroners' officers to the Southern District of Greater London to bring it up to full strength. [118243]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the current compliment of nine coroners officers in the Southern District of Greater London is one below full strength. The single vacancy will be filled on 2 May 2000.

Criminal Records

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the results of his Department's impact assessment survey into the creation of the Criminal Records Bureau and the imposition of the enhanced criminal records certificate; and if he will make a statement. [118526]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There has been widespread support for the establishment of the Criminal Records Bureau, and for the kind of information that it will make available to employers and organisations, often for the first time. Before we make Regulations later in the year to prescribe various matters including charges for certificates, we shall undertake a regulatory impact exercise to provide an up-to-date assessment of the implications. Interested sectors will be consulted, and the results will be made known.

Family Court Welfare Service

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) document titles and (b) page references of Family Court Welfare Officer training material on Children Act contact and residence disputes which provide guidance on (i) how much time should be apportioned between parents after divorce and separation and (ii) how long it should take for this level of contact to be attained. [117804]

Mr. Boateng: There is no guidance which specifies the level or nature of contact to be recommended in a specific set of circumstances.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what records have been kept by the Family Court Welfare Service for each of the last three years showing the levels of contact recommended between non-resident parents and their children in disputed access cases. [117803]

Mr. Boateng: No such records are kept and there is no requirement for probation services to do so.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been (a) charged and (b) convicted of offences for breaches of the Official Secrets Act in each of the last five years. [117259]

Mr. Boateng: Data on the numbers of persons charged are not collected centrally.

The available information comes from the Home Office court proceedings database which only identifies those defendants who were prosecuted under the Act for triable either-way offences. Between 1994 and 1998 inclusive it shows that there were three such prosecutions. In 1997, one person was prosecuted, convicted and given a custodial sentence. In 1998, two people were prosecuted of which one was convicted and given a custodial sentence.

Criminal Trials (Exhibits)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requirement there is for police authorities to retain exhibits used in criminal trials, once the trial is completed, for the purpose of any future appeal; and what requirement there is for the (a) victims of the crime concerned and (b) relatives of victims to be consulted concerning the retention and disposal of such exhibits where they were the property of the victim. [118560]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under the Criminal Appeals Rules 1968, the arrangements for the retention of exhibits in criminal proceedings pending appeal, are matters for the court to determine. The rules provide that exhibits must be retained for 35 days from the date of conviction or, if an appeal is lodged, until the determination of the appeal. The exhibits may be retained in the custody of the court, the person who produced the exhibit at the trial (prosecution or defence) or any other person and such arrangements can include provision for the inspection of the exhibit by any interested party.

Section 22 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 (PACE) provides that where property has been seized or taken away by the police it may be retained so long as is necessary in all the circumstances. The section goes on to clarify that such property may be retained only while in use as evidence, for forensic examination, for investigation in connection with an offence, or in order to establish the lawful owner, and must not be retained if a photograph or copy would suffice for these purposes.
Policy on the return of property to the lawful owner is a matter for the police force concerned but I understand that every force has a clear policy regarding the disposal of property and is fully aware of the provision of section 22 of PACE. Moreover, guidance was issued to the police in 1997 on the disposal of property under the Police (Property) Regulations 1997, where the owner cannot be established and no competent court order has been made in respect of it.

Police Constables

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) nationality and (b) residency requirements there are for appointment as a police constable in England and Wales; which police forces in England and Wales undertake which part of the recruitment process outside the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [118543]

Mr. Straw: Home Office Circulars 99/1982 and 33/1987, issued to police forces on 3 November 1982 and 15 June 1997 respectively, provide guidance on the nationality qualifications for applicants to the police service. To be eligible for appointment as a constable a candidate must be:

(a) a British citizen; or

(b) a Commonwealth citizen (other than a British citizen) or a citizen of the Irish Republic, in which case he or she must satisfy one of the following conditions:

(i) at least one of his or her parents must be, or have been at death, a Commonwealth citizen or a citizen of the Irish Republic; or

(ii) he or she must have resided in a country or territory within the Commonwealth or in the Irish Republic, or have been employed elsewhere in the service of the Crown, or partly have so resided and partly been so employed, for at least five years out of the last eight years preceding the date of his or her appointment.

If not qualified under (i) or (ii) above, he/she must satisfy the chief officer of police that he/she is so closely connected with a country or territory within the Commonwealth either by ancestry, upbringing or residence, or by reason of national service, that an exception may properly be made in his/her favour.

There is no statutory requirement for an applicant for appointment as a police officer to have resided in the force area prior to application which is a matter to be determined on a local basis by chief police officers. No record is held centrally of which forces have a residency requirement as part of their recruitment process.

Cabinet Office guidance, on which police forces base their policy for carrying out security clearances of applicants, recommends that the normal residency requirement for security clearance is that the applicant has been resident in the United Kingdom for the previous three years. However, if the applicant has spent the previous three years in another country, discretion may be given to undertake overseas security checks where this is possible.

We do not hold any information centrally on which police forces undertake parts of the recruitment process outside the United Kingdom. This could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Representation of the People Act

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the oral statement by the Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, the hon. Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth), on 13 January 2000, Official Report, columns 487–89, what evidence of adequate public consultation was provided by each local authority submitting proposals for a pilot scheme under section 10 of the Representation of the People Act 2000; which schemes were (a) withdrawn and (b) not approved because of a lack of adequate public consultation; and if he will make a statement. [118562]

Mr. Straw: Local authorities which made applications under section 10 of the Representation of the People Act 2000 were required to give an assurance that no voter would be put at a disadvantage by their pilot schemes but they were not required to submit specific evidence of any public consultation which they may have undertaken before submitting their applications. Birmingham, Halton, Pendle, Telford and Wrekin and Warrington later withdrew their applications but we were not advised of the reason for withdrawal in every case. Applications from Milton Keynes, Solihull, Thurrock and Wirral were not approved because of local opposition to the proposed schemes.

Hard Drugs

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress in tackling the illegal trade in hard drugs. [116803]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Stifling the availability of illegal drugs is one of the four key aims of the Government's drugs strategy.

The United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator has set challenging targets to reduce access to heroin and cocaine among young people by 25 per cent. by 2005 and by 50 per cent. by 2008. He will be reporting on progress in his second Annual Report in the near future.

Tackling the supply of illicit drugs, particularly heroin and cocaine, is a top priority for the police and Customs. In 1999, the National Crime Squad seized drugs with a street value of £77 million, a two-and-a-half fold increase on 1998.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Burma

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his EU counterparts concerning the implementation of investment sanctions against Burma. [118362]

Mr. Battle: We regularly review the adequacy of EU measures on Burma. We have today persuaded EU Partners to strengthen the EU Common Position on Burma with three new measures: adding a ban on export of equipment that might be used for internal repression or terrorism; naming and shaming those Burmese leaders banned from visiting the EU; and freezing their assets.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to introduce legislation to allow the imposition of unilateral investment sanctions on Burma. [118364]

Mr. Battle: We believe that multilateral sanctions are more effective than unilateral ones and have no plans to introduce legislation allowing adoption of unilateral investment sanctions on Burma. Our policy is not to encourage trade or investment in Burma.

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had recently with UK business about investment in Burma; and if he will make a statement. [118656]

Mr. Battle: We have made clear to Premier Oil that we do not encourage trade with or investment in Burma. On 27 March, I met Charles Jamieson, Chief Executive of Premier Oil, and made clear to him our deep concern about their investment in Burma and that we would welcome their moving out as soon as and to the fullest extent that they lawfully can. We regularly give business inquirers a statement on the nature of the Burmese regime and the state of the economy.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in his charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by his Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116918]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 3 April 2000]: There are 527 office buildings and Residences for Heads of Post overseas. Of these, eight are currently empty. This represents 1.5 per cent. of the total.

The administration of staff residential properties on the overseas estate has been devolved to individual Posts. Details of any empty properties at all 222 Posts could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

FCO policy is that no property should be left vacant unless this is unavoidable in the short-term or there are reasons for its retention, such as a break in diplomatic relations. Properties that are surplus to requirements are disposed of as soon as market conditions allow.

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117812]

Mr. Hain: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office employs its own lawyers (Legal Advisers).

On 31 March 1995 the number of Legal Advisers employed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office was 29. Of these 29, one was on a career-break and one was on loan to the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers.

On 31 March 2000 the number of Legal Advisers employed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office was 29. Of these 29, one is on loan to the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers.

European Union

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received from the official UK participants in the Friends of Europe Conference of 9 March in Brussels; and what contribution was made by the UK participants. [118021]

Mr. Vaz: The British Ambassador to Belgium, Mr. David Colvin, attended part of the Friends of Europe Conference on 9 March as an observer. He did not address the Conference and no report was made.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of his speech of 27 March, in Portsmouth, on the role of Governments in promoting Europe. [118024]

Mr. Vaz: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary did not attend the Council of Europe Parliamentary and Public Relations Committee visit to Portsmouth from 25–28 March.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many responses he has received to the Your Britain, Your Europe questionnaire; what proportion this represents of those distributed; and what the results are. [118022]

Mr. Vaz: We received only a small number of replies to the short questionnaire attached to the "Your Britain, Your Europe" leaflet that accompanied my roadshow. The formal responses represented a small percentage of the seven thousand leaflets distributed, though many more people expressed their support at the time. We therefore decided not to draw any conclusions from such a small sample of written replies.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the purpose of the publication, "Six Years of Change: How Funding From the European Union has Helped the North West 1994–99"; what was the cost of producing it; how many copies were distributed; what contribution was made to it by his Department; and if he will make a statement on his policy on the political neutrality in respect of information about the costs and benefits of EU membership in such publications. [118028]

Mr. Vaz: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office did not make a financial contribution to this publication. For further details I refer the hon. Member to the Director of the Government Office for the North-west.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the (a) nature and (b) cost of official representation at the Britain in Europe event in Brussels, on 22 March. [118026]

Mr. Vaz: Some officials from the UK's Permanent Representation to the European Union attend the reception on the evening of 22 March. This entailed no official cost.

Human Rights

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy to determine which former (a) Ministers, (b) senior armed forces personnel and (c) heads of state have records of human rights abuse; what relevant files have been communicated to (i) the Home Office and (ii) legal departments; and if he will make a statement. [118018]

Mr. Hain: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office passes specific allegations of criminal offences by foreign nationals that fall within the jurisdiction of the UK courts to the relevant UK authorities. Specific allegations of crimes which may fall within the jurisdiction of International Criminal Tribunals are also passed to the Tribunal concerned.

EU Charter of Fundamental Rights

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the EU intends to submit its planned Charter of Fundamental Rights to the European Court of Human Rights to ensure its compatibility with the European Convention on Human Rights. [118271]

Mr. Vaz: The Cologne Conclusions state that the Charter > should contain the fundamental rights and freedoms as well as the procedural rights guaranteed by the ECHR. To ensure compatibility between the Charter and the ECHR the drafting Convention has invited Council of Europe observers actively to participate in all its meetings. I am not aware of any current plans to submit the Charter to the European Court of Human Rights.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the proposed EU Charter of Fundamental Rights will be incorporated into the Treaties. [118270]

Mr. Vaz: The Council has not yet considered this issue. The Cologne Conclusions state that the question of > whether and if so how the Charter should be integrated into the Treaties will only be considered once the drafting body has presented its draft before the Nice European Council in December 2000.

EU Veto and Commissioners

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) in which areas the British Government intend to retain their veto in EU negotiations; [118107]

(2) what the Government's policy is in respect of reducing the number of Commissioners from the larger EU member states. [118106]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 7 April 2000]: The Government's position on both these issues is clearly set out in the White Paper laid before this House on 15 February.

European Parliament

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy in respect of proportional representation for the European Parliament on a Europe-wide list system. [118105]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 7 April 2000]: The Government see little merit in a Europe-wide list system for the European Parliament. Nor is it an idea which has so far attracted any serious support from other member states in the Intergovernmental Conference.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's policy is in respect of strengthened powers for the European Court of Justice. [118104]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 7 April 2000]: The Government are in favour of a strong and effective European Court of Justice. We support reforms that will allow the Court to cope more quickly and efficiently with a workload that will be increased further with enlargement.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on UK policy towards Sierra Leone. [118769]

Mr. Hain: We are committed to helping the Government and people of Sierra Leone and people of Sierra Leone restore sustainable peace and security after a brutal civil war. We are also encouraging wider support for Sierra Leone from the international community.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development jointly chaired with representatives of the UN and the World bank at a high level conference on Sierra Leone at Lancaster House on 27 March. This resulted in pledges of new assistance totalling more than £40,5 million, including a further £17.5 million from DFID. Donors reaffirmed political support for the peace process, and agreed to speed up implementation of their programmes in Sierra Leone.

We have agreed with the Government of Sierra Leone that a number of the weapons and ammunition which we provided last year for the new Sierra Leone Army can be used temporarily by the new police force. This will help meet an urgent requirement for armed police to deploy in support of the UN peacekeeping force, and help promote peace and security.

We have also decided also to establish a UK-led Military Advisory and Training Team (MATT) of up to 90 personnel. This will provide advice and training to help the Government of Sierra Leone to build new, democratically accountable and effective armed forces, with a strengthened civilian Ministry of Defence. The UK contribution to the MATT will be funded by the FCO, MOD and DFID. The UK will provide the majority of the personnel, but other countries with an interest in building peace in Sierra Leone will also contribute. Work will begin as soon as possible.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Departmental Report

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Solicitor-General when he expects the Law Officers' Department's departmental report to be published. [118810]

The Solicitor-General: I can confirm that copies of the departmental report have been placed in the Libraries of the House today.

John Howes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Solicitor-General for what reason Mr. John Howes of the Treasury Solicitor's staff visited the Law Society building on 2 December 1999; and with whom he had contact. [118288]

The Solicitor-General: On 2 December 1999, Mr. John Howes, a member of the Treasury Solicitor's staff, visited the Law Society's headquarters in Chancery Lane for the purpose of having lunch with an administrator in a client department, the Office of Fair Trading, on whose behalf he had conduct of a case. He had attended the High Court for an interlocutory hearing in that case with the administrator in the morning. In the afternoon he was to attend a meeting in the offices of the Office of Fair Trading in Chancery House, Chancery Lane. Mr. Howes had no other purpose in visiting the Law Society on that date.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Sri Lanka

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what annual contribution Britain has made to aid for Sri Lanka since 1964. [117674]

Clare Short: Bilateral expenditure from the UK is given in the table. The UK also assists Sri Lanka through its contributions to multilateral organisations such as the World bank and the EC.

[1] Aid statistics have been presented on a financial year basis since 1992. In order to give complete coverage, figures for both calendar year 1987 and financial year 1987–88 have been included. The series cannot therefore be summed as this will involve double counting data for the final three quarters of 1997.

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in her Department for each financial year since 1992. [117468]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) has not purchased any works of art. The 13 works of art on display in DFID are on loan from the Government Art Collection, who are responsible for the upkeep of the items.

In 1993–94 the Overseas Development Administration purchased two Howard Hodgkin limited edition lithographs at a total cost of £22,938, including framing and dealer's commission. These prints were purchased with the intention of presenting them to the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development to mark the opening of the new bank building in London. It was, however, subsequently agreed that these lithographs should be loaned to the Government Art Collection and they are at present on display in the DFID London office.

Burma

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with her international colleagues concerning humanitarian aid to Burma via non-governmental organisations. [117608]

Clare Short: My Department is working to promote a more coherent and consistent approach by the international community. This issue is a central element of this Government's discussions with their international partners about policy towards Burma.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has made concerning the transmission of hydroelectric power produced in Karenni state to Rangoon. [117290]

Clare Short: My Department has made no representations on the issue of transmission of hydroelectric power in Burma.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent negotiations her Department has had with the State Peace and Development Council in Burma concerning the operations of non-governmental organisations in (a) Karenni state and (b) Shan state. [117289]

Clare Short: My Department has no dealings with the State Peace and Development Council. But the Government have urged that non-governmental organisations should be allowed unrestricted access within Burma.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the extent to which humanitarian aid has reached the minority tribes of Burma. [117287]

Clare Short: United Nations agencies and non-governmental organisations report regularly on their activities. Projects implemented at community or village level, avoiding Burmese official channels, generally benefit the poor and disadvantaged, as is intended.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent humanitarian assistance her Department has given via non-governmental bodies in Burma. [117286]

Clare Short: The challenge for the international development community is to help poor people in Burma without helping the government that is largely responsible for keeping them poor. We are attempting to work with others to improve the livelihoods of poor and socially excluded people inside, and who have fled from, Burma; provide support to and build the capacity of civil society; reduce human rights abuses; and contribute to tackling serious threats to public health to poor people inside and adjacent to Burma. We shall publish a Country Strategy Paper shortly.

Four projects are currently being implemented by NGOs financed from the Civil Society Challenge Fund, or the Joint Funding Scheme which it replaced:

Population Services International

Condom Social Marketing to improve reproductive health £498,197.

To increase the availability of condoms. To increase the acceptability of condoms. To increased local capacity to prevent AIDS/HIV/STDs.

World Vision

Street and Working Children £451,224

To improve the status and quality of life among children.

World Vision

Community based disability, prevention and rehabilitation £94,045

To improve the well being, status and opportunities of disabled people within their own communities and at the national level.

Health Unlimited

A basic health care programme, Kachin State £250,000

Establish a basic primary health care service that covers 100,000 people in that part of Burma controlled by the Kachin Independence Organisation.

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many lawyers are employed by her Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117809]

Clare Short: My Department does not employ any lawyers to act on behalf of the Department. We buy in legal services from the Scottish Executive and Treasury Solicitors to meet our requirements.

In the implementation of its overseas development assistance programme, DFID employs contract staff to provide legal advisory and executive functions to overseas governments. DFID currently employs eight lawyers on this basis as compared with 21 in 1995.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Utilities Bill

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 10 March 2000, Official Report, column 839W, on the Utilities Bill, if the officials of his Department who met the Other Licensed Operators group on 15 February to discuss the Utilities Bill included secondees to his Department from commercial companies. [115770]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 22 March 2000]: A secondee from the law firm Simmons and Simmons was present at the OLO group meeting on 15 February. All secondees are covered by arrangements to avoid conflicts of interest.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the complete sites for car manufacturing at (a) Longbridge, (b) Dagenham and (c) Cowley are covered by the EU Objective 2 map. [118085]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 7 April 2000]: Most of the Longbridge site and all of the Dagenham site are included in the new Objective 2 European Structural Fund map. The Cowley site is not included in the map.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reason Worcestershire has not been given Objective 2 status. [118699]

Mr. Caborn: Worcestershire did not meet the criteria set out in "The UK Government's proposals for new Objective 2 funding" (URN99/1021). Consequently only a few wards in the county have been included in the Objective 2 map. Those wards were included to make up contiguous areas of sufficient size, as required by the European Commission.

Nissan Renault

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with Nissan Renault about the location of the production line of the new Micra; and when he expects a decision on its location to be made. [117876]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government are working closely with the company over their future investment plans for its Sunderland plant. We are committed to working with the company to build on its current position as the most productive plant in Europe and encourage its further development. Decisions on the timing and location of investment in new models are a commercial matter for the company.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Schools (Shropshire)

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by parliamentary constituency (a) the primary schools and (b) the secondary schools in Shropshire which (i) closed and (ii) opened in the periods (A) 1979 to 1997 and (B) since May 1997. [118527]

Ms Estelle Morris: Since 1983, the earliest year for which we have information available, the primary and secondary schools which have closed and opened in Shropshire (excluding special schools) are as listed. Some schools have closed to reopen as an amalgamated school; some have closed to facilitate a change in age range. It is not possible, from the data available, to provide this information by parliamentary constituencies.

Standards Fund

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the proportion of the Standards Fund available for the year ending 31 March that will be claimed; and what assessment he has made of the reasons for under-claiming. [118236]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 7 April 2000]: The full Standards Fund claim by local education authorities for the year ending 31 March 2000 will not be known until later in the year. Authorities' final claims follow from audited, closed accounts for 1999–2000.

Internet Services (Concessionary Pricing)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what his Department's policy is on concessionary pricing for access for older people to computer training and internet services. [118396]

Mr. Wicks: The Department for Education and Employment is committed to learning later in life and to widening access to ICT skills and the internet. We have provided £252 million through the Capital Modernisation Fund (CMF) to set up Information, Communications Technologies (ICT) Learning Centres which will provide access to ICT including learning materials, the internet and e-mail. One of the key client groups for this initiative is older people and we currently have an early pilot project with Age Concern, Waltham Forest, London, which provides free ICT access and training to people over 50. The project also provides outreach for those who are housebound or in residential care homes.

In addition, the Government are also about to launch the ICT for Employability Initiative which commits £25 million to providing 50,000 courses for people who are in receipt of benefits and have no recent ICT experience. We are also making £15 million available for a scheme—'Computers Within Reach'—to pilot arrangements for those who cannot afford new computers to acquire reconditioned computers. Older learners, including those on the recently launched New Deal 50-plus, who are eligible can receive support under these programmes.

Schools (Volunteer Assistants)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has for the vetting of volunteer assistants helping in schools. [118737]

Ms Estelle Morris: Existing arrangements provide for volunteers working in schools who have regular contact with pupils to be checked against my Department's list of people who are barred from such employment (List 99) and schools must not use the services of anyone who is barred. If a volunteer working in a school will have substantial unsupervised access to pupils on a regular basis the school should also arrange a criminal record check on the person.

There are no new proposals aimed specifically at volunteer assistants working in schools. However, officials in my Department are working closely with their counterparts in other Departments on a number of measures aimed at improving protection for children from unsuitable people. In particular, the implementation of the new arrangements for criminal record checks set out in Part V of the Police Act 1997, the provisions of the Protection of Children Act 1999, and the proposals in Part II of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill. Those measures will apply to volunteers who work with children as well as paid staff.

Special Needs

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the budget for 2000–01 for training teachers in special educational needs. [118556]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 10 April 2000]: Under the Standards Fund for 2000–01, the Department is supporting expenditure to a total of £26 million to provide in-service training in special educational needs. The Teacher Training Agency is also providing £21 million per year in support of in-service courses, and SEN is a priority within this. In addition, the School Improvement Grant for 2000–01 of £290.5 million can be used to support training teachers in special educational needs.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers are being trained to provide for teaching children with special educational needs, broken down by area of specialism. [118557]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 10 April 2000]: All teachers, as part of their initial teacher training, are trained to deal with special educational needs and must meet the standards set in order to gain qualified teacher status. In addition, special educational needs feature in induction standards, which all teachers must meet at the end of their induction year in order to be able to teach.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average time given to SEN training in (a) PGCE and (b) BEd courses. [118558]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 10 April 2000]: This information is not collected centrally. In order to secure qualified teacher status (QTS), students must be able to demonstrate that they can identify pupils with special educational needs, know where to go to get help in order to give positive and targeted support and are familiar with the requirements of the Code of Practice on identification and assessment of SEN, including requirements with regard to the keeping of pupils' records.

Primary Schools

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure the viability of primary schools with small rolls. [118662]

Ms Estelle Morris: The viability of a school may depend on a range of factors and differ according to the particular situation in the area. It is for the local education authority to plan the provision of places in order to maximise parental preference and ensure good-quality education cost-effectively. Local education authorities have freedom in the budgets they delegate to schools to recognise the additional unit costs of small schools. We are establishing a Small School Support Fund from September to enable small schools to pilot innovative approaches to joint working and other forms of collaboration, and funds are being made available over 1999–2001 to provide more administrative support staff in small schools. There is also a presumption against the closure of schools in rural areas, where access to alternative provision may be more difficult.

Leeds LEA

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many times his Department's officials have met headteachers in Leeds (a) since the publication of the Ofsted Inspection report on the local education authority and (b) since the appointment of PricewaterhouseCoopers as consultants on future structures. [118547]

Ms Estelle Morris: As part of its policy outreach function, DfEE's Standards and Effectiveness Unit (SEU) has an adviser with responsibility for maintaining contact with Leeds LEA. The Education Adviser meets headteachers in a range of circumstances, from one-to-one discussions to larger group meetings. In the period between the publication of Ofsted's report and the appointment of PricewaterhouseCoopers four such meetings took place, involving 12 headteachers. To date, since the appointment of PwC, 13 such meetings have taken place, involving 53 headteachers. In addition, following the publication of Ofsted's report, Professor Michael Barber, Head of SEU, and I met a larger group of Leeds heads—approximately 200 in number—to explain DfEE's objectives for Leeds and to hear their views. Subsequently, following PwC's appointment I met five heads on a school visit and Professor Barber has met a group of 45 heads—following up discussion at our earlier meeting.

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many times his Department's officials met PricewaterhouseCoopers staff since their appointment as consultants following the publication of the Ofsted report on Leeds LEA; and for what purpose. [118546]

Ms Estelle Morris: DfEE officials meet on a regular basis with individuals and groups from PricewaterhouseCoopers—including those currently involved in various ways in the Leeds consultancy—and for a range of reasons. These include bidding for intervention consultancy; feedback on such bids; development of framework contracts for intervention work; the discussion of current consultancy loads; and availability for further work.

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what monitoring procedures he will apply to ensure the objectivity of the work of the consultants appointed as a result of the Ofsted report on Leeds local education authority. [118545]

Ms Estelle Morris: PriceWaterhouseCoopers (PwC) are working to a brief agreed jointly by Leeds LEA and DfEE. PwC report progress against that brief fortnightly to a project steering group. The project steering group comprises DfEE officials and Leeds LEA officers and is chaired in rotation.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has regarding (a) grant levels, (b) Government procurement policies and (c) employment service policies to support the new Remploy 21 proposals. [117604]

Ms Hodge: There are no plans to increase Remploy's grant at present. However, Remploy has received an additional £1.5 million, both this year and last, to modernise its factories and to improve progressions to mainstream employment, and a similar amount will be available in 2001–02.

If Remploy wishes to ask for further money to support the implementation of Remploy 21 then I will consider its request.

The Government cannot change their procurement policies, which comply with EC regulations. Remploy 21 is an internal plan for the strategic development of the Company. The Employment Service is working closely with Remploy to deliver the Remploy 21 strategy.

Schools (Somerset and Yeovil)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many temporary classrooms there are in schools in (a) Somerset and (b) the Yeovil constituency; and if he will make a statement. [118640]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not held centrally.

While temporary classrooms perform a useful function in many schools, we are concerned about the length of time some units have been in use. That is why a substantial element of the latest round of the New Deal for Schools programme, which is being announced today, is being targeted at replacing with permanent accommodation those temporary classrooms which are in the poorest condition. Around £150 million is being allocated to support the removal of some 1,500 temporary classrooms.

Local Authority Child Care

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to change legislation to enable local authorities to charge recipients of Working Families Tax Credit for the child care they provide. [118893]

Ms Hodge: Local authorities are currently unable to pass on any of the costs of the child care they provide to parents who receive Working Families Tax Credit or Disabled Person's Tax Credit. Some of these families have sufficient incomes but nevertheless have their child care provided free of charge. We will be introducing an amendment to the Local Government Bill which will allow local authorities to charge for the child care they provide, but will still require them to exempt parents of children in need.

DEFENCE

Armoured Regiments

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in re-roling an armoured regiment into a joint nuclear, biological and chemical weapons regiment; and if he will make a statement. [117490]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The Joint Nuclear, Biological and Chemical (JNBC) Regiment was established on 1 April 1999. It includes the majority of personnel from 1st Royal Tank Regiment who re-roled on return from Germany in summer 1999. However, one squadron and the Reconnaissance Troop from 1st Royal Tank Regiment continue to provide the Armoured Demonstration Squadron element of the Combined Arms Training Centre at Warminster. The JNBC Regiment conducted a series of exercises towards the end of 1999 and declared that it had reached its Initial Operating Capability at the end of December.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in restructuring the armoured regiments; and if he will make a statement. [117488]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The new establishments have been agreed and the additional fourth squadrons will be formed by 2002.

AS90 Regiment

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the creation of the sixth AS90 regiment; and if he will make a statement. [117497]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: 19 Regiment Royal Artillery completed its conversion to AS90 by 19 November last year. It is currently in Colchester, with two batteries, and the current plan is that it will move to Larkhill in 2003–04 when two further batteries currently in Germany will bring the Regiment up to full strength.

Kosovo

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Challenger II tanks are in Kosovo; and how many miles they have covered. [117485]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The UK has 16 Challenger II tanks deployed in Kosovo. Up to 26 March, they had covered some 3,631 kilometres since first deploying on 8 February this year.

Infantry Battalions

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the reconfiguring of infantry battalions to form a third mechanised brigade; and if he will make a statement. [117496]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The two infantry battalions equipped with Saxon vehicles will become part of 12 Mechanised Brigade in April this year, with the armoured infantry battalion joining in August this year.

5 Airborne Brigade

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress his Department has made in converting the 5 Airborne Brigade into a mechanised brigade; and if he will make a statement. [117493]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The headquarters of 12 Mechanised Brigade was operational by the end of December 1999 and it has already taken its armoured regiment under command. The two battalions equipped with Saxon vehicles are joining the Brigade in April this year and the armoured infantry battalion joins in August this year.

Scottish Regiments

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) establishment strength, (b) actual strength and (c) bases of all Scottish regiments. [117666]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 April 2000]: The current UK trained strength, the establishment strength and location of each Scottish regiment, as at 1 March 2000, are shown in the table.

Regiment	Trained strength	UKTAP [1] liability	Location
1 SG (Scots Guards)	555	620	Ballykinler
F COY SG (Scots Guards)	120	108	London
1 RS (Royal Scots)	493	620	Colchester
1 RHF (Royal Highland Fusiliers)	626	670	Fallingbostel
1 KOSB (Kings Own Scottish Borderers)	563	620	Cyprus
1 BW (Black Watch)	516	620	Fort George
1 HLDRS (The Highlanders)	515	667	Catterick
1 A&SH (Argyll & Sutherland Highlanders)	608	620	Edinburgh
Scots Dragoon Guards	432	511	Fallingbostel

[1] The figures are for UK trained army personnel only, and exclude locally employed personnel, Royal Irish (Home Service) personnel, full time reserve service personnel, and Gurkhas.

Aircraft Carriers

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many refits the three Invincible Class carriers will have before they leave service; and if he will estimate the cost of each refit. [118266]

Mr. Spellar: HMS Ark Royal is currently undergoing refit at Rosyth. On current plans for the introduction of replacement carriers, there will be a further two refits of Invincible Class carriers.

The cost of the refits will depend on the scope of work to be undertaken, for which planning work has only recently commenced. The refit of Ark Royal is due to complete in late 2001 at a planned cost of about £116 million, subject to any additional unforeseen work.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the operating cost of each of the Invincible Class carriers in each of the past three years. [118267]

Mr. Spellar: The operating costs of Invincible Class carriers, over the last three financial years, were in the order of:

£ million

	HMS Invincible	HMS Illustrious	HMS Ark Royal
1997–98	46.9	35.8	3.8
1999–2000	51.8	37.5	63.8

These costs include manpower, fuel, port and harbour dues, maintenance and maintenance stores and, in the case of HMS Ark Royal, refit costs, but not the cost of the Air Group when embarked. HMS Invincible and HMS Illustrious have each undergone extended docking/maintenance periods, which largely account for year on year variations. HMS Ark Royal was in a period of extended readiness prior to commencing her refit in May 1999.

Random Drug Tests

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date random drug tests were introduced for service personnel; if he will set for out each regiment the number of positive test results for each major category of illegal drugs; how many (a) soldiers and (b) officers have been subjected to disciplinary action; and how many have been discharged from the services as a result. [117254]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 10 April 2000]: Random compulsory drug testing (CDT) was introduced fully in the Army on 2 May 1995, in the Naval Service on 1 April 1997 and in the RAF on 1 November 1998. The Services regard drug taking as a matter of the utmost seriousness and a positive test will, in most cases, lead to an administrative discharge from the Service. The table shows, by category of illegal drug, the number of positive drug test results, following a compulsory drug test, recorded by other ranks in each of the three Services. No officer has tested positive in any of the Services since CDT was introduced. The second table also records those who have been subsequently administratively discharged.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Welsh Committee Costs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, how much was spent in the last year for which figures are available on (a) the Welsh Grand Committee and (b) the Welsh Affairs Committee. [117821]

Mr. Kirkwood: The costs of meetings of the Welsh Grand Committee at Westminster are not separately identified. In 1998–99 the Committee met once away from Westminster, at Aberaeron, in February 1999. Additional costs to the House of that meeting were £6,417.12.

In respect of the Welsh Affairs Committee, the Committee incurred the following costs during the financial year 1998–99:

Costs incurred	£
Overseas visits	12,646.22
UK visits	21,426.20
Specialist Advisers' Fees and Expenses	10,375.83
Work commissioned, specialist publications, interpretation	884.20
Transcription of evidence	26,224.24
Witnesses' expenses	802.79
Total	72,359.48

Staff costs are not separately identified. Details of the work of the Committee may be found in the Sessional Return for 1998–998, HC 1.

House Sittings

Mr. Radice: To ask the President of the Council how many times the House has sat after (a) 10.30 pm, (b) 11 pm and (c) midnight (i) in the current session and (ii) in each of the last two sessions. [118757]

Mrs. Beckett: The information requested is as follows:

Session	Number of occasions on which House rose between 10:31 and 11.00 pm	between 11:01 pm and midnight	00:01 or later
1999–2000 to date	13	8	16
1998–99	29	19	23
1997–98	55	26	34

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Libraries (Shropshire)

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list for each constituency in Shropshire, the branch libraries which were (a) downgraded, (b) closed and (c) opened (i) between 1979 to 1997 and (ii) since May 1997. [118538]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information about the annual number of libraries opened or closed is not collected centrally. However, data about the number of libraries operated by each library authority are set out in the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy's annual publication "Public Library Statistics", which can be consulted in the House Library, and from which year-to-year changes can be established.

WALES

Employment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of people who have moved from benefits into work in Wales since May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [116235]

Mr. Paul Murphy: In Wales, the number of claimants of Jobseeker's Allowance leaving the claimant count and known to have found work as the reason for ceasing their claim was 281,940 between 8 May 1997 and 10 February 2000, the latest date for which figures are available.

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117805]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Following devolution, the Wales Office was established on 1 July 1999, and employs one lawyer who works four days per week.

In 1995 the former Welsh Office employed 23 lawyers in established posts, excluding trainees and probationers.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Regulatory Reform

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which Minister in his Department has responsibility for regulatory reform; and if he will make a statement. [117424]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 4 April 2000]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) on 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 385W.

Metropolitan Police Searches

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many searches were conducted of (a) white people and (b) ethnic minority persons per 1,000 population in each borough in the Metropolitan police area in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997 and (iii) 1998–99; and for each borough what was (A) the ratio of ethnic minority searches to white searches in (1) 1996, (2) 1997 and (3) 1998 and (B) the ratio of ethnic minority arrests to white arrests in (x) 1996, (y) 1997 and (z) 1998. [118275]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has provided the information requested in the tables.

The table showing population data based on the Metropolitan Police District 1998 mid-year estimate of the 1991 census for London boroughs provides information on population data used in the calculation for the other three tables.

Police (Freemasons)

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure public access to the register of freemasons in the police force. [118224]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We are currently considering our response to the Home Affairs Committee report on Freemasonry and will be publishing our response in due course.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what permission the Animals Procedures Committee has granted for animals to be used in experiments into the effects of active and passive smoking; what species and numbers of animals are to be used in these experiments; and who is funding this research. [118037]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Animal Procedures Committee has no power to grant or refuse applications for authority to use animals in scientific procedures. Such powers are exercised by the Secretary of State.

The Government have a firm policy of not granting applications to research tobacco products and the effects of these products. No applications for work on the effects of active and passive smoking have been approved nor have any such applications been referred to the Animals Procedures Committee for advice.

Operation Nightshade

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 379W, for what reason information about the cost of Operation Nightshade is not available; and if he will make a statement. [118620]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that Operation Nightshade was an operation undertaken by the now disbanded South East Regional Crime Squad (SERCS). Records of the cost of individual SERCS operations are no longer available.

Kosovo

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the fund-raising activities of the KLA in the UK; and what measures he has taken to stop such activities. [118245]

Mr. Straw: The police and Security Service place a high priority on countering all forms of terrorist activity in the United Kingdom, including fundraising. The investigation of any criminal activity is, of course, an operational police matter and responsibility rests with the Chief Officer of the force in the area concerned. I am not, however, aware of any evidence that members of the Kosovo Liberation Army are committing criminal offences in this country.

Immigration and Asylum

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the new asylum seeker support arrangements in part 6 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 will be extended to cover in-country applicants. [118788]

Mr. Straw: The Minister of State, Home Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), announced in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for South Thanet (Dr. Ladyman) on 6 March 2000, Official Report, columns 556–58W, that the new National Asylum Support Service (NASS) would be phased in. The first stage commenced on 3 April, when NASS took over responsibility for support for all new applicants at port, and eligibility for social security and related benefits was ended for all new applicants. The second stage was for NASS to be extended to new in-country applicants. As I told the House on 10 April 2000, Official Report, column 6, we are now ready to begin this plan.

Also on Monday 10 April, my hon. Friend the Minister accordingly made a Direction which sets out that the support scheme in Part VI of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 will apply to all asylum seekers who claim asylum other than on arrival in the United Kingdom on, or after, Monday 17 April and who made the claim while in Kent. I shall announce plans to extend the new support scheme to other parts of the country at a later date.

The direction also applies to asylum seekers who are resident in Kent; who are in receipt of benefits; who get a negative decision on their asylum claim and who go on to appeal. Their benefits will end and they will be eligible for support from the NASS.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

UN Peacekeeping

20. Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Secretary-General of the United Nations on the future role of the United Nations in international peacekeeping. [117186]

Mr. Hain: We have held a number of important meetings with the Secretary General, both in London and New York on UN peacekeeping.

Austria

21. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Austrian Foreign Minister to discuss immigration and related issues. [117188]

Mr. Vaz: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary regularly has discussions with the Austrian Foreign Minister within the framework of the EU, and these have included consideration of asylum and immigration issues, e.g. at the Tampere Special European Council 15–16 October 1999.

Kashmir

22. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the security situation along the line of control; and if he will make a statement on the future of Kashmir. [117189]

Mr. Hain: We are deeply troubled by continued violence in Kashmir, including along the Line of Control. We encourage India and Pakistan to find, through dialogue, a just and lasting solution acceptable to the people of Kashmir.

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss the situation in Kashmir with representatives of the Governments of India and Pakistan; and if he will make a statement. [118506]

Mr. Hain: We regularly raise the situation in Kashmir with the Indian and Pakistani Governments. We will continue to urge them to find, through dialogue, a just and lasting solution acceptable to the people of Kashmir.

Chile

23. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions Ministers have held with the incoming Chilean Government; and if he will make a statement. [117190]

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), held with the incoming Chilean Government during his visit to Chile between 10 and 12 March; and if he will make a statement. [117173]

Mr. Battle: I had wide-ranging discussions with members of the incoming Chilean Government, in particular the President and the Minister for the Economy, Mining and Energy. I also met the Foreign Minister, the Finance Minister, the Minister for the Interior and the Minister for Agriculture. These meetings were all friendly and constructive.

Lebanon

24. Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with Lebanon. [117191]

29. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Lebanon. [117196]

Mr. Hain: We enjoy good relations with Lebanon.

"Your Britain, Your Europe"

25. Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the "Your Britain, Your Europe" campaign. [117192]

Mr. Vaz: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is organising several activities in the coming months to build on the momentum generated by last year's "Your Britain, Your Europe" roadshow to promote the benefits of our membership of the EU. On 19 April, I will chair a seminar at Canary Wharf to assess the prospects for European economic reform following the Lisbon European Council. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office will host an Open

Day on 9 May to mark Europe Day and launch its involvement in the London String of Pearls Millennium Festival. Between May and July, I plan to visit several cities in England, Scotland and Wales that will be holding Europe Days.

Hungary

26. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of Hungary's application for membership of the European Union. [117193]

Mr. Vaz: Hungary has made good progress in its negotiations for membership of the EU since they started in March 1998. Last week we opened another two chapters of the EU acquis communautaire (on Regional Policy and Financial Control), bringing the total number of chapters currently under negotiation to 25 (out of 31). Hungary has provisionally closed seven of those chapters, is near to closing several more, and is working successfully at implementing necessary reforms. We want Hungary to join the European Union as soon as it is able to meet the obligations of membership.

Biological Weapons

27. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prospects for a new protocol to the biological weapons convention. [117194]

Mr. Hain: In my address to the BWC Ad Hoc Group in Geneva on 23 March to mark the 25th anniversary of entry into force of the Convention, I stressed the urgent need for completion of work on the Protocol during 2000. The United Kingdom believes that this remains achievable and that a successful outcome would be a significant addition to international arms control regimes. We shall continue to work actively for this goal.

Drugs Trade

28. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of British policy on combating the trade in illicit drugs. [117195]

Mr. Battle: UK counter drugs activity overseas aims to reduce the availability of Class A drugs in the UK.

Co-ordinated inter-Departmental activity on agreed priorities has achieved results. Examples include increased seizures of heroin (up from 740 kg in 1996 to 990 kg in 1998) and cocaine (up from 1,150 kg in 1996 to 2,800 kg in 1998) through the work of over 50 Drug Liaison Officers in diplomatic posts overseas. Other initiatives such as the use of the West Indian Guard Ship on counter drugs work in the Caribbean have also led to major multi-tonne seizures of cocaine.

Ethical Foreign Policy

30. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress he has made in implementing an ethical dimension in his policy. [117197]

31. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in developing an ethical dimension to his foreign policy; and if he will make a statement. [117198]

Mr. Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Amess), Official Report, column 167.

World Service

32. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects were on the agenda for his most recent meeting with Sir Christopher Bland to discuss the funding of the BBC World Service. [117199]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not met Sir Christopher Bland to discuss the funding of the BBC World Service. He has met Mr. Mark Byford, Chief Executive of the World Service, a number of times, most recently on 16 February 2000. The World Service bid under the 2000 Spending Review was among the matters discussed then.

Europe Day

33. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to mark Europe Day. [117200]

Mr. Vaz: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office will hold an open day to mark Europe Day on 9 May. The open day is part of the String of Pearls Millennium Festival, and aims to make the UK public more aware of the cultures of our European neighbours, and Britain's place in Europe.

Far East POWs

34. Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Ministry of Defence about compensation for former prisoners of war held in Japan. [117201]

Mr. Battle: We have regular discussions with the Ministry of Defence about the issue of compensation for former prisoners of war of the Japanese.

Kosovo

35. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his colleagues from other member states of the European Union on the development of autonomy in Kosovo. [117202]

Mr. Vaz: I have regular discussions with my EU colleagues on all aspects of the situation in and around Kosovo. The EU is committed to the framework for Kosovo set out in UNSCR 1244. This provides for international administration in Kosovo, to be followed by arrangements to provide the people of Kosovo with substantial autonomy and self-government, and, in a final stage, a decision on Kosovo's future status.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the number of Serbs killed in Kosovo since the end of hostilities. [118020]

Mr. Vaz: In my reply to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 1 February 2000, Official Report, column 539W, I reported to the House that there had been 430 reported murders in Kosovo in the period between KFOR's deployment there on 12 June and 25 December last year. I added that we did not have a breakdown of these figures by ethnic origin but of the 383 murders reported up to mid-November, 139 were Serbs. Since 1 January, responsibility for collecting crime statistics in Kosovo has been transferred to UNMIK, who have advised that of the 79 murders reported between 1 January and 31 March this year 19 were Serbs.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the President of the Security Council on the progress made in the implementation of UN Security Council Resolution 1244. [118246]

Mr. Vaz: The UN Security Council has regular discussions on Kosovo and on progress made in implementing UNSCR 1244. The Council was briefed on the situation in Kosovo by Dr. Bernard Kouchner, Special Representative of the Secretary-General, on 6 March. The Council is planning a mission to Kosovo next month.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received regarding the activities of (a) the Kosovo Liberation Army's military police and (b) the KLA Intelligence Service. [118248]

Mr. Vaz: The Kosovo Liberation Army was demilitarised in September 1999 in accordance with UN Security Council resolution 1244. KFOR continues to monitor closely and take action against activities by any parallel structures or institutions in Kosovo which pose a threat to KFOR's or UNMIK's objectives.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to ensure that the OSCE mission in Kosovo registers all the displaced (a) Albanians and (b) non-Albanians to enable them to vote in the forthcoming elections. [118250]

Mr. Vaz: Registration of all displaced persons within Kosovo is the responsibility of the UN/OSCE. The OSCE Head of Mission, Daan Everts, regularly briefs the OSCE Permanent Council and the British Office in Pristina has regular contacts with the task force to obtain updates on this process.

The registration of refugees outside Kosovo has been contracted by the OSCE to the International Organisation for Migration (IOM). The IOM has contacted all governments of countries which shelter Kosovan refugee populations for assistance in disseminating information about the registration for the elections. The Refugee Council has agreed to be the UK's contact point for the IOM.

The international community has urged the FRY authorities to allow Kosovo Serb refugees in the FRY to participate in this exercise and to encourage them to register.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what KFOR's policy is towards those held responsible for crimes against humanity in Kosovo. [118244]

Mr. Vaz: KFOR is mandated to establish a secure environment in Kosovo and to ensure public safety and order until UNMIK can take over responsibility for this task. KFOR works closely with the UN police, including in the investigation of alleged crimes against humanity. KFOR troops are authorised to detain persons indicted by the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY).

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his counterparts from the Contact Group on the security and political situation in (a) Kosovo and (b) Serbia. [118247]

Mr. Vaz: Contact Group Political Directors met in Paris on 28 March, the first meeting of the Group since the start of NATO's air campaign a year before. The discussion covered Kosovo, Serbia and Montenegro. There was a large measure of consensus on the international approach and the Group agreed to meet again later this month or early in May.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many ex-KLA members have been integrated into (a) the Kosovo Police Service and (b) the Kosovo Protection Corps. [118249]

Mr. Vaz: Neither the Kosovo Police Service nor the Kosovo Protection Corps are able to specify how many ex-KLA members they currently employ. Former membership of the Kosovo Liberation Army is not an entry requirement to either of these civilian organisations. The International Organisation for Migration is making considerable efforts to assist former members of the KLA to return to civilian life and enhance their career prospects by the provision of training and job placement support.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the UN Special Representative in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement on the progress of reconstruction in Kosovo. [118254]

Mr. Vaz: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met Dr. Kouchner in London on 30 March. Dr. Kouchner briefed on the security situation and on progress in political and economic reconstruction in Kosovo. He welcomed the UK's proposals to strengthen our contribution to the international policing effort in Kosovo. The Secretary of State and Dr. Kouchner agreed on the importance of taking forward democratisation, including the holding of local elections later this year, and of encouraging growth and investment in the economy in Kosovo.

Montenegro

36. Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to hold further talks with the Russian Government on the current situation in Montenegro; and if he will make a statement. [117203]

Mr. Vaz: I am in regular contact with Foreign Minister Ivanov on a range of Balkans issues. Russia shares our concern to promote stability in the region, including in relation to Montenegro. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier in the House today to the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath), Official Report, column 177.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his European counterparts about efforts to achieve a peaceful resolution of tensions in Montenegro. [118252]

Mr. Vaz: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary is in regular contact with his European and international counterparts on questions of stability in the Balkans, including the situation in Montenegro. These discussions have been reflected most recently in the conclusions of the General Affairs Councils of 20 March and 10 April, and of the Lisbon European Council of 23–24 March.

Non-proliferation Treaty

37. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the position of Her Majesty's Government to be taken at the forthcoming review conference on the non-proliferation treaty. [117204]

Mr. Hain: We are unequivocally committed to the NPT, which remains the cornerstone of our non-proliferation policy. We have made a positive contribution to implementing the agenda agreed at the 1995 NPT Review and Extension Conference and will work for a positive outcome to this year's conference which will advance the goal of nuclear disarmament.

Falklands

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with the new Argentine Administration about the Falkland Islands. [117183]

Mr. Battle: We have established a good working relationship with the new Argentine Government. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has met President De la Rua twice. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has met the Foreign Minister Rodriguez Giavarini.

I attended the Argentine Presidential inauguration on 10 December and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has met the Argentine President and Defence Minister. I know my right hon. Friend has visited the Falklands and I can assure him of our commitment to the question of sovereignty and our commitment to the Islanders' rights to determine their own future.

EU Charter of Fundamental Rights

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is consulting the Scottish Parliament on the proposed EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. [118272]

Mr. Vaz: The Government consult the Scottish Executive on all EU issues that touch on devolved matters, including the proposed EU Charter of Rights. The Executive is, in turn, accountable to the Scottish Parliament.

Human Rights (Egypt)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received regarding the trials of human rights activists in state security courts in Egypt. [118521]

Mr. Hain: In February we received reports that the Secretary General of the Egyptian Human Rights Organisation (EOHR), Hafez Abu Sa'ada, faced the prospect of being tried by a State Security Court. I understand that Hafez has never been formally notified of the charges against him, and we will continue to follow his case closely.

European Courts

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government are taking to try to prevent a conflict between the European Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights. [118310]

Mr. Vaz: The European Court of Justice has for many years taken account of the case law of the European Court of Human Rights, although not formally bound by it. Instances where the two courts have differed in their interpretation of the European Convention on Human Rights have been very rare. The Government are working to ensure that the risk of conflict does not increase as a result of the current discussions about a European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights.

US National Missile Defence System

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 408W, if, in his discussions with the US Secretary of State, he (a) indicated UK (i) opposition to or (ii) support for the proposed national missile defence system and (b) offered UK co-operation over the proposed system. [118318]

Mr. Vaz: The US has not asked for UK assistance in the deployment of the proposed National Missile Defence system, nor would we expect them to do so until after a US decision on whether or not to proceed with its deployment. In our discussions with the US Administration on the subject, we have made clear that the UK would consider any such request carefully. We have also welcomed the fact that the US will make their deployment decision on the basis of a number of important factors, which will include taking account of the views of Allies and the status of the Anti Ballistic Missile Treaty.

Macedonia (Mr. Richard Hudson)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to protect the rights of Mr. Richard Hudson, arrested for a driving offence in Macedonia in August 1999. [118358]

Mr. Hain: Our consular staff in Macedonia have raised Mr. Hudson's family's and our concerns for Mr. Hudson's safety with the Macedonian authorities on a number of occasions, most recently on 30 March when our Vice-Consul called on the Prison Director.

Consular staff have visited Mr. Hudson regularly since his arrest and will continue to do so during his detention. If Mr. Hudson has any concerns about his welfare we will immediately bring them to the prison authorities' attention.

Council of Europe

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the cost of the 27 March Conference at Portsmouth on promoting Europe. [118027]

Mr. Vaz: The Council of Europe Parliamentary and Public Relations Committee's visit to Portsmouth from 25–28 March was organised by the Overseas Office in the House of Commons, and the costs therefore fall within the Administration vote which is a responsibility of the House of Commons Commission.

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make an announcement on the appointment of a United Kingdom member to the Council of Europe Venice Commission. [118863]

Mr. Vaz: I am pleased to announce that I have today appointed Professor Jeffrey Jowell QC as the UK Member of the European Commission For Democracy Through Law (the Venice Commission).

Investment Sanctions (Burma)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what powers he has to impose unilateral sanctions on investment in Burma by UK-based companies. [118676]

Mr. Battle: We believe multilateral measures are more effective than unilateral ones. We have no statutory powers to impose unilateral financial sanctions against Burma in current circumstances, nor are we seeking such powers. Our policy is not to encourage trade or investment in Burma. We regularly review the adequacy of EU measures in Burma. Yesterday we persuaded EU partners to strengthen the EU Common Position on Burma.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 284W, what was the purpose of the High Commissioner's discussion with Roger Crooks since his return to Sierra Leone. [118621]

Mr. Hain: The High Commissioner encountered Mr. Crooks at a social event. Mr. Crooks told the High Commissioner about his refurbishment of a hotel in Freetown, to be used as the headquarters of UNAMSIL.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answers of 3 April 2000, Official Report, columns 283–84W, if notes and minutes of meetings between the High Commissioner and Roger Crooks have, in each case, been conveyed to his Department. [118622]

Mr. Hain: The High Commissioner has had no formal meetings with Mr. Crooks. We would not require him to record social discussions with Mr. Crooks.

Fylingdales

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for amendments to the ABM treaty to enable the upgrading of Fylingdales consequent on the development of the United States' National Missile Defense programme; and if he will make a statement. [118752]

Mr. Vaz: The United Kingdom is not a party to the Anti Ballistic Missile Treaty. The question of any amendments to it is for the United States and Russia. Discussions between them on this issue continue.

Serbia and Montenegro

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effects of the embargo on (a) Serbia and (b) Montenegro. [118281]

Mr. Vaz: A number of sanctions measures are in place against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY). United Nations Security Council resolution 1160 (1998) imposed an arms embargo on the FRY. The EU has imposed a number of measures on the FRY, including an arms embargo, a ban on the sale or supply of equipment which might be used for internal repression or terrorism, a ban on the sale and supply of petroleum and petroleum products, financial sanctions, a ban on flights and a targeted visa ban. These measures have included humanitarian exemptions where appropriate. Montenegro and Kosovo have been exempted from the flight ban and oil embargo, and from some aspects of financial sanctions. The flight ban on the remainder of the FRY has been suspended until the end of August.

Sanctions have put pressure on and isolated the Milosevic regime and its associates, and have limited Milosevic's ability to build up weaponry for use for external aggression or internal repression. Humanitarian exemptions and the targeting of sanctions measures on the regime have been designed to minimise the effect of sanctions on the general public of the FRY.

Britain-Russia Centre

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what formal contact his Department had with the Britain-Russia Centre during the last year; and if he will make a statement on the future relationship between his Department and the Britain-Russia Centre. [118641]

Mr. Vaz: My Department is in regular contact with the Britain-Russia Centre, including being represented in an ex-officio capacity on its Executive Committee. A statement on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's relationship with the Britain-Russia Centre is contained in the report by the Foreign Affairs Committee on Relations with Russia (page 124), copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which members of the Britain-Russia Centre were consulted as part of his Department's last Quinquennial Review into the Britain-Russia Centre. [118665]

Mr. Vaz: The individuals and organisations consulted during the 1999 Quinquennial Review of the Britain-Russia Centre included the Director, all members of staff at the Centre and also members of the Centre's Executive Committee.

Montenegro and Sandjak

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there is an international presence in (a) Montenegro and (b) Sandjak. [118321]

Mr. Vaz: A number of international organisations, NGOs and charities maintain a presence in Montenegro. These include the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and the European Union (principally through the European Community Monitoring Mission).

We are not aware of any international organisations based specifically in the Sandjak area of Serbia.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Devon County Council

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what response he has made to Devon county council's request that certain commitments from their 1999–2000 social services programme can be charged against their 2000–01 gra.. [118500]

Mr. Hutton: I have been asked to reply.

We have advised Devon county council that where they wish to fund ongoing projects from the Promoting Independence: Partnership Grant for 2000–01, they must be able to satisfy their auditors that they are providing the service to additional people, or more effectively than in the previous year.

Housing (South-east)

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to promote housing schemes for key workers in the South East. [116711]

Mr. Mullin: In addition to a number of existing schemes which support low cost home ownership, the Government's Housing Green Paper, "Quality and Choice: A decent home for all", invites views on a new Starter Home Initiative. This is designed to help key workers and others on low incomes to buy their own homes in areas of high house prices and high demand.

Neighbourhood Renewal

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress on developing the national strategy for neighbourhood renewal. [117570]

Ms Armstrong: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister will launch a framework document for consultation on the national strategy for neighbourhood renewal on Wednesday 12 April. The consultation period will run until the end of June. Copies of the document will be available in the Library of the House and in the Vote Office. At the same time we will be announcing offers of funding, worth at least £312 million over the next 10 years to seven more of our New Deal for Communities pathfinder projects to support long-term strategies for change in some of our poorest neighbourhoods.

Empty Properties (North-east)

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many council houses and properties owned by housing associations in the North-east have been empty for six months or more. [117975]

Mr. Mullin: The latest available information reported by local authorities to the Department indicates that on 1 April 1999 some 3,800 local authority owned dwellings (1.3 per cent. of total stock) in the North-east had been vacant for more than six months.

Equivalent figures are not available at regional level for stock owned by Registered Social Landlords.

Local Government Bill

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what environmental appraisal of the Local Government Bill he has carried out; and when he will publish the report of its findings. [118032]

Ms Armstrong: The provisions in the Local Government Bill deal primarily with the internal workings of local authorities and their councillors, and are unlikely to have significant impacts on the environment. For this reason, no substantive environmental appraisal was carried out.

Local authorities will be able to take steps under Part I of the Bill to promote and improve the economic, social and environmental well-being of their areas. However, the environmental impact of these provisions will depend on how authorities choose to exercise their powers. In these circumstances it is not possible to conduct a meaningful environmental appraisal.

Notes on the effects of the Bill on public sector finances and public sector manpower, a summary of the Regulatory Appraisal and a statement of the Bill's compatibility with the European Convention on Human Rights are included in the Explanatory Notes to the Bill.

Driving Licences

Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to change the age limits for holding UK driving licences. [118198]

Mr. Hill: There are no plans to change the age limits for holding driving licences.

There are, nevertheless, plans to establish a more structured approach to pre-test learning to ensure that new drivers have a broader and more extensive experience of driving conditions before they take their test.

This was announced in the Department's new road safety strategy "Tomorrow's Roads—Safer for Everyone" launched on 1 March—together with a number of other measures, and would be subject to public consultation. Copies of the strategy are available in the Library of the House.

Road Improvements (South Wiltshire)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations (a) he, (b) his Ministers or (c) his officials have received from Councillor Ricky Rogers concerning the ACT Parker Plan for road improvements in South Wiltshire; and if he will make a statement. [117994]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 6 April 2000]: The Secretary of State, his Ministers and his officials have not received any representations to date from Councillor Ricky Rogers concerning the ACT Parker Plan.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he intends to take forward and fund further work on the Parker Plan for road improvements in South Wiltshire; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the consultant's report on this scheme. [117993]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 6 April 2000]: I have asked the Highways Agency to place a copy of their consultant's report on the Parker Plan in the Library. There are no plans to fund any further assessment of the route proposals in the Parker Plan.

Homelessness

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many homeless households are in temporary accommodation in (a) the UK, (b) England and (c) Scotland; [118225]

(2) how many households were defined as homeless in (a) the UK, (b) England and (c) Scotland in the last year for which figures are available. [118228]

Mr. Mullin: Information on households accommodated under statutory homelessness provisions in England is published in a quarterly Information Bulletin, "Statistics of local authority activities under the homelessness legislation: England". Table 2 of the Bulletin presents a summary of those households accepted as unintentionally homeless and in priority need under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 and 1996 Housing Acts. Tables 5 and 6 show the number of these households in accommodation arranged by the local authority, as at the end of each quarter.

Copies of the Bulletin are held in the Library and the latest edition, published on 15 March, presents statistics up to and including the fourth quarter of 1999.

For information about other parts of the United Kingdom, I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Housing Registers

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people were excluded from housing registers in (a)1996, (b) 1997, (c) 1998 and (d) 1999. [118227]

Mr. Mullin: This information is not held centrally.

Wildlife

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the annual cost of maintaining the Wildlife Inspectorate; and what plans he has to increase the funds available. [118339]

Mr. Mullin: The annual cost of maintaining the Inspectorate is £158,500; and there are no plans to increase the current level of funding.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the role of the Wildlife Inspectorate; what criteria he uses to monitor its effectiveness; and if he will make a statement. [118338]

Mr. Mullin: The Wildlife Inspectorate's key role is to discharge the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions' inspection responsibilities in accordance with sections 7(6) and 14(5) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in England and Wales; and regulations 9(4) and 9(5) of the Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulations 1997 in the United Kingdom. It undertakes a range of inspection programmes throughout the year to gather and verify information to enable informed decisions on the licensing of trade in endangered species and on the registration of birds of prey.

Wildlife Inspectors also provide specialist advice on species identification to assist the Police and HM Customs and Excise officials during wildlife-related investigations.

The Wildlife Inspectorate plays an important role as a deterrent to those who may otherwise consider acting outside of the legislation. While this deterrent effect is hard to quantify, results from a DETR questionnaire issued to 1,436 registered keepers of Schedule 4 birds in 1993 showed that 89 per cent. of respondents considered inspection programmes to be an effective way of monitoring the registration scheme, and 76 per cent. felt that inspections acted as a significant deterrent against the illegal taking of wild birds.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he will take in response to the recommendations of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee on the effectiveness of wildlife species protection legislation. [118337]

Mr. Mullin: In Autumn 1998, my Department requested the Joint Nature Conservation Committee (JNCC) to review the effectiveness of the species protection Schedules to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The JNCC have recently concluded their review and advise that the Schedules have been generally effective in deterring persecution of the species listed, that they should be retained to give legal protection to appropriate animals and plants and also make a number of recommendations.

I am already actively considering all of the issues raised in the JNCC's recommendations.

The recommendations concerning enforcement of wildlife legislation relate to those made last year by the Partnership for Action Against Wildlife Crime and are being addressed in the context of the Countryside and Rights of Way Bill.

I recognise that improvements to protection for threatened species in the wider countryside beyond the provisions of this Bill may be warranted and am considering what might be appropriate. Some measures may not necessarily require primary legislation, including JNCC's recommendation concerning the Quinquennial Review of the Schedules. I look forward to receiving JNCC's advice at the next Quinquennial Review in due course.

I also agree the problem caused by invasive alien species does need to be addressed and we plan to review the effectiveness of policy concerning non-native species which can present an ecological threat to the United Kingdom's indigenous wildlife.

Mobile Telephone Masts (Croydon)

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many mobile telephone masts (a) over and (b) under 15 metres high there are in the London Borough of Croydon. [118523]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Government do not hold this information.

Departmental Spending

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out detailed future spending plans for his Department. [118771]

Mr. Prescott: I have today published my Department's Annual Report for 2000, and copies have been placed in the House Libraries. The Report sets out the Department's achievements over the last year and its detailed plans to continue to meet our over-arching aim of improving everyone's quality of life, now and for the future.

DIYSO Scheme

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many houses have been allocated to owner/tenants under the DIYSO scheme in each of the last five years; and by which local authorities. [118755]

Mr. Mullin: The total number of units provided under the DIYSO (Do it Yourself Shared Ownership) scheme in England over the last five years is 11,887, of which 1,235 were funded by local authorities and 10,652 by the Housing Corporation.

I will write to the hon. Member with a detailed breakdown by local authority area of the number of units provided through the DIYSO over the past five years.

Housebuilding (England)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the housebuilding requirement figures for each of the English regions not already released. [118767]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Proposed housing provision figures have now been published by regional planning bodies for all the English regions, apart from the North West and the West Midlands which will follow later this year and in 2001 respectively. These proposals will be considered at public examinations into the draft Regional Planning Guidance. Subject to any proposed changes published by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, and consultation on those, final RPG will then be issued. The current target timetable for the publication of final RPG in each of these regions is as follows:

Region	Target for issue of revised RPG
North East	Summer 2001
East Midlands	Summer 2001
South West	Winter 2000–01
West Midlands	Autumn 2002
Yorkshire and Humberside	Summer 2001
North West	End 2001

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what analysis he has made of the age profile of those people likely to inhabit the new houses he has recently announced in the South East and East of England regions. [118766]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Table 4 (page 41) of the "Projections of households in England to 2021" (ISBN 1851123261) sets out the household projections for England by age, gender and marital status. A copy of this publication is in the Library.

Press Officers

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the press officers appointed to his Department since 1997 have (a) declared political affiliations with the Labour Party and (b) have held previous positions (i) with the Labour party and (ii) with Labour party members. [118756]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Press officers in my Department are recruited on merit on the basis of fair and open competition. Political affiliation or previous association with any political party is not relevant and is not recorded.

All civil servants must abide by the Civil Service Code. This makes clear that they should conduct themselves with integrity, impartiality and honesty. In addition, the Civil Service Management Code sets out principles underpinning restrictions on civil servants' participation in political activities.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his Department keeps a register of contaminated land in the UK. [118764]

Mr. Mullin: My Department does not keep a central register of contaminated land in England. Under Part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which institutes a new regime for contaminated land, and which came into force on 1 April 2000 in respect of England, local authorities must keep a register of land in their area which they determine is contaminated land under that regime. Arrangements in the other parts of the United Kingdom are matters for the Northern Ireland departments, the Scottish Executive and the National Assembly for Wales.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has for imposing environmental obligations on owners of land which was contaminated prior to their ownership. [118765]

Mr. Mullin: In 1995, Parliament inserted Part IIA into the Environmental Protection Act 1990. This sets out a new regime for dealing with contaminated land., which came into full effect in England from 1 April 2000. Under it, where land is identified as contaminated and the person or persons who caused or knowingly permitted the contamination cannot be found, the owner or occupier of the land can be required, subject to the provisions of the Act, to carry out the necessary remediation. These provisions restate obligations which have existed as part of the statutory nuisance regime since 1860. Although the Government consider that some amendments to the new regime are desirable, we have no proposals to change this aspect.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will reply to the questions from the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham tabled for answer on 13 and 17 March, Refs 114399, 114400 and 115124. [118763]

Mr. Hill: I replied to the hon. Member's questions 114399 and 114400 on 7 April 2000, Official Report, column 605W. I will reply to question 115124 in due course.

Goods Vehicles (Parish Councils)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to permit parish councils to object to the grant of licences by the Traffic Commissioners; and if he will make a statement. [118642]

Mr. Hill: The possibility of allowing parish councils a statutory right of objection to applications for goods vehicle operator licences was considered as part of the last major review of the operator licensing system, but was ruled out at that time. This review resulted in the present legislation, the Goods Vehicles (Licensing of Operators) Act 1995. Bodies which may object to licence applications, such as local authorities, are listed in the Act. There may be a case for including parish councils in this list, but it is too early to carry out another major review of the system. In the meantime, I hope that local authorities will consult parish councils on applications for operator licences which may affect them and take their views into account in considering whether to use their statutory right of objection.

Traffic Growth

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 3 April 2000, Official Report, columns 322–23W, on traffic growth, if he will list the levels of traffic growth for the South East in (a) 1979, (b) 1990 and (c) for each year from 1992 to date. [118731]

Mr. Hill: The table provides annual growth estimates for all motor vehicle traffic on major roads in the South East of England from 1984 to 1998. Comparable estimates for earlier years and for traffic on minor roads are not available.

Estimated annual traffic growth on major roads in the south-east of England

Year	Estimated annual percentage change in all motor vehicle traffic
1986	9.8
1987	9.5
1988	10.1
1989	5.5
1990	0.3
1991	3.1
1993	0.8
1994	0.7
1995	2.1
1996	4.4
1998	3.8

Note:
Data relate to the area covered by the South East Government Office Region

The relatively small sample sizes used to produce regional traffic growth estimates mean that the confidence intervals around the annual growth estimates provided are larger than for comparable estimates at the national level. The 95 per cent. confidence interval surrounding the above figures is of the order of plus or minus 4 per cent. This compares to an interval of plus or minus 2 per cent. for the same data at the Great Britain level.

The 1999 traffic growth estimates will be published in May.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Domestic Violence

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what responses have been received by the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Board on Family Law to the consultation paper on parental contact in cases where there is domestic violence; and when it is expected that the results of the consultation will be published. [118031]

Jane Kennedy: A report of the results of the consultation will be published by the Advisory Board tomorrow. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Public Trust Office

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Lord Chancellor will announce his proposals for the reform of the Public Trust Office. [118894]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor has today published "Making Changes—The Future of the Public Trust Office", setting out his plans for reform of the Public Trust Office.

The Public Trust Office, an executive agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department, was established in 1994. It incorporates three separate functions:

Its Mental Health Sector deals with matters under Part VII of the Mental Health Act 1983: The Sector's Protection Division overseas the activities of private receivers appointed by the Court of Protection to manage financial affairs for mentally incapacitated individuals. Its Receivership Division manages the financial affairs of mentally incapacitated people who have no one else to manage their finances. The Sector also deals with matters under the Enduring Powers of Attorney Act 1985.

The Court Funds Office is a banking and investment service for funds deposited in court. These are held under jurisdiction of the Chief Executive of the Public Trust Office, acting as Accountant General of the Supreme Court.

The Public Trustee acts as an executor or trustee in respect of estates and settlements.

In November 1999, the Lord Chancellor published the Quinquennial Review of the Public Trust Office. He welcomed the Review's clear diagnosis of the challenges faced by the Public Trust Office, agreed that radical change was required and undertook to explore the Review's recommendations in a programme of change.

The Change Programme for the Public Trust Office, announced today, will improve services received by clients and, in particular, the vulnerable. The Government's overriding objective will be to ensure that the interests of the Public Trust Office's clients are fully protected. The changes proposed will deliver a step change in the quality of services. This will be achieved through centralised planning and monitoring, balanced by service delivery through those agencies which are best placed to meet the needs of clients. Where this means establishing new partnerships with the private and voluntary sectors, we will do this. Throughout the reforms, we will target resources on those clients who are most in need.

The Lord Chancellor will separate the disparate functions of the existing Public Trust Office, transferring the Trust function and the Court Funds Office to the bodies best placed to provide them: the office of the Official Solicitor to the Supreme Court and the Court Service respectively. The Office's remaining core functions of oversight of receivers and functions in relation to Enduring Powers of Attorney will be reviewed to provide a cohesive and greatly improved service.

The Lord Chancellor will ensure that he retains responsibility for the most vulnerable of Public Trust Office clients. There will be clear lines of ministerial accountability for those functions remaining within the Lord Chancellor's Department and he will establish and monitor clear standards of service provision both for those functions remaining within the Department and for those services provided in future by other parts of the public sector, and in the voluntary and private sectors.

The Lord Chancellor will want to be satisfied that reform does not entail placing a greater financial burden on some of the poorest and most vulnerable members of society. The new regime will deliver much improved value for money. Services received will be tailored to the individual's requirements; there will be much greater advice and assistance available; and it will genuinely protect the vulnerable. A new clearer and simpler fee system will be introduced and backed by the introduction of fee remissions for those who cannot afford to pay for the services they receive.

The Lord Chancellor envisages that plans for the more significant changes proposed will be taken forward during 2000–01 with the intention that the Public Trust Office would cease to exist as a separate and distinct Office from April 2001 onwards.

The Change Programme reforms to the Public Trust Office will also play an important part in paving the way for the Government's "Making Decisions" policy proposals to modernise and clarify the law governing decision making by and on behalf of the mentally incapacitated. The Government is committed to legislating on "Making Decisions" when parliamentary time allows, and the Change Programme will provide a firm basis for these reforms.

The Lord Chancellor welcomes the views of all those who wish to comment on the reforms that he proposes to take forward.

Copies of the booklet "Making Changes—The Future of the Public Trust Office" have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in his charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by his Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116908]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 31 March 2000]: Northern Ireland public sector property centres were surveyed as regards properties and produced these returns:

Number of vacant properties—5,995

Vacant as percentage of total—4.4 per cent.

All property centres are required to have a strategy which incorporates justifying the retention of each property held. These strategies are monitored by the Central Advisory Unit of Valuation and Lands Agency. Any property which is identified as being surplus to business requirements must be disposed of as quickly as possible in accordance with the guidelines published by Central Advisory Unit.

In the case of the housing sector, which accounts for most of the vacant property in Northern Ireland, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has a number of ongoing initiatives which set out objectives and targets for reducing the number of voids.

Train Chassis Corrosion

Mr. Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the cost to public funds arising from taking trains out of service because of chassis corrosion problems in the last three years. [117837]

Mr. Ingram: Translink have informed the Department of Regional Development that the only known cost is £615,706 for repairing corrosion to train carriage bogies.

Rateable Values

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidance given to valuation officers when determining the rateable value of buildings in Northern Ireland. [117678]

Mr. Ingram: Rating is a wide-ranging and continually evolving area of valuation law and practice. It is subject to extensive and ongoing statutory provision and a substantial body of case law.

Against this background the guidelines available to valuation officers, the majority of whom are professionally qualified surveyors, is equally extensive and wide-ranging, in terms of source and content.

In the circumstances it would be impossible to assemble all the material which is of relevance to, and impacts on, the valuation process.

Paramilitary Offences

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many paramilitary offences have been committed since the signing of the Belfast Agreement by (a) Republican and (b) Loyalist organisations, broken down by specific offence; and if he will make a statement. [117662]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 4 April 2000]: The information requested can be found in the table:

	By Loyalist	By Republican	UK	Total
1. Incidents
Deaths	14	35	1	50
Shooting incidents	n/a	n/a	—	[1]311
Bombing incidents	n/a	n/a	—	[1]188
2. Casualties as a result of paramilitary attacks
Shooting	92	52	—	144
Assaults	182	93	—	275

[1] It is not always possible to confirm the attribution for these incidents.

Note:

It should also be noted that shooting incidents will include those incidents resulting in the 144 casualties shown in number 2 of the table and that there may have been more than one casualty in a single shooting incident.

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117819]

Mr. Ingram: Some 108 lawyers are employed by the Northern Ireland Office currently. In April 1995 the numbers were 94. In addition to these figures, four lawyers are currently on career breaks and two were on career breaks in 1995. Under existing arrangements lawyers working under the direction of the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland and the Crown Solicitor for Northern Ireland are formally employed by the Northern Ireland Office.

Fire Brigade

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if new recruits to the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade receive training in dealing with civil disturbance. [118001]

Mr. George Howarth: New recruits to the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade receive training in dealing with civil disturbance incidents along the same lines as new recruits to other Fire Brigades in Great Britain.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civil disturbance call-outs the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade has attended in each month since 1 January 1998. [118002]

Mr. George Howarth: The table sets out the number of call-outs attended by the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade where the Brigade met with hostility. These include incidents when children threw stones at appliances.

Civil disturbances attended by Northern Ireland fire brigade January 1998-February 2000

Month	1998	1999	2000
January	17	23	26
February	20	21	12
March	46	72	—
April	35	59	—
May	58	69	—
June	59	54	—
July	743	79	—
August	54	75	—
September	33	35	—
October	47	43	—
November	29	17	—
December	15	8	—
Total	1,156	555	38

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what differences apply to the (a) financial and (b) leave arrangements within the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade in respect of (i) whole-time fire officers and (ii) retained fire officers. [118003]

Mr. George Howarth: Fire-fighters in Northern Ireland are entitled to the same rate of pay and leave as fire-fighters in Great Britain. Northern Ireland fire-fighters also receive a Northern Ireland allowance of four days additional leave. The allowance works out at £24.99 a week for whole-time fire-fighters and £1.24 extra per incident attended for retained fire-fighters. Neither the allowance nor the additional leave entitlement applies to new recruits who joined from 3 August 1999.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what differences in respect of duties, including civil disturbance call-outs, apply between (a) whole-time and (b) retained fire officers who are remunerated at different rates within the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade. [118004]

Mr. George Howarth: There are no differences in the duties of whole-time and retained fire-fighters.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what role the Labour Relations Agency played in the 1986 agreement to pay a Northern Ireland Allowance to Northern Ireland Fire Brigade officers; and if that allowance is still paid. [118005]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1986 the Labour Relations Agency acted as arbitrator in a dispute concerning the level of Northern Ireland Allowance being paid to fire-fighters. The allowance is still being paid to all personnel employed prior to 3 August 1999.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade has had a two-tier contract of employment pay system imposed; and if he will list those fire brigades in Great Britain which operate two-tier systems. [118093]

Mr. George Howarth: In November 1998 the Chief Fire Officer of the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade wrote to the Fire Brigades Union telling them of his intention to issue new Contracts of Service to new recruits to the Fire Brigade. The new contracts, which were introduced for recruits joining from 3 August 1999, maintained the same conditions re basic pay, etc., that apply across the United Kingdom for all fire-fighters but removed a number of local conditions, one of which was the payment of the Northern Ireland Allowance. The contracts of existing fire-fighters were not affected. There is of course room for other brigades to have local pay enhancements and conditions—for example, different rates of London Weighting Allowance.

Appointment Panels

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who are the members of the appointment panels which are sitting to oversee the appointment of (a) the Northern Ireland Parliamentary Ombudsman and (b) the Head of the Northern Ireland Civil Service; and what are their respective (i) professions and (ii) nationalities. [118000]

Mr. Mandelson: The panel to select a new Ombudsman for Northern Ireland comprised Mr. John Semple, Head of the Northern Ireland Civil Service; Mrs. Margaret Elliott, a Solicitor and NI Civil Service Commissioner; and Dr. Maurice Hayes, a retired senior civil servant (former Permanent Secretary of DHSS in Northern Ireland) and a former Northern Ireland Ombudsman. In respect of the appointment of a new Head of the Northern Ireland Civil Service to take over from Mr. John Semple when he retires this summer, the decision lies with me subject to the approval of the Prime Minister. However, I have appointed a panel to offer advice. The panel comprises Mr. Muir Russell, Permanent Secretary of the Scottish Executive; Dame Valerie Strachan, a retired senior civil servant (former Chairman of HM Customs and Excise); and Mr. Paddy Mullarkey, a retired Irish civil servant (former Secretary General of the Department of Finance). In the past a retired senior Northern Ireland Civil Servant has assisted in the selection process for a high level post in the Irish public service. The nationality of each panel member was not ascertained to appointment to the respective panels.

HEALTH

Neurological Consultants

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of neurological consultants in each NHS region in each of the last 10 years. [116272]

Mr. Denham: The latest available information is shown in the table.

Hospital medical consultants in neurology by regional office 1988–1995

Notes:
1. Figures rounded to nearest 10.
2. '0' denotes 5 or less.
3. Regional totals may not equal England figure because of rounding and because some staff work in more than one region. These staff are counted under each region where they work, but only once in the England figure.

Prostate Cancer

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase funding of (a) research into screening for and (b) educational awareness of prostate cancer. [101686]

Yvette Cooper: I have recently announced £1 million funding for urgent research studies into prostate cancer. This is in addition to the extra £800,000 we have already committed for new prostate cancer research, which includes a £277,000 feasibility study for a trial of treatments of localised prostate cancer detected early by a prostate cancer screening test. Funding for the main trial will be considered in the light of the findings from the feasibility study.

A range of information on men's cancers—including prostate cancer—is already freely available. Additionally, general practitioner guidelines on urgent referrals of patients with suspected prostate cancer will be published shortly, and outcomes guidance on urological cancers—including prostate cancer—will be commissioned by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence within the next two years.

Dental Services (London Area)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of NHS dentists working in the Greater London Authority area. [117822]

Mr. Hutton: Most people in London can get National Health Service dentistry. Since September 1998 the number of dentists in the London area has increased by 112 and there are now nearly 45 dentists in the General Dentist Service per 100,000 population. This is the highest proportion in the country.

We recognise that in some areas of London it remains difficult to access NHS dental care. Positive steps have already been taken to address this problem. NHS dentists in the London area have had Investing in Dentistry grants amounting to £660,000 and a dental access centre has been opened and three proposals for dental access centres are currently being considered by the NHS Executive. Discussions will continue with the profession at local level to improve and modernise the service.

Cosmetic Surgery

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the 10 commonest cosmetic surgical procedures carried out (a) in the NHS and (b) in the private sector in the last three years. [118193]

Ms Stuart: Surgery which is purely for cosmetic purposes is not normally undertaken by the National Health Service. Hospital Episode Statistics show that the 10 most common plastic surgery procedures carried out in the NHS in 1998–99 and the two previous years are as in the table.

Information on cosmetic surgery carried out in the private sector is not held centrally. However, details of some of the procedures undertaken in independent hospitals, including cosmetic surgery, are available in "The Public-Private Mix of Acute Hospital Care" by Professor Brian Williams (November 1999), a copy of which is in the Library.

[1] An FCE is defined as a period of patient care under one consultant in one health care provider. The figures do not represent the number of patients, as one person may have several episodes within the year. These figures represent a count of all FCEs where the procedure was mentioned in any of the four operation fields in the HES data set.

Note:

Figures for 1997–98 and 1998–99 are provisional, no adjustments have as yet been made for shortfall in data (i.e. the data are ungrossed). But the data for 1996–97 are grossed for both coverage and unknown/invalid clinical data.

Diptheria-tetanus Booster Vaccine

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the supplies of diptheria-tetanus booster vaccine will return to the levels of 1997; and what percentage of five-year-olds were vaccinated for diptheria and tetanus immunisation in the last year for which figures are available. [118190]

Yvette Cooper: United Kingdom supplies of diphtheria-tetanus (DT) pre-school booster vaccine have increased year on year since 1996–97 reaching over 890,000 doses in 1998–99. Both manufacturers of the DT vaccine used in the United Kingdom's childhood immunisation programme experienced severe, but different, manufacturing problems during last year which resulted in temporary shortages of this vaccine. The Department has, from the beginning of this year, secured another source of supply for the vaccine and sufficient supplies are now available to allow the levels issued in the previous three years to be reached very shortly.

In 1998–99, the latest year for which figures are available, 512,000 children in England aged under five received reinforcing doses of vaccine against diphtheria and tetanus. This represents about 81 per cent. of the target population of pre-school children for these vaccinations.

Hepatitis C

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the health authorities which currently fund the use of interferon and ribavirin for the treatment of hepatitis C; and what is the estimated cost of offering this nationally; [118196]

(2) what plans he has to create a national standard of care that will be available to all sufferers of hepatitis C. [118195]

Yvette Cooper: Details of individual health authorities' funding policies on particular drugs are not held centrally, but there is currently some inconsistency between health authorities' policies on the combination drug therapy interferon alpha plus ribavirin for the treatment of hepatitis C. We have commissioned the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) to consider the use of combination therapy to treat hepatitis C. Their findings are expected in September. They are also looking at evidence-based clinical guidelines for the management of patients with hepatitis C drawn up by the professions with funding from the Department. The recommendations of NICE, and the clinical guidelines, will provide authoritative guidance to healthcare commissioners and clinicians, creating a national standard of care.

The cost of offering combination therapy nationally cannot be estimated with accuracy because of variations such as the length of treatment required. Estimates are between £10 million and £18 million per annum, not including the price of tests and related capital costs.

Adoption

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children from overseas have been adopted by British citizens living in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years. [118378]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not hold information about the number of children adopted from overseas, only about the number of inter-country adoption applications that it has processed. These will account for the majority of such adoptions and are set out in the table:

Year	Number of inter-country adoption applications processed by Department
1997	223
1998	258
1999	277

NHS Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will end the practice of inviting hon. Members to comment on the shortlists for appointments to chair NHS trusts and health authorities; [118631]

(2) what plans he has to review the role of regional NHS chairmen; [118634]

(3) pursuant to his Department's press release of 22 March on the NHS appointments system, when he will implement his proposal to devolve decisions about local appointments out of the hands of ministers; [118629]

(4) what plans he has to meet the Commissioner for Public Appointments to discuss her report "Public Appointments to NHS Trusts and Health Authorities"; [118632]

(5) what plans he has to commission a fundamental look at the role and purpose of NHS boards and the range of skills and experience required in appointees, in line with the recommendation of the Fritchie report on NHS appointments; [118628]

(6) what steps he has taken to draw up fresh job descriptions and person specifications for chairs and non-executive directors of NHS trusts and health authorities in line with the recommendations of the Fritchie report; [118638]

(7) if he will end the practice of seeking nominations from local authorities for appointments to NHS boards. [118630]

Ms Stuart: We are currently considering the findings and recommendations of the Commissioner's report and a detailed response will be made in due course. We have no plans to meet the Commissioner at present.

Hospital Infections

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the cost per year to the NHS of hospital-acquired infections. [118563]

Yvette Cooper: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for North Devon (Mr. Harvey) on 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 354W.

Logistics Management

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to pilot the clinical applications for logistics management, developed at the Royal Shrewsbury hospital, in other NHS trusts; and if he will make a statement. [118673]

Yvette Cooper: Ministers welcome and want to encourage examples of good practice in the National Health Service. Systems such as Royal Shrewsbury hospital's Clinical Applications for Logistics Management (CALM) system will be studied further by the new patient access teams set up by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. In addition, work is shortly to be commissioned by the Department on improving bed management.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment the Emergency Services Advisory Team has made of the clinical applications for logistics management used at the Royal Shrewsbury hospital; and if he will make a statement. [118674]

Yvette Cooper: During 1997, the Emergency Services Advisory Team (ESAT) evaluated all bed management systems in the National Health Service, including the Royal Shrewsbury hospital's Clinical Applications for Logistics Management system.

I understand that the report by ESAT published in 1998 commended Royal Shrewsbury hospital's innovative, advanced bed management system.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the clinical applications for logistics management used at the Royal Shrewsbury hospital; and if he will make a statement. [118675]

Yvette Cooper: I am aware that the Clinical Applications for Logistics Management (CALM) system used by Royal Shrewsbury Hospital National Health Service trust was identified as an example of good practice in a National Audit Office report. The system was also awarded beacon status in 1999.

I understand that a visit has been planned by the Department's head of hospital development to the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital in the near future to make a further evaluation of the CALM system.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of patients annually who would not have operations cancelled if the clinical applications for logistics management, as used by the Royal Shrewsbury hospital, was implemented nationwide. [118672]

Yvette Cooper: Ministers are aware of the reduction in cancelled operations achieved by the Clinical Applications for Logistics Management (CALM) system at the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital. Other National Health Service hospitals operating their own independent decision support systems for effective bed management also claim improvements in lowering the number of cancelled operations.

Successful replication of systems such as CALM depends at least as much on people, knowledge, commitment and local circumstances as on specific technology. Therefore, it is not possible to extrapolate Royal Shrewsbury Hospital's reduced figures for cancelled operations to all other NHS hospitals.

NVQ (Care)

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people who registered for NVQ Level 2 in Care completed and passed the registered course; and what percentage this represented of the number who registered, in the last year for which figures are available; [118635]

(2) how many care assistants have (i) registered for and (ii) completed NVQ Level 2 in Care in (a) nursing homes and (b) residential homes, in the last year for which figures are available; [118637]

(3) what is the average period taken between registration and completion of NVQ Level 2 in Care. [118636]

Mr. Hutton: Information is not available on numbers of care assistants registering for or completing NVQs by type of care provision. Nor are data available on times of completion for individual candidates.

However, data are available showing that during the 12 month period 1 October 1998 to 30 September 1999, 35,742 candidates were registered for an NVQ Level 2 Care award in the United Kingdom. In the same period, 18,135 candidates received their certificates for this award.

We have been advised by the National Training Organisation for Social Care that research undertaken on the completion of NVQs has shown that the average period taken to complete an NVQ Level 2 in Care is 18 months.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service Appointments

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what is her Government's practice relating to the nationality of personnel who are involved in making appointments to senior positions within the United Kingdom Civil Service; and if he will make a statement. [118092]

Mr. Stringer: Appointments to the Senior Civil Service by open competition are governed by the Civil Service Commissioners' Recruitment Code. The Code does not include nationality requirements for personnel involved in making such appointments.

Appointments to the Northern Ireland Civil Service are a matter for the Northern Ireland Civil Service Commissioners.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117817]

Mr. Morley: My Department employed 44 lawyers as at 31 March 2000. This figure does not include: three lawyers on career break; two lawyers on maternity leave; two lawyers on secondment and three lawyers on loan to other Government Departments.

On 31 March 1995, my Department employed 55 lawyers. This figure does not include two lawyers who were on secondment.

Organic Food

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent assessment he has made of the demand for organic food in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [118569]

Mr. Morley: We expect the demand for organic produce to be sustained and to that end have made provision for increased expenditure on conversion aid in the England Rural Development Plan.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance he will make available to farmers who wish to convert to organic farming before the Organic Farming Scheme reopens. [118576]

Mr. Morley: We are continuing to fund the provision of free conversion advice, including on-farm visits, by the Organic Conversion Information Service.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make new money available to fund organic conversion between now and April 2001. [118575]

Mr. Morley: We are projecting expenditure of £12 million for this financial year on conversion aid in England. I have no plans to increase that figure.

Beef

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps the Government are taking to secure a lifting of the ban on the export of British beef to the EU. [117187]

Ms Quin: British beef can be exported to all member states except France. The European Commission has begun legal proceedings against the French Government for their failure to lift their ban on the import of British beef. The UK Government have made it clear to the Commission that they expect these proceeding to be pursued vigorously.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence his Department has collated on the extent to which beef carcases retaining the spinal cord are being imported from other EU countries. [118666]

Ms Quin: Inspections of beef imported from the EU are carried out in all licensed meat plants in the UK. Since January 1998, when the Specified Risk Material Order 1997 came into force requiring imported carcases not to contain any specified risk materials, one of these inspections in mid-1999 has identified seven beef forequarters in a single consignment from which the spinal cord had not been completely removed.

Fishing Quotas

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 588W, if the reallocation of quota involved resulted in a reduction of (a) quota and (b) resources available to non-foreign-owned vessels; and if he will make a statement. [118019]

Mr. Morley: Vessels which rejoined the UK fleet in the early 1990s, having previously been de-registered as a result of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988, had incomplete track records for the period they had been off the register. To accommodate their return, the non-sector's quota allocations for Western hake and Area VII anglers and megrim for 1992, 1993 and 1994, which reflected fishing activity in a preceding rolling three year reference period, were adjusted as shown in the table.

Pre adjustment	2,578	1,642	485
Post adjustment	3,837	2,361	974
1993
Pre adjustment	3,228	1,512	833
Post adjustment	3,928	1,707	1,107
1994
Pre adjustment	3,002	1,548	1,002
Post adjustment	3,193	1,548	1,057

Adjustments in subsequent years have been minimal as most of the vessels concerned had returned to the register by the end of 1994.

TREASURY

Taxation

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual revenue raised from tax on bank and building society accounts from accounts taxed at (a) the starting rate of tax, (b) the basic rate of tax and (c) the higher rate of tax in each of the last three years. [117235]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Banks and building societies are required to deduct income tax at the lower rate of 20 per cent. before paying interest to savers. This satisfies the tax liability of lower and basic rate taxpayers. The additional tax liability of higher rate taxpayers (the difference between 20 per cent. and 40 per cent.) is administered through Self Assessment. Estimates for the liabilities are shown in the table. The increase over this period reflects higher deposit levels and interest rates.

Amounts of tax: £ billion

	Tax on interest liable at 20% lower rate	Excess over 20% lower rate	Total tax liability from bank and building society interest
1996–97	1.8	0.4	2.2
1997–98	2.3	0.5	2.8
1998–99	3.0	0.7	3.7

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for which (a) benefits and (b) services a successful claim for Working Families Tax Credit is a passport. [117620]

Mr. Timms: The major central Government passports for many Working Families Tax Credit recipients are help with NHS costs such as prescription charges, dental treatment, sight tests and hearing aids and Social Fund payments to help with maternity costs or funeral expenses.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to the Exchequer in a full year of the Working Families Tax Credit. [117838]

Mr. Timms: The projection for 2000–01 is £4.8 billion. This takes into account (a) the increase in the child tax credit in awards made from June 2000, and (b) the introduction of the disabled child tax credit in awards made from October 2000.

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in Houghton and Washington, East receive the Working Families Tax Credit; and what has been the expenditure on working families tax credit for that area since it was introduced. [117976]

Mr. Timms: It is estimated that 2,200 families in Houghton and Washington, East were awarded the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) by the end of February 2000. There is insufficient data available to provide a reliable estimate of the total expenditure on these awards.

Car Taxes

Ms Oona King: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what taxes are payable on the purchase of (a) new cars imported from other EU member states, (b) cars less than six months old imported from other EU member states and (c) used cars. [117854]

Mr. Timms: UK VAT at 17.5 per cent. of the purchase price is payable when a private individual purchases a car which is either less than six months old, or has travelled less than 6,000 kms, in another EU member state and brings it to the UK. If the car is more than six months old and has travelled more than 6,000 kms, VAT will be payable in the member state in which the purchase took place. No UK VAT will be payable.

Personal Pension Plans

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people paid into personal pension plans and how many schemes attracted tax relief at (a) the starting rate, (b) the standard rate and (c) the higher rate in each of the last three years; [117231]

(2) what was the total annual cost to the Treasury of providing tax relief on personal pension plans at (a) the starting rate, (b) the standard rate and (c) the higher rate in each of the last three years. [117230]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Estimates of the cost of tax relief for contributions to personal pensions and such information as is available on the number of contributors by rate of income tax are given in the tables.

	Number
Employees[1] making contributions to personal pensions	Approximately [2]3,000,000 of which, higher rate taxpayers	300,000

[1] Based on aggregate information provided by plan managers and survey data.
[2] All benefit from repayment of basic rate tax claimed by their pension provider, including those who are non-taxpayers or pay tax at less than the basic rate.

Number of self-employed [1] making contributions to personal pensions

Thousand

Rate of income tax	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Non-taxpayers	290	310	280
Lower rate	170	170	160
Basic rate	690	680	660
Higher rate	210	250	260

Contributions by the self employed
Lower rate	30	30	30
Basic rate	200	210	210
Higher rate	420	500	530

[1] On the basis that under present arrangements, employers' contributions are not taxable as a benefit in kind of the employees. Figures assume that the proportion related to higher rate taxpayers is the same as that observed for employees' contributions.
[2] Basic rate tax relief in respect of the employees' part of the National Insurance rebate received by around 3.7 million employees with appropriate personal pensions.

Medical Insurance

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of medical insurance policies held by the over-60s which have not been renewed since the abolition of tax relief. [117715]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 4 April 2000]: None. There is no reliable information available to the Government about renewals by the over-60s of their private medical insurance policies for any period since the tax relief was abolished in 1997.

Income Tax Rates

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers in 2000–01 he estimates will have a marginal income tax rate of (a) 10 per cent., (b) 22 per cent. and (c) 40 per cent.; what proportion of each of these groups works (i) part-time and (ii) full-time; if he will set out the calculations underlying his answer; and if he will make a statement. [117826]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 6 April 2000]: The table gives the figures requested for 2000–01.

Marginal income tax rate	Number of taxpayers (million)	Percentage working
		Full-time [1]	Part-time [1]
10 per cent.	2.7	12	56
22 per cent.[2]	22.6	66	12
40 per cent.[3]	2.7	89	5

[1] Those working full-time or part-time include both employees and the self-employed
[2] Includes taxpayers whose marginal rate is the lower rate on savings income or the ordinary dividends rate
[3] Includes taxpayers whose marginal rate is the higher dividends rate

These estimates are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes and Family Expenditure Survey and are consistent with the March 2000 Budget.

Industrial and Provident Societies

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of the responses to the recent consultation exercise on the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts; and for what reasons the results have not yet been published; [118200]

(2) if, after discussions with the Co-operative Movement are completed, he intends to propose amendments to the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts. [118201]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Mr. Love) on 20 March 2000, Official Report, column 446W.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Statistics

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single parents in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1999 were in receipt of social security benefits, excluding child benefit or its equivalent; and what was (i) the cost of such benefits and (ii) the proportion of the total social security budget which they constituted in each of these years. [117534]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Number of claimants

	1970	1980	1999
Benefit:
Income Support (Supplementary Benefit in 1970 and 1980)	191,000	316,000	[1]1,030,000
Jobseeker's Allowance (Income based)	n/a	n/a	14,000
Housing Benefit[2]	n/a	n/a	1,016,000
Family Credit (Family Income Supplement in 1971 and 1980)	15,000	52,000	[3]405,000
Widowed Mothers Allowance[4]	100,000	79,000	47,000
Annual cost[5] (£ billion)	1.1	£1.4	9.1
Proportion of DSS budget (percentage)	3	3	9

[1] This is the number of "single Income Support claimants with dependants". Therefore this figure includes some who are claiming Income Support (IS) due to disability or being over pension age as well as those claiming IS due to being a lone parent.
[2] Figures for Housing Benefit are for 1998. The current Housing Benefit scheme was introduced in 1988. Prior to 1988 figures were not collected separately for lone parents and so they have not been included in the table.
[3] Figures for Family Income Supplement are for 1971 and 1980. Figures for Family Credit (FC) only go up to September 1999. From October 1999, FC was replaced by Working Families Tax Credit.
[4] Figures for Widowed Mothers Allowance (WMA) are for December 1971, November 1981 and March 1999.
[5] The expenditure figures are given in real 1999–2000 prices. They are based on 1970–71, 1980–81 and 1999–2000 with the following exceptions: WMA is based on 1971–72 and 1981–82. FIS is based on 1981–82 and FC refers to 1998–99 (ie the last full year of FC). Therefore the proportion of expenditure for 1970–71, 1980–81 and 1999–2000 are approximate figures.

Notes:
1. Estimates of the numbers on benefit are based on 1 per cent. and 5 per cent. scans of benefit computer systems. These scans select 1 per cent. or 5 per cent. of the relevant cases and so are subject to some degree of sampling error.
2. Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. Some lone parents will be in receipt of other benefits such as IB, SDA or Industrial Injuries Benefit. We have not included them in this table, as we cannot separately identify lone parents on the computer systems for these benefits.
4. Figures cannot be added together as some cases will be in receipt of more than one of these benefits.

6. Housing Benefit: Housing Benefit Management Information System, annual 1 per cent. sample inquiry, taken as at the second Thursday of May 1998.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of households headed by a single mother are currently in receipt of (a) housing benefit, (b) other social security benefits, excluding child benefit, (c) income support, (d) social security loans and (e) free school meals. [117531]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Percentage

	Proportion of all lone mothers in receipt
Housing Benefit	59
Other Social Security Benefits	28
Income Support	60
Social Fund Loans	24
Free School Meals	[1]—

[1] Information for free school meals is not available by family type.

Notes:

1. Estimates of the numbers on benefit are based on 1 per cent. and 5 per cent. scans of benefit computer systems. These scans select 1 per cent. or 5 per cent. of the relevant cases and so are subject to some degree of sampling error.

2. The proportions have been calculated using departmental forecasts of the number of lone parents. Figures have been rounded to the nearest percentage point.

3. Some lone parents will be in receipt of other benefits such as Incapacity Benefit, Severe Disability Allowance or Industrial Injuries Benefit. We have not included them in this table, as we cannot separately identify lone parents on the computer systems for these benefits. Other benefits is defined to include Jobseeker's Allowance (Income Based) (JSA(IB)), Widowed Mothers Allowance and Family Credit (FC).

4. Figures for FC only go up to September 1999. From October 1999, FC was replaced by Working Families Tax Credit.

5. The figures for the Social Fund exclude people with an outstanding loan, which they are not currently repaying.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single parent households which were headed by a divorced woman were in receipt of social security benefits, excluding child benefit or its equivalent, in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1999; and what was the cost of such benefits in each of these years. [117533]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested as, generally, statistics on the receipt of Social Security benefits can only be broken down into lone and couple claimants. Divorced claimants are not separately identified.

Such information as is available is as follows. In 1980, of 316,000 lone parents claiming Supplementary Benefit, 109,000 were recorded as being female divorced claimants with dependants. In May 1994, 161,000 female lone parents were divorced (17 per cent. of all female lone parents). Since May 1994 divorced claimants have not been separately identified in Income Support statistics.

Departmental Officials

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the officials in his Department at Grade 3 and above with responsibility for retirement and widows' pension matters in the period 1986 to 1991. [117694]

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the officials in his Department at Grade 3 and above with responsibility for retirement and widows' pensions matters in the period 1986 to 1991 and (b) the capacities in which they are currently employed in the public service. [118222]

Mr. Darling: The officials in this Department at Grade 3 and above from 1986 to 1991 are a matter of public record in The Civil Service Year Books from 1986 on. These are available in the Library.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the proportion of recipients of letters under his minimum income guarantee take-up campaign who are entitled to income support. [117870]

Mr. Rooker: As part of the Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG) take-up campaign we will be writing to around 2 million pensioners whom our records suggest are most likely to have underlying entitlement. This targeted group will be pensioners who our pension records suggest have incomes below the MIG level. However, we do not know how many of these pensioners will have capital or other income that could affect their entitlement to benefit.

Pension Payment Methods

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements he is putting in place to ensure that people in receipt of retirement pension paid through automatic credit transfer are paid on the date the pension is due. [118033]

Mr. Rooker: The frequency of payments is one of a number of issues to be considered on the move to payments by Automated Credit Transfer. No final decisions have yet been taken, but we will ensure that the new arrangements from 2003 continue to meet people's needs. In particular, we recognise that many pensioners will expect to be able to continue to be paid weekly.

Mortgage Interest

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions have taken place between his Department and mortgage lenders to ensure that when mortgage interest is paid by the Department the borrower pays interest on the most favourable terms available from the mortgage lender. [118649]

Angela Eagle: There have been no discussions between this Department and mortgage lenders with regard to favourable interest rates. The Department calculates mortgage payments based on a standard interest rate that is calculated by the Building Societies Commission. A mortgage contract is between the lender and the borrower, with no involvement from this Department.

Benefits (Crosby)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people over the age of 65 do not claim (a) a state pension and (b) other state benefits in the Crosby constituency. [118682]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is not available at constituency level. If my hon. Friend has a particular problem perhaps she will write to me.

Widowers' Benefits

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 272W, on widowers' benefits, for what reason the ex gratia payment was made. [118664]

Angela Eagle: An offer of ex gratia payments was made to a widowed father by way of friendly settlement of his case before the European Court of Human Rights.

Earnings Top-up Pilot

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many workers in the City of Newcastle upon Tyne are receiving benefits under the Earnings Top-Up pilot; what is the value of these benefits; what numbers of (a) women and (b) men are receiving the top-up; how many of these women and men are working part-time and do not have the care of children; and when the benefit will cease. [117877]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

The three-year Earnings Top-Up pilot began in October 1996 and finished as planned at the end of September this year. No new claims for Earnings Top-Up have been accepted since 28 September 1999. However, people in receipt of Earnings Top-Up at the time the pilot ended are allowed to claim one further six-month award. This means that some people could continue to receive Earnings Top-Up until 25 September 2000.

Earnings top-up (ETU) cases in Newcastle upon Tyne by sex and weekly hours worked as at 31 March 2000

	All cases		Weekly hours worked: Under 30 hours		Weekly hours worked: 30 hours or more
	Cases	Average ETU (£)	Cases	Average ETU (£)	Cases	Average ETU (£)
All cases	1,781	26.98	1,176	25.36	605	30.13
All women	911	23.44	699	23.35	212	23.76
All men	870	30.68	477	28.30	393	33.57

Notes:
1. As Earnings Top-Up was a pilot of an in-work benefit for people without dependent children no one with the care of children would have been eligible for it. Such families would have been able to claim Working Families Tax Credit.
2. Based on 100 per cent. caseload figures.
3. Figures are unrounded.

Primary Carers (Crosby)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people over the age of 65 were primary carers in the Crosby constituency in each of the years from 1994 to 1997. [118681]

Angela Eagle: The information requested is not available.

State Pension

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the oral statement by the Minister of State of 3 April 2000, Official Report, columns 624–25, on the state pension, if he will give a breakdown for the figure of £800 million. [118801]

Mr. Darling: The information is in the table and shows an annual breakdown of the amount spent on Winter Fuel Payments and on earnings-uprating the MIG, over and above what the cost of earnings-uprating the basic state pension would have been.

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Winter Fuel Payment (a)	200	200	760	1,380	1,210
MIG (b)	—	—	410	700	1,090
Total (c = a+b)	200	200	1,170	2,080	2,300
RP earnings-uprated since April 1998 (d)	—	130	610	1,580	1,860
Extra spending (c-d)	200	70	560	500	440
Cumulative extra spending	200	270	830	1,330	1,770

Notes:
1. Rounded to the nearest £10 million.
2. Costs are in 1999–2000 terms.
3. Some figures do not appear to sum. This is due to rounding.

Winter Fuel Payments

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will make an announcement about the payment of Winter Fuel Payments following the European Court judgment of 16 December 1999. [118811]

Mr. Darling: Following the European Court of Justice's ruling on Winter Fuel Payments last December, I announced the Government's intention to equalise, at 60, the age at which payments could be made. I also said that it would be necessary to set up a claims process to make sure that the right people got the right amount of Winter Fuel Payment due.

The arrangements are as follows:

We want to ensure that people entitled to payments for past winters will receive those payments as soon as practically possible. The plan is to make them from the end of June onwards and payments for this coming winter before Christmas 2000.

Around 50,000 people, who think they may now be eligible for a backdated payment, have already registered their details with the Department. We will be writing to them in the next few weeks with a claim form for completion.

Over a five week period starting in May, we will also be writing to over two million people, who we think are eligible, to invite them to make a claim. There is no need for anyone to do anything now.

People who think they are eligible will also be able to download claim forms from the Department's own website, www.dss.gov.uk, or they will be able to obtain them, on request, from the Winter Fuel Payment helpline. The helpline number is 08459 15 15 15.

A simultaneous national advertising campaign will be set in train to encourage those who think they are eligible, and who have not received a letter by mid-June, to contact the Department. Also, from June up to Christmas, information and advertising campaigns will be run to help ensure that people are fully aware of how to claim and when they will receive their payments. Arrangements for notifying representative bodies will be set in train so that they will be able to advise those who contact them for advice.

DEFENCE

Air Brigades

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what progress has been made in providing increased engineer support to the air manoeuvre brigade; and if he will make a statement; [117489]

(2) what progress has been made in developing the 24 Airmobile Brigade into a high-capability air manoeuvre formation; and if he will make a statement. [117499]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: Sixteen Air Assault Brigade formed on 1 September 1999. It already has three infantry battalions and three aviation regiments under command. It is supported by a dedicated artillery regiment although this will not move from Aldershot to Colchester until at least 2003. The Engineer Regiment to support the Brigade will be formed when barrack facilities have been constructed at Woodbridge in 2003.

In the interim 9 Parachute Squadron RE and 51 Air Assault Squadron will continue to support the Brigade from their current locations—Aldershot and Ripon respectively. The logistic units which support the Brigade are currently reorganising to their new structure and this should be complete by 2002. The Brigade is also preparing to exploit the potential of the Westland Apache helicopter, the first squadron of which is due to be operational in late 2002.

Engineer Regiments

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what progress has been made in the establishment of the sixth close support engineer regiment; and if he will make a statement; [117494]

(2) what progress has been made in forming two new regular engineer squadrons; and if he will make a statement. [117492]

Mr. Spellar: [holding answer 3 April 2000]: Two new engineer regiments and three new engineer squadrons are to be formed. 26 (Close Support) Engineer Regiment, has started forming and will be operational by October this year. One of its squadrons cannot, however, be formed before 2003, the date on which its accommodation is planned to become available. The Regiment is initially being formed in Horne Barracks, Larkhill, and early next year it will move into modular accommodation in Ludgershall, thereby allowing Horne Barracks to be refurbished for 19 Field Regiment RA. Its long-term location will be Swinton Barracks, Perham Down, but this is not expected to be complete until 2003 at the earliest.

23 Engineer Regiment will support 16 Air Assault Brigade and it will form up in its new location in 2003: its two constituent parts are already supporting the Brigade. The Regiment cannot be formed until barrack facilities have been constructed at Woodbridge in 2003. In the interim 9 Parachute Squadron RE and 51 Air Assault Squadron will continue to support the Brigade from their current locations—Aldershot and Ripon respectively.

The engineer field support squadron is to be formed in April this year, using Gurkha manpower, and this will be operational by September. The first of the two air support engineer squadrons is currently planned to form up in July 2001, and the second in 2003.

HMS Ramsey

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of HMS Ramsey. [117845]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 12 April 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the cost of HMS Ramsey. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The expected Unit Production Cost (UPC) of HMS Ramsey is £29.947M.

Service Accommodation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many houses specifically for junior officers in the Royal Navy are planned to be built, at what cost and in what locations, in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [118063]

Dr. Moonie: During 1999–2000 25 three bedroomed houses were released in a phased handover at Broadwater Park, Ilchester, Yeovil to meet a Royal Navy requirement for junior officers, i.e. Lieutenants and Sub Lieutenants. The accommodation was made available through a Private Finance Initiative (PFI) scheme. The annual charge for this type of property, which includes maintenance to an agreed standard, is commercially sensitive information. I am therefore withholding the information under exemption 7a of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

During 2000–01 it is planned that a PFI contract for Bristol, Bath, Portsmouth and Shrivenham will be placed. This will provide 70 officers' houses at Seafield Park, Stubbington (including 15 which will be built using Ministry of Defence capital) to meet a joint RN and RAF requirement. The majority are likely to be allocated to RN families. Firm costs are not yet available and are likely to be commercially sensitive. It is expected that construction will be completed during 2001–02.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of the PFI scheme to build homes for Royal Navy and RAF officers in Stubbington, Hampshire; and if he will make a statement. [118059]

Dr. Moonie: The proposed Private Finance Initiative (PFI) contract for Bristol, Bath, Portsmouth and Shrivenham includes the provision of 55 properties at Seafield Park, Fareham (a further 15 properties are to be provided through this contract as a capital build). The PFI element will be for a 25 year period.

These new houses will address a shortage of accommodation for officers in the Portsmouth area, where over 100 officers are currently being housed in short term rented accommodation.

The project is at a final tender stage and estimated prices cannot be released as they are commercially sensitive. I am therefore withholding the information under exemption 7a of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

National Missile Defence System

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what inquiries the US Government have made of his Department about possible use of (a) Fylingdales, (b) Menwith Hill and (c) other sites in the UK as part of plans for a US national missile defence system. [118316]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 209W.

Armoured Regiments

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in re-roling an armoured regiment into an armoured reconnaissance regiment; and if he will make a statement. [117498]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The fourth armoured reconnaissance regiment which will be provided by the Queens Dragoon Guards, currently based in Catterick, will have completed its conversion to its new role by October this year. On current plans, they will move to Bovington in August 2003.

Signals Squadrons

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in forming the two new regular signals squadrons; and if he will make a statement. [117491]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 April 2000]: We are in fact forming four new regular signals squadrons. The first of the two signal squadrons dedicated to support the Logistic Brigades has already formed in Aldershot, earlier than the planned date of 2001, and the second is currently planned to form up in Germany in 2003. The first of two additional air support squadrons is due to form by 2003, with the second being formed when sufficient manpower is available. We expect this to be by 2005.

Stabilised Weapon and Reconnaisance Mount

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on introducing the Stabilised Weapon and Reconnaisance Mount into the UK armed services. [117850]

Dr. Moonie: None. The Stabilised Weapon and Reconnaissance Mount is a privately funded venture to develop a stabilised weapon and sensor system. If offered by potential prime contractors as an armament sub-system in proposals to meet the requirements of projects such as the Future Command and Liaison Vehicle, it would be considered in accordance with normal procurement procedures.

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the experts responsible for assessing the details of tenders submitted by the consortiums applying for the contract to manage AWE Aldermaston. [118513]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 10 April 2000]: The tenders were assessed by Ministry of Defence staff from the Nuclear Weapons area of the Defence Procurement Agency, the Director Nuclear Policy and the Assistant Chief Scientific Adviser (Nuclear) as well as external advisers on legal and commercial matters. Officials from the independent regulators, the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII) and the Environment Agency (EA), were also kept fully informed and consulted as necessary throughout the process. I am withholding the names under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information on the grounds that, given their involvement in high security work, they are potentially vulnerable to the attentions of terrorists, foreign agencies and anti-nuclear groups.

Docking (Military Vessels)

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Rosyth Dockyard and the Forth Estuary are docking places for the military vessels of the UK's NATO allies. [118644]

Mr. Spellar: MOD no longer owns either docking or berthing facilities in Rosyth. If NATO ships wished to dock in the former Naval Dockyard it would be by arrangement with the relevant commercial company. NATO warships regularly visit Leith and NATO Auxiliary vessels occasionally berth at Defence Munitions Crombie.

Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency for 2000–01. [119122]

Mr. Spellar: The Key Targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency (AFPAA) for the financial year 2000–01. The Targets build upon progress made by the Agency since it formed on 1 April 1997 and are as follows:

Pay, Allowances and Pensions Payments

While making 100 per cent. of payments of pay, allowances and pensions by the due date, the number of errors per 1,000 payments not to exceed 2.5 for pay and allowances and 2.0 for pensions.

Currency of Personnel Records and Liabilities DATA

Update all time-critical records within two days from receipt of valid input.

Responsiveness

Resolve 93 per cent. of inquiries, including written and official help desk responses, within 10 working days of receipt, across all Services where information and/or authorities is within AFPAA control.

Efficiency

To reduce the average unit costs to deliver AFPAA services by 3 per cent. this year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Doorkeepers

Angela Smith: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the average number of hours worked per week by full-time House of Commons Doorkeepers when the House is sitting. [118203]

Mr. Kirkwood: During the first three months of this year Doorkeepers have worked an average of 42½ hours in weeks when the House sat.

Parking Facilities

Mr. Sanders: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make it his policy to charge a market rate on Members' parking facilities; and if he will make a statement. [118103]

Mr. Kirkwood: The Commission has no plans at present to introduce a market charge on Members' parking facilities. However, the Greater London Authority Act 1999 will allow the Authority or the London Borough of Westminster to introduce a licensing scheme for parking in the Palace of Westminster, under which they may levy a charge on the two Houses. The Commission will consider the matter if and when either authority makes proposals for a licensing scheme.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EU-Africa Summit

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with her European counterparts concerning the agenda of the EU-Africa Summit. [118048]

Clare Short: As Presidency of the EU, Portugal was responsible for co-ordinating preparations for the EU-Africa Summit. I discussed the Summit with the Portuguese Minister for Development when I met him on 11 January. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development also attended an informal meeting of EU Development Ministers on 28–29 January where discussion focused on the role of Europe in promoting peace, security, democracy and development in Africa.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement concerning her engagements at the time of the EU-Africa Summit in Cairo. [118051]

Clare Short: During the Africa-Europe Summit in Cairo on 3–4 April 2000, I was engaged in Government business. The UK Government were represented by the Foreign Secretary.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on progress made on development at the EU-Africa Summit. [118049]

Clare Short: The Africa-Europe Summit, Cairo 3–4 April 2000, was the first of its kind. African and European Heads of State and Government sat together to discuss key issues of mutual concern, including development issues.

The major issues brought to the table were debt, integrating Africa into the world economy, conflict prevention, human rights and democracy, and poverty eradication. Discussions were frank and constructive.

Follow-up procedures have been agreed including another summit in Europe in 2003. Meetings of Ministers in between the summits and the establishment of a bi-regional group at the senior official level, to meet regularly, will continue work on the issues discussed. In particular, the bi-regional groups of officials will report to Ministers on Africa's debt and the return of cultural property to its country of origin before the next Summit.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development why she did not attend the EU-Africa summit in Cairo. [118052]

Clare Short: The Foreign Secretary led the UK delegation at the Africa-Europe Summit. He was fully briefed by my Department and supported at senior official level. I did not consider it appropriate or necessary for me to attend the summit. The same view was taken by many of my development Minister colleagues.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what briefing her Department provided for the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs concerning the development aspects of the EU-Africa Summit. [118050]

Clare Short: My Department provided comprehensive briefing on development issues discussed at the Africa-Europe Summit, including regional integration within Africa, transfer of technology, debt, poverty reduction, HIV/AIDS, health and the environment. DFID and other Government Departments worked together to prepare briefs on trade, conflict prevention and human rights. In addition, DFID produced and circulated a press briefing on UK Support to Africa for the Summit, covering key aspects of the UK development programme.

Mongolia

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has for changes in the level of aid to Mongolia. [118043]

Clare Short: Most UK aid to Mongolia will continue to be channelled through multilateral agencies. The UK contributes around £5.7 million per year through these channels and this figure is set to rise slightly over the next two to three years.

We will also continue to offer opportunities for civil society organisations to obtain funding for poverty-focused work in Mongolia. We will continue support (at a slightly decreased level) for the Small Grants Scheme administered by the British Embassy in Ulaanbaatar.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on current British aid to Mongolia. [118046]

Clare Short: Most UK aid to Mongolia is channelled through multilateral agencies. Britain contributes around £5.7 million each year through these agencies.

We also support UK Non Governmental Organisations' work in Mongolia and operate a Small Grants Scheme, administered by our Embassy in Ulaanbaatar, focusing on activities which benefit the poorest.

In response to the current severe weather crisis, Britain is also contributing to the purchase of essential humanitarian relief supplies in Mongolia. To date the UK Government have contributed £200,000 to the relief effort.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has received from the international community concerning aid to Mongolia. [118044]

Clare Short: My Department has received recent representations from the Government of Mongolia, from the Mongolian Red Cross, the International Federation of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, the United Nations and World Vision concerning aid to Mongolia. These representations have related to requests for assistance regarding the current humanitarian situation following Mongolia's recent extreme winter weather conditions.

Horn of Africa

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the drought in the Horn of Africa; and what recent representations she has received from the international community concerning that drought. [118041]

Clare Short: The United Nations estimate that more than 12 million people face serious food shortages in the Horn of Africa. This is the result of the failure of the rains or very low rainfall in the past three years coupled with ongoing armed conflicts in the region and the presence of large numbers of refugees and displaced persons. The UN launched an appeal for £190 million on 28 January. The UN Secretary General has now appointed Catherine Bertini, Head of the World Food Programme, as his Special Envoy on the drought in the Horn of Africa. She will visit the region 11–19 April.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has for changes in the level of aid to the Horn of Africa region. [118039]

Clare Short: We have established a planning figure of about £23.35 million for bilateral expenditure in Ethiopia, Eritrea, Somalia and Sudan in 2000–01 compared to an expected outturn of £13.35 million for 1999–2000. This increase was programmed earlier this year following advance warning of the deteriorating food security situation in the Horn of Africa. The funds are available to support development programmes and emergency interventions. Actual expenditure for individual countries like all other planning figures are likely to vary depending on needs. In addition, the EU and other multilateral organisations to which we provide substantial support will be providing assistance to the region.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to increase the amount of immediate food relief to Ethiopia; and if she will make a statement. [118363]

Clare Short: Since January we have committed some £4.5 million including 16,500 metric tonnes of food to help vulnerable populations in Ethiopia. About £2 million of this has been committed in the last week for food and non-food assistance to help provide relief to vulnerable people in Borana and North Omo. The food is being provided through international non-governmental organisations. We will also contribute 17 per cent. of the 432,000 metric tonnes provided by the EC this year.

We are ready to do more as needs emerge.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has made to EU Commissioner Poul Neilson over the suspension of aid to Zimbabwe. [118055]

Clare Short: I have made no direct representations to Mr. Neilson on Zimbabwe. At the General Affairs Council on Monday 10 April the Foreign Secretary, on behalf of the Government, said we could support the initiation of consultations under the Lomé Convention between the European Community and the African, Caribbean and Pacific countries on co-operation with Zimbabwe. My Department and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office remain in close touch with the European Commission in Brussels and in Harare.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions she has had with the Zimbabwean Government concerning the future of the bilateral aid budget. [118054]

Clare Short: I have had no recent discussions with the Zimbabwean Government. Our position on development assistance has been made clear in correspondence and through our High Commissioner and development office in Harare.

Kosovo

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list recipient organisations and the amounts they have received from (a) British Government sources and (b) EU sources in aid related to infrastructure repair projects in Kosovo since 12 June 1999. [118251]

Clare Short: We have provided £10 million towards the cost of repairing the electricity distribution network. Our aim has been to help the local authorities and where appropriate other donors with the supply of equipment and technical advice on the electrical distribution system throughout Kosovo. We have provided £2 million to the water sector, which has included specific repairs to pumping stations. We have also supplied infrastructure equipment to allow the water companies to carry out essential repairs. In addition we have provided £250,000 for the replacement of 5,000 household water pumps through Action Against Hunger. We have also provided assistance to repair and rehabilitate the Pristina district heating system (£0.1 million).

One component of our support to UNMIK has been to provide £700,000 for the rehabilitation of Ishtok prison and £200,000 for the refurbishment of court buildings. Both these projects have been implemented by local contractors. As part of our programme of restarting essential services in Pristina University Hospital, we have provided £3 million to our IEU to carry out extensive repair and rehabilitation of the hospital infrastructure, services and systems.

In addition, DFID has committed up to £3 million to a programme of emergency works at Pristina International Airport to enable it to operate 24 hour civilian air operations at ICAO Category One standard. This project is being managed by Scott Wilson Kirkpatrick Ltd. and implemented by a combination of both international and local contractors. We have also funded GOAL with £300,000 to provide emergency winter shelter.

Locally our Field Office in Pristina has provided £6 million for 300 Quick Impact Projects which have included community infrastructure repair projects such as schools and health clinics, as well as help to small enterprises. These projects have been implemented by a number of different organisations including the UK military and local NGOs.

Figures for EU support could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coal Miners (Compensation)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations his Department has received from (a) general practitioners and (b) health authorities in respect of the disclosure of patient records relative to coal miners' compensation claims for (i) bronchitis and (ii) emphysema/chronic respiratory disease. [118499]

Mrs. Liddell: Some GPs and hospitals have been uncertain about releasing miners' medical records because they were not clear about the legal basis on which records are being sought and their own obligations. The Department has been in close consultation with the Department of Health and the BMA to enlist the help of medical record holders to ensure prompt release of records. The Department has agreed with both these bodies a statement on the legal basis for disclosure and the operational arrangements for access and copying, including the payment of appropriate fees to the record holders. On this basis, the NHS Executive has issued guidance to NHS Trusts and Health Authorities, and the BMA has also issued guidance to GPs. Both have stressed the vital part that hospitals and GPs play in assisting the compensation process. I understand that the guidance is already helping to speed up the records collection exercise, and I very much welcome the co-operation which the medical profession is showing.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library a copy of the International Atomic Energy Agency report GOV/1998/30, dated 29 May 1998. [118525]

Dr. Howells: The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) document GOV/1998/30 contains the text of the Protocol additional to the Agreement between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the European Atomic Energy Community and the International Atomic Energy Agency for the Application of Safeguards in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.

A copy of the protocol was laid before the House on 31 March 1999 as Misc. No.21. Command paper 4282 refers.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals to strengthen international nuclear safeguards Her Majesty's Government will put to the Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty Conference in April. [118497]

Dr. Howells: The UK delegation will call for all States which have not yet done so to sign and bring into force safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), in accordance with their obligations under Article III on the Non-Proliferation Treaty.

The UK delegation will also call for all States which have not yet done so to negotiate, sign and bring into force as soon as possible a protocol additional to their existing safeguards agreement with the IAEA. These protocols will be based on the Model Protocol agreed by the Board of Governors of the IAEA in 1997. The UK delegation will point to the Additional Protocol signed by the United Kingdom, the IAEA and the European Atomic Energy Community on 22 September 1998, and to the progress of the Nuclear Safeguards Bill [Lords], which contains the legislation necessary to allow entry into force of the Additional Protocol, as proof of our commitment to this process, which is designed to strengthen the existing safeguards regime.

Rover

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Task Force he has set up following the BMW decision on Rover will visit the supplier plants to Rover wherever they are in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [118204]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 7 April 2000]: The Task Force set up by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is to assess the impact on the supplier chain, and has created a Supplier Chain Sub-Group that is lead by Grahame Broome of SMMT. The sub-group will not undertake an extensive programme of visits but is working with consultants Deloitte Touche to reach as wide a range of suppliers as possible. So far, it has devised and sent out nearly 6,700 questionnaires to businesses in Rover's supplier chain. The questionnaire is also available on an internet site and businesses are being encouraged to e-mail their responses.

More than 300 replies have been received so far and are being analysed to inform the Task Force's work on producing proposals that will support component manufacturers, develop their employees, strengthen their competitiveness and assist their efforts to diversify into new sectors.

Post Offices (Shropshire)

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for each constituency in Shropshire the post office branches, indicating those which serve rural communities, which (a) closed and (b) opened (i) between 1979 to 1997 and (b) since May 1997. [118539]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I understand from the Post Office that as of October 1999, the numbers of post offices in each of the four parliamentary constituencies in Shropshire were as follows:

Post Offices	Numbers
Shropshire North	44
Shrewsbury and Atcham	42
Ludlow	45
The Wrekin	25

The Post Office does not hold historical data by constituency for the numbers of post offices which have closed or opened, nor do they hold details by constituency of rural post offices.

Trade Unions

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the minimum membership of a trade union before it can be registered with the Certification Office for Trade Unions and Employer Associations. [118742]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 10 April 2000]: There is no explicit minimum set by statute. The statutory definition of a trade union is given in section 1 of the Treaty Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992. The Certification Officer has to be satisfied that an organisation meets this definition before listing it as a trade union.

Redundancy Regulations

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration he has given under the provisions of the Redundancy Payments Regulations 1965 to advice from the Government Actuaries Department in the case of Robert Fletchers (Greenfield) v. Peter Blakeman. [118892]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has considered whether or not the Melton Medes (Fletchers) Fund meets the requirements of Regulation 3 of the Redundancy Payments Pensions Regulations 1965 and, having had regard to advice from the Government Actuary's Department, is satisfied that it does.

Export Credit Guarantees (Zimbabwe)

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the ECGD funding for contracts relating to Zimbabwe since May 1997. [118750]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: ECGD provides unconditional repayment guarantees for the provision of export finance made available by commercial banks. Since May 1997, ECGD has guaranteed the following contracts:

£ million

Contracts	Value
Mobile Phone System	15
Refurbishment of Bulawayo Power Station	6
Sawmill	3
Land Rovers	24
Mobile telecommunications equipment	6

Prototype Fast Reactor Fuels

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wigan (Mr. Turner) of 6 April 2000, Official Report, column 534W, on PFR fuels, if he will publish a list of those whom he considers to have an interest and are being consulted. [118809]

Mrs. Liddell: The groups of organisations and individuals listed have already been sent copies of the consultation paper on options for managing the fuels from Dounreay's Prototype Fast Reactor (issued 6 April). As the list shows, we recognise that a wide range of people will have an interest in this consultation, particularly in the Dounreay areas. We are interested in all informed responses on the issue; the consultation paper is available on the DTI's web site at: www.dti.gov.uk/energy/pfrfuel and further paper copies can be obtained from the Department of Trade and Industry, Bay 114, 1 Victoria Street, London SW1H 0ET

Dounreay local MPs and MSPs and Scottish MEPs

Chairmen and Clerks for the relevant Westminster Select Committees

Convenors and Clerks for relevant Scottish Parliament Committees

Regulators and Advisory Bodies

Local Councils

Relevant Government Departments and Scottish Executive

Environmental pressure groups

Trade Unions represented at the site

Other local organisations and individuals

Nuclear industry organisations.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wigan (Mr. Turner) of 6 April 2000, Official Report, column 534W, on PFR fuels, what criteria are applied to determine who has an interest in the options for managing the prototype fast reactor fuels at Dounreay. [118808]

Mrs. Liddell: We recognise that a wide range of people will have an interest in this issue—particularly, but not exclusively, those in the Dounreay area—and the consultation on the options for managing Dounreay's PFR fuels is open to all. A wide range of people have already been sent the consultation paper; the documents are presented on the DTI's website and further paper copies are available from the Department. We are also seeking the views of all relevant advisory bodies on this issue.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Digital Broadcasting

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of repeater stations will be digitalised; and where they will be located. [118615]

Janet Anderson: The current digital terrestrial television (DTT) transmission plan comprises 81 transmitter sites of which 30 are relay stations. Details of these stations have already been placed on CD-ROM in the Libraries of both Houses. No decisions have been taken as to the number or location of any additional relays to be incorporated into the DTT transmission plan.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what provisions will be made for television viewers in the non-digitalised catchment areas when the analogue system is phased out. [118616]

Janet Anderson: Before analogue switch-over takes place, all viewers who currently receive the main free to air channels must be able to receive these channels digitally. We will be looking carefully at all the options for delivering digital services to the home to ensure that this condition is met.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the analogue switch-off will be permitted. [118617]

Janet Anderson: The analogue signal will be fully switched to digital when the three tests which the Government have set—relating to availability, affordability and take-up—have been met. Under the availability test, all viewers who can receive analogue television now (99.4 per cent.) must be able to receive the main free-to-air channels digitally; under the take-up test, 95 per cent. of consumers must have a digital receiver in the home; and under the affordability test the switch to digital must be within reach of people on low or fixed incomes. The Government expect the tests to be met between 2006 and 2010.

National Athletics Stadium

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the cost of developing an athletics facility to host the 2005 World Athletics Championships at Picketts Lock, Enfield. [118116]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 10 April 2000]: My Department has made no estimate of such costs. UK Athletics and Sport England have submitted a range of costs for differing proposals for constructing a stadium and are now discussing the optimum solution for the Picketts Lock site.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what proportion of the estimated cost of the development of the national athletics stadium at Picketts Lock he expects to come from public funds; [118417]

(2) what his policy is on public support for the management and running costs of the national athletics stadium at Picketts Lock; and if he will make a statement. [118421]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 10 April 2000]: The extent of public funding or support for any stadium at Picketts Lock has yet to be determined as UK Athletics have yet to develop a detailed proposal for the site.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if it is his policy that all seats at the national athletics stadium at Picketts Lock should have a minimum width of 500 mm and a minimum seating row depth of 760 mm; and if he will make a statement; [118423]

(2) what his estimate is of the cost of increasing the capacity at the planned national athletics stadium at Picketts Lock to 80,000 in the event of a successful London Olympic bid; [118422]

(3) if it is his policy that all seats at the national athletics stadium at Picketts Lock should have a 'c' value of at least 60 mm based on a focal point on the outside edge of the outside lane around the bends; and if he will make a statement. [118420]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 10 April 2000]: UK Athletics is to be congratulated on securing the 2005 World Athletics Championships for London following its selection of Picketts Lock as its preferred stadium site. UK Athletics is now starting the process of drawing up detailed proposals for developing the site. The design of the stadium, its cost, funding and long term usage are matters for UK Athletics to determine in consultation, as necessary, with Sport England.

Trafalgar Square

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he will make the decision on a permanent work for the fourth plinth in Trafalgar Square. [118035]

Mr. Chris Smith: The advisory panel set up under the Chairmanship of Sir John Mortimer to consider the future of the vacant plinth in Trafalgar Square is due to inform me of its recommendations in May, and I intend to publish their report as soon as possible after I have received it.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with Sir John Mortimer and his Committee on the fourth plinth in Trafalgar Square. [118034]

Mr. Chris Smith: I joined Sir John Mortimer and some members of his advisory group at their inaugural meeting in June 1999. I have had no further discussions with the group about the fourth plinth. I recently met Sir John Mortimer informally on 7 April to discuss progress and I expect to be informed of the group's recommendations in May.

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117816]

Mr. Chris Smith: No lawyers are employed by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. Legal services are provided through an agreement between the Department and the Treasury Solicitor's Department.

Five lawyers at the Treasury Solicitor's Department were allocated to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport as at 31 March 2000 and four were allocated to the Department for National Heritage in 1995.

TREASURY

Working Families Tax Credit

Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the increase in the Working Families Tax Credit on families in Northern Ireland. [117429]

Mr. Timms: 30,722 families in Northern Ireland had been awarded the Working Families Tax Credit by the end of February 2000. In addition, 4,351 families were still on Family Credit at that date. The sum of these two figures is more than 5,000 higher than the number of Northern Ireland families with Family Credit awards current at August 1999.

For the United Kingdom as a whole it is expected that families will get £24 per week more on average under the Working Families Tax Credit than under Family Credit. This includes families who would not have qualified for Family Credit.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families are receiving Working Families Tax Credit in Northern Ireland; of these how many he estimates are farming families; and what percentage of farming families in Northern Ireland this represents. [116358]

Mr. Timms: 30,722 families in Northern Ireland had been awarded the Working Families Tax Credit by the end of February 2000. Of these, 1,149 were awards to families where the main earner was classified to the Standard Occupation Code "Farmer". It is not known how many families with children in Northern Ireland have a farmer as their main earner.

Tax Credits

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the differences are between administration targets for the handling of tax credit related claims in respect of (a) working families and (b) disabled people. [118011]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 6 April 2000]: The targets adopted by the Tax Credit Office for handling applications for Working Families Tax Credit and Disabled Person's Tax Credit for the period from 1 October 1999 to 31 March 2000 were the ones which the Benefits Agency had agreed for Family Credit and Disability Working Allowance respectively for the period from 1 April to 30 September 1999. The targets were:

Working Families Tax Credit

to clear 90 per cent. of express applications (those from employees making their first application) within five working days to clear 95 per cent. of non-express applications within 42 working days (and 60 per cent. within 13 working days) to process 91 per cent. of all applications accurately.

Disabled Person's Tax Credit to clear 90 per cent. of applications within 43 working days (60 per cent. within 17 working days)

to process 94 per cent. of all applications accurately.

My hon. Friend the Paymaster General is currently discussing with the Inland Revenue all targets for the year 2000–01.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will disaggregate by income decile the number of families claiming the child care component of the Working Families Tax Credit; [117502]

(2) if he will disaggregate by income decile the number of people in receipt of each tax credit since its introduction. [117503]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The two tax credits introduced to date are the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) and the Disabled Person's Tax Credit (DPTC). Insufficient data on income are provided by applicants for these tax credits to allocate them between decile groups of income as conventionally defined for such analyses. Also, household survey data available for analysis do not yet cover families receiving the tax credits. So it is not yet possible to provide the requested analysis for recipients of the tax credits.

Smuggling

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many customs officers were employed on anti-smuggling activities in each of the past 10 years. [117549]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The total number of Customs officers (in terms of staff years) allocated to frontier anti-smuggling work in the last 10 years, and planned for the next three years, is as follows:

Year	Number
2002–03	2,676
2001–02	2,576
2000–01	2,449
1999–2000	2,281
1998–99	2,263
1997–98	2,288
1996–97	2,288
1995–96	2,580
1994–95	2,715
1993–94	2,895
1992–93	2,895
1991–92	3,082
1990–91	3,082

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117806]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Legal advice to the Treasury is provided by the Treasury Legal Advisers' Team of the Treasury Solicitor's Department. These lawyers are employed by the Treasury Solicitor's Department and then allocated to the Treasury. There were 14 legal advisers allocated to the Treasury on 1 April 1995 and 18 on 1 April 2000. Although allocated to the Treasury, these advisers also provide some advice to other Departments.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what import duty and tax is paid on imported Beta Interferon. [118528]

Mr. Timms: All drugs and medicines are subject to VAT at 17½ per cent. on importation. This product is free of customs duty at importation.

Where imported drugs and medicines are subsequently dispensed to patients on prescription, the zero-rate of VAT applies.

VAT (Low-emissivity Glass)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will cut the rate of VAT on low-emissivity glass; and if he will make a statement. [118413]

Mr. Timms: The Government introduced a reduced rate for the installation of energy saving materials in all homes in the Budget. The reduced rate applies only to the installation of certain materials whose primary purpose is to save energy. Low-emissivity glass increases the energy efficiency of windows, but that feature is incidental to its main purpose.

Budget Calculations

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rate of inflation he used when calculating the increase in petrol duty, and VAT, announced in his recent Budget statement. [118746]

Dawn Primarolo: The methodology for calculating the changes in taxes to take account of inflation is set out in Appendix A1 in the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which measures announced in the Budget statement were based on a forecast inflation rate. [118748]

Dawn Primarolo: The details of how the tax base is indexed to take account of inflation, and when a forecast is used, is set out in Appendix A1 in the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Climate Change Levy

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost would be of extending the 80 per cent. discount on the climate change levy to horticulture for the financial year 2000–01. [118584]

Mr. Timms: As announced in Budget 1999, the Government intend to bring forward legislation in the Finance Bill 2000 to introduce a climate change levy with effect from April 2001. The levy will not be applied in the financial year 2000–01.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the number of (a) men and (b) women in (i) full-time and (ii) part-time work who are aged (1) over 90, (2) 85 to 90, (3) 80 to 85, (4) 75 to 80, (5) 70 to 75 and (6) 65 to 70 years. [118648]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 12 April 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on people of various age groups who are in employment. I am replying in the Director's absence.

The attached table shows non-seasonally adjusted estimates from the Labour Force (LFS) which is the main source of labour market data on individuals. It gives the average number of men and women in full or part-time employment by age group between winter (December to February) 1998/9 and autumn (September to November) 1999.

The estimates for groups over 80 years of age have been combined in the table as those for the individual age groups requested proved to be statistically unreliable.

People aged 16 or over are classed as in employment by the LFS if they have done at least one hour of paid work (as an employee or self-employed) in the week prior to their LFS interview of if they have a job that they are temporarily away from. People who do unpaid work in a family business and people on Government-supported training and employment programmes are also included according to the International Labour Organisation convention.

Retail Prices Index

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what work has been carried out by the Office for National Statistics to construct a retail prices index reflecting a representative basket of goods and services used by (a) pensioners and (b) recipients of income support; and how such an index would differ from the overall index. [118036]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Kidgell to Dr. Vincent Cable, dated 12 April 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on work carried out by the ONS on a retail price index reflecting goods and services used by pensioners and recipients of income support. I am replying in the Director's absence.

Each quarter the ONS publishes in the Consumer Price Indices Business Monitor (MM23) separate indices for one and two pensioner households, using weights derived from relevant expenditure information from the Family Expenditure Survey (FES). These indices exclude a number of items in the Retail Prices Index (RPI), including charges for NHS services, all housing costs and staff restaurant meals. NHS charges are excluded because they are generally not paid by pensioners, and housing costs are excluded because pensioners are mostly cushioned from rises by the receipt of rebates. Pensioners do not have staff restaurant meals. For rail and bus fares, special pensioners rail and bus fare indices are substituted for the normal index household indices to allow for fare concessions available in some areas.

Between January 1987, the latest reference period for the RPI, and the fourth quarter of 1999, the RPI increased by 66.8%. In the same period, the one-person pensioner household index increased by 50.1% and the two-person pensioner household index increased by 54.9%.

The ONS does not construct a separate index for recipients of income support, but does construct the Rossi index each month. This is used for uprating state income-related benefits once a year. The Rossi index is the all items RPI excluding mortgage interest payments, rent, council tax and owner-occupiers' depreciation costs. This is not published, but is made available on request to the ONS.

Between January 1987 and December 1999, the RPI increased by 67.3%. In the same period, the Rossi index increased by 61.8%.

New Zealand Investment Exchanges

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what New Zealand investment exchanges have been recognised this year as overseas investment exchanges in the UK under sections 37 and 40 of the Financial Services Act 1986. [118941]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The New Zealand Futures and Options Exchange Ltd. (NZFOE) has been granted recognition as an Overseas Investment Exchange as of today, having satisfied the conditions under sections 37 and 40 of the Financial Services Act 1986. NZFOE is therefore able to carry out investment business in the UK.

Better Government for Older People

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress his Department has made, pursuant to the Better Government for Older People programme to provide access for older people to computer training and Internet services in (a) Staffordshire and (b) England. [118395]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have been asked to reply.

The Better Government for Older People programme's pilot phase has just come to an end. The 28 local authority-led pilot projects have addressed a very wide range of issues affecting older people, including access to computers and the Internet. A report evaluating the programme and making a number of recommendations for future action is expected to be published in June. The Government hope to respond by the end of the year.

Staffordshire is not one of the 28 pilot areas but the report will make recommendations applicable to the whole of the UK. The county council has joined the Better Government for Older People Network, the forum in which the pilot projects' experience is shared and discussed with other local authorities, voluntary organisations and older people and which offers access to a programme of seminars, conferences and support. The Minister of State, Department of Social Security, my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), who chairs the Inter-Ministerial Group on Older People, spoke at a BGOP Network event on New Technology in Public Services on 10 April. ICL sponsors the Network and projects in Bolton, Newcastle, Harrow, Devon, Middlesbrough and Lanarkshire.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Marginal Deduction Rates

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households faced marginal deduction rates from employment of less than 16 hours a week that exceeded (a) 80 per cent., (b) 90 per cent. and (c) 100 per cent. (i) before the 1998 Budget, (ii) before the 1999 Budget, (iii) before the 2000 Budget and (iv) after the 2000 Budget; and if he will make a statement. [118732]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available.

Benefits (Crosby)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are in receipt of child benefit allowance in the Crosby constituency; and what percentage they constitute of the total population of the constituency. [118686]

Angela Eagle: The administration of Child Benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Claire Curtis-Thomas, dated 11 April 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people are in receipt of child benefit allowance in the Crosby constituency; and what percentage they constitute of the total population of the constituency.

As of 28 February 1999, the number of households receiving child benefit in the Crosby constituency was approximately 9,000. This data is based on a 5 per cent. sample of child benefit records and has been derived from the information available in that sample based on residential postcodes.

Due to the insufficient postcode data supplied to Analytical Services Division from the child benefit computer system, it has been difficult to derive accurate statistics by constituency. The Department is however, attempting to resolve this issue by improving the quality and accuracy of the postcode data and will make this information available as soon as this is achieved.

Population data for Crosby is also not available in the format requested. The Office of National Statistics have advised that the 1991 census survey is based on Enumeration District information and are unable to match this to constituencies.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the age bands (a) 18 to 25, (b) 25 to 40, (c) 40 to 55 and (d) 55 to 65 years were in receipt of (i) Disability Allowance, (ii) Invalid Care Allowance, (iii) Carers Allowance, (iv) Incapacity Benefit and (v) other health-related benefit in (A) absolute numbers and (B) as a percentage of the total population of the Crosby constituency in each of the years 1994 to 1999. [118684]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Claire Curtis-Thomas, dated 11 April 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about people in receipt of certain benefits in your constituency.

Information is not available for all the relevant benefits in the format requested. Unfortunately, population figures are not available for the Crosby constituency and I cannot, therefore, express any figures as a percentage of the population.

Prior to 1998, figures for recipients of Disability Living Allowance were based on a 5% sample and the numbers for the Crosby constituency are too small to be statistically reliable. However, since 1998, the figures are based on a 100% sample and the details for 1998 and 1999 are set out below.

1999	81	389	744	944

The figures for Severe Disablement Allowance cannot be provided as the sample is too small to be statistically valid and the figures for Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit cannot be provided as they are not available by Parliamentary constituency.

Figures for Invalid Care Allowance are not available by Parliamentary Constituency.

The only other benefit paid specifically for carers is the Income Support Carers Premium. Figures by Parliamentary constituency has only been available since 1998 but the numbers in the 5% sample are too small to be statistically valid.

For Incapacity Benefit, it is not possible to break down the age bands, as the 5% sample is too small to be statistically valid. I have provided below the total figure for the age band 18–65 for the years 1995–1999.

Year	Number
1995	2,800
1996	2,500
1997	2,700
1998	2,400
1999	2,000

This reply covers all the sickness, disability and carer benefits.

I hope this is helpful.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people over the age of 65 were in receipt of a benefit other than a state pension in the Crosby constituency in each of the years from 1994 to 1999. [118683]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Claire Curtis-Thomas, dated 11 April 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people over the age of 65 were in receipt of a benefit other than a state pension in the Crosby constituency in each of the years from 1994 to 1999.

Some of the many benefits available to people over the age of 65 are not administered by the Benefits Agency, for example, Housing Benefit, Free Prescriptions, Travel Passes, etc.

I can provide the following information for those benefits that the Benefits Agency is responsible for delivering.

For Attendance Allowance (AA) and Disability Living Allowance (DLA), the figures for Crosby constituency are as follows:

Year	AA	DLA
1994	[1]—	700
1995	2,000	700
1996	1,700	700
1997	1,900	700
1998	2,175	600
1999	2,212	661

[1] Sample too small to be statistically valid

Notes:

1. Figures up to 1997 based on a 5 per cent. sample
2. Figures from 1998 based on a 100 per cent. sample

For Income Support, the information is only available by parliamentary constituency from 1998. The estimated numbers in the constituency of Crosby in receipt of Income Support over the age of 65 are:

Year
1999	1,900

For other benefits provided through the Benefits Agency for which people over age 65 may be eligible (see list below), the information is either not available by Parliamentary constituency, or the sample is too small to be statistically valid.

Industrial Injuries Scheme Benefits

Incapacity Benefit

Severe Disablement Allowance

Winter Fuel Payments

Cold Weather Payments

Social Fund Payments

I hope this is helpful.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reduce processing times for Disability Living Allowance claims. [118519]

Angela Eagle: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Andrew George, dated 11 April 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the plans to reduce processing times for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) claims.

We have been experiencing delays recently in the processing of DLA claims. We recognise that this situation is not acceptable and that ensuring the efficient and timely processing of claims is a priority. We are taking action to address the problems currently being experienced.

To reduce delays, we have moved staff from other, less critical areas, of our business and we have set up a special team to identify further process improvements. We are also taking action to reduce variations in performance between different processing units.

I hope this is helpful.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that pensioners receiving Minimum Income Guarantee do not have deductions made for repayment of loans from the Social Fund; and if he will make a statement. [118335]

Angela Eagle: Interest-free budgeting loans from the Social Fund, designed to spread the cost of routine lump-sum expenses over a longer period, are available to a wide variety of groups receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance. People who take out such loans, including pensioners receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee, are choosing to use some of their income to pay them back, by deductions from benefit, in the same way that they organise and manage their income to meet other weekly outgoings. It would not be fair or appropriate to exempt any one group from this straightforward repayment arrangement.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are being targeted as possible qualifiers for the Minimum Income Guarantee in each of the age groups (a) 60 to 65, (b) 65 to 70, (c) 70 to 75, (d) 75 to 80, (e) 80 to 85, (f) 85 to 90 and (g) over 90 years old. [118007]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Pensioners in the following age bands are being targeted as possible qualifiers for the minimum income guarantee.

Age band	Total count	Male	Female
60–64	398,544	0	398,114
65–69	310,207	120,042	190,165
70–74	304,452	121,907	182,545
75–79	438,302	147,044	291,258
80–84	237,822	206,689	31,133
85–89	358,822	135,299	223,523
90+	158,287	45,001	113,286
Total	2,206,436	775,982	1,430,024

Better Government for Older People

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what financial assistance his Department provides, pursuant to the Better Government for Older People programme for older people who seek access to computer training and Internet services. [118397]

Mr. Rooker: This Department actively supports the Better Government for Older People programme, with many local offices working with the programme to examine ways to improve access to services for older people. While this has included a wide range of initiatives, none has provided access to computer training.

We recognise the need to provide quality services for older people and that they have their own needs and preferences as to how these are delivered. This is why we intend to bring together the current services the Department provides for pensions and pensioners into a new organisation. It will provide a unified, modern service for today's pensioners, whether they choose to deal with the Department by telephone, by post, face-to-face or through the Internet.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Global Environmental Change

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the recent report published by the Economic and Social Research Council on its global environmental change programme. [116985]

Mr. Meacher: These reports were received by the Department on 5 and 7 April; they are being studied at present.

London Underground

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many attributable (a) delays of 15 minutes or more and (b) station closures there were on London Underground on each line in (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999; what changes there have been since 1997 in the way the figures are compiled; and what impact these changes have had on the figures. [117074]

Mr. Hill: This is an operational matter for the London Underground who provide the information in the table to the London Regional Passenger Committee on a quarterly basis.

Year	Number
Train delays 15 minute or over
1997	1,711
1998	1,820
1999	2,178
Station closures 15 minutes or over
1997	1,304
1998	746
1999	1,088

These figures need to be considered within the context of an increase in services which contributed to a rise in train kilometres operated in 1999–2000 to an estimated 63.1 million.

There have been no changes in the way these figures have been compiled.

To provide the figures on a line by line basis would incur disproportionate cost.

Bus Shelters

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many new bus shelters have been built in each year since 1992; and how many shelters were upgraded in each year. [117272]

Mr. Hill: Figures provided by London Transport, who have powers to erect and maintain bus shelters in London, are shown in the table (1996–97 is the first year annual figures are available in the form requested).

	Built	Upgraded
1996–97	45	1,230
1997–98	0	1,360
1998–99	630	790
1999–2000	565	335

My Department does not have comparable figures for outside London, where the provision and maintenance of bus shelters is a matter for local authorities and bus operators.

EU Environment Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the outcome of the Environment Council held in Brussels on 30 March; and if he will make a statement. [117691]

Mr. Meacher: I represented the UK at the Environment Council in Brussels on 30 March 2000. Three sets of Council Conclusions were agreed, and proposals to tackle acidification, and on environmental liability, were debated.

Through Council Conclusions, a strategy for addressing threats to the environment from endocrine disrupting chemicals was endorsed, as outlined in a recent Commission Communication. The strategy will involve the establishment of a priority list of substances for evaluation and to prioritise testing. The need for quick and effective risk management measures where preliminary scientific evaluation reveals grounds for concern was also identified.

Council Conclusions were also agreed in response to the Commission Communication on a review of the fifth Environment Action Programme. These will assist the Commission in preparing a proposal for the sixth Environment Action Programme, due by the end of this year. The Council called for this to be a strategic document, setting clear priorities for the next 10 years and promoting a range of instruments to break the link between economic growth and environmental pressures. Climate change, waste management, resource use, biodiversity, soil degradation, desertification and reducing the environmental and health risks caused by chemicals and GMOs were identified as priorities for the programme. The need for better analysis of environmental issues and the costs and advantages of measures was also noted as was the need to improve implementation and enforcement of Community environmental legislation.

In advance of the Fifth Meeting of the Conference of Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity to be held in Nairobi next month, Council Conclusions set out the EU position on the main issues on the agenda. Ministers were also updated on the successful conclusion of the negotiations on the Biosafety Protocol in January. There was also some discussion on the Community position for the next Conference of Parties to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES), taking place in April.

Ministers debated, for the second time, two related proposals to improve air quality. The first would set national emission ceilings on emissions of air pollutants that cause acidification, eutrophication and ground level ozone formation, and the second, target values for ozone in ambient air. Agreement had not been possible on a related proposal controlling emissions from large combustion plants, considered at the last Environment Council in December. Further negotiations on these measures are expected in the remainder of the Portuguese Presidency.

A first Ministerial discussion was held on the White Paper on Environmental Liability, adopted by the Commission in February. The Commission presented two recently published policy documents on climate change, one concerned with an EU wide emissions trading scheme and the other on common and co-ordinated policies and measures. Climate change was further discussed over lunch when Ministers considered preparations for the Sixth Conference of Parties to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change taking place in November.

Presentations to Council were also given by the Commission on its Communication outlining the application of the Precautionary Principle, and on environmental indicators. The Presidency reported on the progress of two dossiers subject to conciliation with the European Parliament, the draft Water Framework Directive and draft End of Life Vehicles Directive. In response to a Swedish point under Any Other Business, I explained that I hoped shortly to forward to the Commission a completed environmental risk assessment and risk reduction strategy for the brominated flame retardant penta-BDE, and encouraged other member states to agree prompt action.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list his Department's expenditure limits, including any revisions following the Budget, for the years 1997–98 to 2001–02 on a consistent basis in the format of table 8.1 of the report, Modern Public Services for Britain (Cm 4011), in (a) cash terms and (b) current prices. [117500]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The table sets out the position on my Department's Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit for the years 1997–98 to 2001–02, including the revisions announced in the Budget and £40 million provided subsequently for London Underground, in (a) cash terms and (b) current (2000–01) prices.

Public Transport (North-east)

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to make public transport in the North East more affordable and accessible to those on low incomes. [117943]

Mr. Hill: For the three years 1998–99 to 2000–01 we are providing £1.3 million a year for additional rural bus services in the North East. In 1998–99 that money provided for 105 new or enhanced services. Further, we have provided £2.3 million for seven projects in the North East as part of the Rural Bus Challenge competitions, which aim to stimulate innovation in rural bus services.

The Transport Bill at present before Parliament contains provisions to guarantee that all elderly people will be entitled to at least half-price travel on local buses; we have recently announced that any associated bus pass will be free of charge. These measures will bring benefit to all regions but will be particularly welcome in areas where at present the local authority offer a less generous concessionary fare scheme, or none at all.

In addition, we have commissioned research to identify transport measures that could help to reduce social exclusion. The research, which is due to be completed shortly, looks specifically at the needs of people on low incomes.

Second Homes

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral answer of 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 809, on second homes, what is the estimated timescale for making a decision on granting discretionary powers to local authorities to apply full council tax on second homes in certain circumstances. [118189]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Applying full council tax to second homes was one of the proposals made by respondents to our consultation last year on rural issues. We expect to publish our proposals for tackling rural problems in a Rural White Paper in the summer.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will declare a moratorium on the siting of telecommunications masts in residential areas until the health and safety implications have been fully explored. [118290]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones, set up at the instigation of the Government and chaired by Sir William Stewart FRS FRSE, is currently considering the possible health effects of the use of mobile phones, base stations and transmitters and is conducting a comprehensive assessment of existing research. The Group is expected to finalise its report shortly. The Government will consider the Group's recommendations and issue a response.

Rail Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he can take to increase the number of trains stopping at the Shotton and Hawarden railway stations; and if he will make a statement. [118191]

Mr. Hill: The Passenger Service Requirements in franchise agreements specify the minimum number of services which must call at particular stations. Train operators may provide additional services where they perceive a demand. Where additional calls at particular stations require additional subsidy this may be provided by local authorities, or through our Rail Passenger Partnership scheme.

Trains (Bicycle Carriage)

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent discussions he has had with rail operators concerning ways of further facilitating the use of trains by cyclists with particular reference to (a) the removal or reduction of carriage charges for bicycles and (b) improvements in storage; and if he will make a statement. [118100]

Mr. Hill: The Secretary of State has had no such discussions. The current franchise agreements permit train operators to make a reasonable charge for carrying bicycles although this is a matter for the operators' commercial discretion and a number do not levy any charges. In the current franchise replacement negotiations, we have asked the Franchising Director to promote the use of bicycles by seeking the reasonable provision by train operators of facilities for the carriage of cycles on trains and the storage of cycles at stations.

Local Deprivation Index

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what extra work is being carried out on the Index of Local Deprivation concerning (a) factor analysis, (b) shrinkage and (c) exponential distribution; and if he will make a statement. [118552]

Ms Beverley Hughes: All of the points raised during the consultation on the methodology have been considered and where necessary investigated through further data testing. A detailed response to the consultation, including the points raised on factor analysis, shrinkage and the exponential distribution will be released at the same time as we publish the new Index.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the 1999 rankings of local authority wards by level of deprivation will be released. [118551]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Index of Local Deprivation will be published within the next few months. At the same time all of the 1999 rankings of wards will be released.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultation his Department is planning to hold with (a) the Local Government Association, (b) special interest groups of metropolitan authorities and (c) the Association of London Government before the publication of the new index of local deprivation. [118555]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The review of the Index of Local Deprivation has been subject to four rounds of consultation lasting 167 days in all. In addition the review has been overseen by a large inter departmental steering committee which included a representative from the Local Government Association. No further rounds of consultation are planned.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will release the new information on the index of local deprivation gathered as a consequence of the recent consultation exercise; and when the summary index on the new proposals will be published. [118553]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The new Index of Local Deprivation will be published within the next few months. A detailed document outlining our response to the consultation will be released at the same time.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish the study indexing poverty and prosperity by local authorities, compiled for his Department by Oxford university. [118498]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Index of Local Deprivation which covers all local authority districts and wards in England will be published within the next few months.

Devon County Council

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what response he has made to the request from Devon county council for dispensation to pay for its redundancy and restructuring costs over a period of years. [118503]

Ms Armstrong: Devon county council asked to be allowed to treat these revenue costs as capital expenditure. Such applications are granted only when we conclude, in accordance with published criteria, that the costs could not be met out of available revenue resources. My officials have notified the council that, on the basis of the figures provided in January, the criteria are not satisfied and that consent will not be given.

Housing (Hampshire)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the oral statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Stretford and Urmston (Ms Hughes), of 21 March 2000, Official Report, column 181WH, what his assessment is of the potential for Hampshire county council to (a) reconsider the designation of land in its current plan and (b) increase further the provision for housing on previously used land. [118549]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I have not made any such assessment.

Hampshire county council together with the unitary authorities will, in the light of advice in Planning Policy Guidance Note PPG3 and the emerging Regional Planning Guidance for the South East (RPG), need to review their structure plan and bring forward alterations they consider necessary.

Meanwhile, the district and unitary authorities are required to consider PPG3 and the emerging RPG in preparing their local plans in conformity with the newly-adopted structure plan. The structure plan only distributes housing to district level, and apart from the four Major Development Areas, is not prescriptive. The districts, therefore, need to consider how to meet their requirements taking account of the advice in PPG3 on such matters as maximising use of land, avoiding inefficient development, encouraging higher densities and a wider variety of dwellings, thus reducing land take. In bringing forward their local plan proposals they should also take account of our advice to recycle existing buildings and to review all non-housing allocations including industrial and commercial allocations.

Speed Limits (HGVs)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers he has to alter the speed limit for heavy goods vehicles on single carriage-way trunk roads. [118327]

Mr. Hill: Vehicle speed limits are set out in the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 and may be varied by regulation under the provision of section 86 of that Act. There are no plans to amend the maximum speed limits applicable to heavy goods vehicles on single carriageway roads. These are 50 mph for goods vehicles up to 7.5 tonnes maximum laden weight and 40 mph for those exceeding 7.5 tonnes.

Merchant Navy

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many British ratings were employed in the UK Merchant Fleet in each of the last five years. [118355]

Mr. Hill: The Maritime and Coastguard Agency obtains data on UK seafarers from the Chamber of Shipping. The latest data available for UK ratings employed (by companies who are members of the Chamber) show that the figure is 11,340 as at May 1999.

A ratings task force, chaired by the Chamber of Shipping, has been set up and job opportunities for ratings will be considered.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many Merchant Navy officer cadets began training in the UK in each of the last five years. [118354]

Mr. Hill: The numbers of merchant navy officer cadets who began training in the UK in each of the last five years are as follows:

Year	Number
1995–96	398
1996–97	460
1997–98	465
1998–99	494
1999–2000	480

These figures relate only to cadets supported under the Government funded training schemes Government Assistance for Training (GAFT) prior to 1997–98 and Support for Maritime Training (SMarT) since then.

Shipping

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many new vessels were delivered to UK private-sector shipowners in each of the last five years; and what were their total cost and total tonnage. [118356]

Mr. Hill: Detailed information for the last nine available years is presented in Table 7.8 of Maritime Statistics 1998, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. This shows the number and value of expenditure of new ships delivered to UK private sector ship owners.

The information is summarised in the table.

Deliveries of new ships to UK private sector ship owners

	Number	Value of Expenditure (£ million)
1994	16	283
1995	13	472
1996	14	78
1997	25	298

No information is readily available on the tonnage of these ships.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many foreign ships have been inspected under port state control arrangements in UK ports in each of the last five years; of those how many and what proportion had to be detained; and what percentage of inspected ships were found to have deficiencies. [118353]

Mr. Hill: The figures for foreign-flagged ships inspected by the UK under Port State Control are as follows:

Year	Number PSC Inspections	Number detained	Percentage detained	Percentage with deficiencies
1995–96	2,098	206	9.8	70.5
1996–97	1,880	157	8.4	71.3
1997–98	1,890	179	9.5	73.0

Maritime and Coastguard Agency

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many inspections were carried out by the Maritime and Coastguard Agency in each of the last five years. [118352]

Mr. Hill: The figures for the numbers of ships inspected by the Maritime and Coastguard Agency in each of the last five financial years are as follows:

Year	Part State Control Inspections	Inspections of UK Ships
1995–96	2,098	5,293
1996–97	1,880	4,626
1997–98	1,890	3,289

Disabled Drivers

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what contingency plans he has made for providing continuing cover for parking for disabled drivers if badges were not received by 1 April; [118735]

(2) if he will make a statement on progress with the introduction of the new disabled parking badges. [118592]

Mr. Hill: The regulations to introduce the new blue parking badge for disabled people came into effect on 1 April.

Distribution of the new blue badges took place during the last week in March to local authorities who had placed orders. The majority of those local authorities received badges ready for business on Monday, 3 April. However, owing to some technical problems at the printer/supplier, some authorities did not receive the badges until Tuesday, 4 April.

My Department were informed by our supplier at the end of March that some local authorities had not placed orders for badges, despite letters prompting them to do so from both the Department and the badge supplier. Officials have since written again to all local authorities on this issue. From the checks we have carried out, and from the information provided by the supplier, we believe almost all local authorities have placed orders and have received a supply of badges. We have, however, taken the precaution of writing to ACPO (Association of Chief Police Officers) asking them to advise members not to take enforcement action against anyone displaying an orange badge which expires in April which is otherwise being used in accordance with the regulations.

We regret that the transition has not been as smooth as we would have wished, but we hope the action we have taken will avoid any distress or confusion for any disabled motorist who has difficulty getting a blue badge.

Contaminated Land

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what effect the contaminated land regime which came into force for England on 1 April will have on the programme of financial support to English local authorities and to the Environment Agency to meet the costs of dealing with contaminated land. [118940]

Mr. Mullin: The new contaminated land regime (under Part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990—inserted by section 57 of the Environment Act 1995) came into force in England on 1 April 2000. The Contaminated Land Supplementary Credit Approval (SCA) programme will continue to provide support to English local authorities to deal with contamination. The SCA programme will assist these local authorities in dealing with sites, for which they are responsible, that are deemed to be "contaminated land" under Part IIA. £21 million has been made available under this programme for 2000–01.

The SCA programme has provided valued support to English local authorities in dealing with contaminated land and, in later years, provided additional grand in aid to the Environment Agency. Under the new regime the grant will be available to the Agency in respect of their new duties for contaminated sites that are designated "Special Site" under Part IIA.

Authorities with on-going contractual commitments for projects funded in previous years have already received notification that support will continue to be available this year. I have agreed the programme for new projects to start this year and my Department has written today to the successful authorities and to the Environment Agency notifying them of the financial allocations which are being made.

The Department will discuss the other bids with the authorities concerned and expects to make some further allocations. It will also decide new bids when they are received.

The table sets out the allocations which have been made so far this current financial year.

Roads (Greater London)

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which roads are to become the first Greater London Authority roads and Greater London Authority side roads; and if he will make a statement. [119094]

Mr. Hill: We consulted extensively in 1998 on which roads should be the responsibility of the Mayor and we announced the Government's intentions for the GLA road network in February 1999. The GLA road network is based on the current red and primary route networks with some adjustments in central London and docklands. Earlier this year, we consulted further on the detail of the orders needed to create the network we had announced. We received 53 responses. Many of these were technical drafting suggestions, but there were 26 which either supported or opposed the inclusion of Belgrave Road in Pimlico. I have placed a summary of all the representations in the Library of the House.

I have considered carefully all the representations received. In the case of Belgrave Road, the Traffic Director for London has confirmed he is content with Westminster City council's proposals for traffic management in the area and the council has given assurances that they will undertake the necessary works. In the light of this, I have concluded that Belgrave Road should not be designated as a GLA road now. From 8 May, it will be for the Mayor to keep the GLA road network under review. The Mayor may change the GLA road network with the agreement of the local borough, or in the absence of such agreement, with the confirmation of the Secretary of State.

I have placed maps of the first GLA road network in the Library and shall shortly lay orders to designate the first GLA roads for which Transport for London, the Mayor's new transport executive, will be the highway and traffic authority from 3 July. I shall also be laying 32 GLA Side Roads Orders, one for each borough in which there are GLA roads. These orders will give Transport for London traffic authority powers over small sections of side roads associated with the GLA roads which are currently subject to red route controls.

Oil Stores (Water Pollution)

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to prevent water pollution from oil stores. [119203]

Mr. Meacher: I am today announcing the issue of a consultation paper seeking comments by 12 July on proposals to introduce new controls on water pollution from oil stores in England. I understand that the National Assembly for Wales is considering introducing similar proposals in due course.

Oil-related water pollution incidents in England accounted for 30 per cent. of all water pollution in 1998, mainly due to leaks from unbunded oil storage tanks. It is my intention to introduce new Regulations later this year to reduce the number of such oil-related incidents in England by about a half by the year 2005. This would be achieved by setting design standards for all above ground oil stores and requiring that secondary containment, such as a "bund" (a surrounding wall) or "drip tray" is in place to prevent oil escaping into controlled waters.

Oil pollution of fresh waters has grown in recent years, causing harm to wildlife, damage to our rivers and disruption to water supplies. These proposed new Regulations would be a cost-effective measure that would help to protect the environment.

Those mainly affected by the proposed new Regulations would include anyone storing oil on industrial, commercial, institutional (residential and non-residential) premises. There would be exceptions in certain circumstances, for example, where other controls exist or where the controls would not be cost-effective. Underground oil storage tanks can be regulated by the Environment Agency under the Groundwater Regulations 1998 and it is not considered necessary to introduce further controls.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Personal Envoys

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what code of conduct personal envoys operate. [116354]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 28 March 2000]: Any individual acting on behalf of the Government is subject to the normal requirements including confidentiality and accountability to Ministers.

Kosovo

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which NATO member states' parliaments passed resolutions endorsing NATO's military action over Kosovo. [117828]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 6 April 2000]: According to our information, the parliaments of Germany, Denmark and Turkey passed formal resolutions on NATO's military actions over Kosovo. The Hungarian parliament approved the use of Hungarian airspace and airbases by NATO. The US House of Representatives also passed a resolution expressing support for the US Armed Forces engaged in military operations against FRY.

Russian Nuclear Arsenal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to President Putin of Russia in respect of his recent statements on the capacity of the Russian nuclear arsenal. [118495]

Mr. Vaz: We have noted Acting President Putin's recent comments on the need for a reduced but more effective nuclear deterrent. We welcome his call for the early ratification of START II and the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty; and for early negotiations on the START III treaty.

These issues were most recently discussed at senior official level during last month's annual UK-Russian strategic stability talks.

UNIFIL

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the British Government have been asked to consider contributing troops to an expanded UNIFIL in the event of an Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon by (a) the Israeli Government, (b) the Lebanon Government and (c) other Governments. [118311]

Mr. Hain: The British Government have received no requests to consider contributing troops to an expanded UNIFIL in the event of an Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon by either (a) the Israeli Government, (b) the Lebanon Government or (c) other governments.

Burma

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Burmese Government concerning the sentence imposed on Mr. James Mawdsley in Burma and his treatment in prison. [118658]

Mr. Hain: Our Ambassador in Rangoon regularly raises James's case with the Burmese authorities, including the Foreign Minister, Minister of Home Affairs and the Deputy Foreign Minister. The Under-Secretary of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, also summoned the Burmese Ambassador in September last year to express our concerns about the case. Our Embassy have sent 43 official notes and one official letter to date.

In particular, we have protested about:

the failure of the Burmese authorities to inform us of his arrest;

the delay over consular access;

the denial of legal representation;

the length of the sentence;

mistreatment in prison;

lack of access to reading and writing material;

length of recreation time;

delay in getting the trial transcript;

delays in receiving food parcels, letters and books.

We will continue to do everything we can to help James and remain in frequent contact with his family.

Serbia and Montenegro

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the British Government are making contingency plans for intervention if Montenegrin steps towards independence are violently opposed by Serbia. [118253]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 11 April 2000]: The international community, including the UK, is watching the situation in and around Montenegro closely. It would not be sensible to comment on contingency plans.

Intelligence Service Tribunal

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been made following the expiry of the terms of appointment of the members of the Intelligence Service Tribunal on 15 December 1999; and if he will make a statement. [119095]

Mr. Robin Cook: Lord Justice Mummery has been appointed as President of the Tribunal for a period of five years, following his predecessor's acceptance of an appointment to the post of Intelligence Services Commissioner. Sheriff John McInnes has been re-appointed as Vice President of the Tribunal and both he and Sir Richard Gaskell have been re-appointed to the Tribunal for a further period of five years.

Lord Justice Simon Brown, formerly president of the Intelligence Services Tribunal, has accepted an appointment as the Intelligence Services Commissioner for a period of three years from 1 April 2000.

WALES

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117471]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts on 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 392W.

In addition, some works of art displayed within my Department are on loan from the National Museum and Galleries of Wales. My Department does not own any works of art, and no expenditure has been incurred since 1992 towards either upkeep or purchase.

Economy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary concerning the state of the Welsh economy; and if he will make a statement. [116231]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have regular meetings with the First Secretary and discuss a range of issues.

It is the sound policies of this Government that continue to build on our growing economy. The Budget is excellent news for the Welsh economy and will see Wales benefiting from increased spending on a number of valuable services. The health service in Wales will get an extra £99 million in 2000–01 from the Budget. Additionally, Wales will get a £50 million share for education and around £9.1 million for transport.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Computers for Teachers Initiative

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many and what percentage of teachers have taken up the Computers for Teachers Initiative in England since its implementation; and if he will make a statement on the benefits of the scheme. [118702]

Mr. Wills: To date the DfEE has received some 9,000 applications under this initiative since its launch on 12 January 2000. This represents some 2.3 per cent. of teachers in England in the first three months of the scheme. This initiative is one of a series of initiatives to increase access to computers by teachers and headteachers.

The major financial incentive of up to £500 subsidy on the purchase of quality assured and high specification computer packages will encourage teachers to participate fully in the Information Age. Teacher competence and confidence in their personal use of ICT should be raised as take-up will be conditional on undertaking training in ICT use in the classroom available to teachers through the New Opportunities Fund. This in turn will benefit their approach to the use of ICT in the classroom. In this way, standards will be raised across all subjects, and school administration and management will be improved.

Curriculum 2000

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funding is provided for Curriculum 2000 for each local education authority for the financial year 2000–01. [118559]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 10 April 2000]: Funding of £35 million for the Curriculum 2000 reforms has been included in Education Standard Spending for 2000–01.

Since local authority funding is unhypothecated, it would not be meaningful to break this figure down to local education authority level.

Capital Allocations (Cleethorpes)

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the total capital allocation since May 1997 to schools in the Cleethorpes constituency; and if he will break down these capital allocations by category. [118654]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is in the table.

Capital programme	Amount allocated to schools in the Cleethorpes constituency since May 1997
Surplus Place Removal[1]	882
New Deal for Schools	2,263
Schools Access Initiative	80
Energy Management	13
Class Sizes	1,149
Grant for Voluntary Aided schools	536
Devolved Formula Capital	401
Total[2]	5,324

[1] Although credit approval was allocated in respect of projects to remove surplus places from schools in the Cleethorpes constituency, the local education authorities (LEAs) are not obliged to use the credit approval for those schools.

[2] We have made other capital allocations to the LEAs covered by the Cleethorpes constituency, but it is for the LEAs to decide which schools will benefit from the use of those allocations.

Pupil Behaviour

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps the Government are taking to help schools improve pupil behaviour. [118678]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 11 April 2000]: We are making nearly £500 million available over three years to help schools improve pupil behaviour. This is backed up with new guidance on "Social Inclusion: Pupil Support" issued last July which offers schools advice on good practice in tackling pupils' behavioural problems. In addition, the Excellence in Cities initiative includes the provision of Learning Mentors and Learning Support Units to help school better manage disruptive pupils.

And the new Connexions service will complement these initiatives in providing coherent and co-ordinated support for all young people when and where they need it to enable them to participate effectively in appropriate learning.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment his Department has made of the impact on standards of educational achievement of poor behaviour in schools. [118677]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 11 April 2000]: My Department has not carried out an assessment of the impact of poor behaviour on achievement. However, data in the Department's Youth Cohort Study show that in 1997 31 per cent. of truanting pupils gained no GCSEs, compared to only 4 per cent. of non-truanting pupils.

In addition, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of School's latest annual report, published in February, shows the clear link between standards of behaviour and educational achievement. For example, in the majority of secondary schools pupils have positive attitudes to their lessons and to school; however, in a minority, pupils' attitudes to learning are particularly poor in Year 9 because not enough is done to respond to early indicators of pupil disaffection.

University for Industry

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on progress in the establishment of the University for Industry. [118373]

Mr. Wills: Excellent progress is being made. Ufl Ltd. are on track to launch their products and services nationally in the autumn. A major publicity campaign began on 19 March to heighten public awareness of Ufl Ltd.'s learndirect brand and to stimulate demand for learning among adults. This is underpinned by the learndirect information and advice telephone helpline which has helped over one million callers.

Seventy-seven learndirect Development Centres across England, Wales and Northern Ireland are now working with Ufl Ltd. to test out aspects of their services and systems as well as developing new approaches to the delivery of flexible learning. The centres are currently piloting 24 on-line products.

Ufl Ltd. are maintaining a rolling process of updating and extending the range of products to be included in their portfolio for the autumn. Their initial priorities are basic skills, ICT skills at all levels and business skills for SMEs. Over 60 per cent. of the learning portfolio will be available on-line initially and people will be able to access learndirect products and services at home, in the workplace or at learning centres nation-wide. The learndirect information and advice service will also be available on-line from May.

Academic Staff

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what response he has sent to the recent AUT/London University Institute of Education joint paper on the involvement of academic staff in the wider economy. [118430]

Mr. Wicks: The Government are already encouraging universities to forge links with the wider economy. The DfEE and DTI are funding, in partnership with the Higher Education Funding Council for England and the Department of Higher and Further Education, Training and Employment in Northern Ireland, the Higher Education Reach-out to Business and the Community Fund. Around £83 million is expected to be spent over six financial years. The fund aims to achieve systematic and sustainable change within universities and in how they relate to business through, for example, establishing centres of expertise in business links within universities, and training and development for staff, including programmes of staff exchange.

Special Needs

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the composition, financing and operations of the 11 Special Educational Needs Regional Co-ordination Projects in England. [118645]

Jacqui Smith: The 11 Special Education Needs Regional Co-ordination Projects are formed as follows:

North East

Redcar and Cleveland, Durham, Northumberland, Newcastle upon Tyne, North Tyneside, South Tyneside, Gateshead, Sunderland, Darlington, Hartlepool, Stockton-on-Tees and Middlesbrough.

East of England

Hertfordshire, Bedfordshire, Essex, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, Luton, Norfolk, Southend-on-Sea, Peterborough and Thurrock.

London

All 33 London boroughs.

Merseyside

St. Helens, Halton, Liverpool, Knowsley, Sefton and Wirral.

South West

Devon, Cornwall, North Somerset, City of Bristol, South Gloucestershire, Plymouth, Torbay, Somerset, Bath and North East Somerset, Gloucestershire, Swindon, Wiltshire, Bournemouth, Dorset, Poole and Isles of Scilly.

West Midlands

Coventry, Dudley, Sandwell, Solihull, Wolverhampton, Warwickshire, Walsall, Telford and Wrekin, Birmingham, Staffordshire, Stoke on Trent, Worcestershire, Shropshire and Herefordshire.

North West

Lancashire, Blackpool, Blackburn with Darwin, Wigan, Bolton, Bury, Rochdale, Oldham, Tameside, Stockport, Manchester, Trafford, Salford, Warrington, Cheshire and Cumbria.

South East

Kent, Brighton and Hove, East Sussex, Medway, Surrey and West Sussex.

South Central

Hampshire, Bracknell Forest, Buckinghamshire, Isle of Wight, Milton Keynes, Oxfordshire, Portsmouth, Reading, Slough, Southampton, West Berkshire and Windsor and Maidenhead.

East Midlands

Northamptonshire, Derby, Derbyshire, Leicester, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Nottingham, Nottinghamshire and Rutland.

Yorkshire and the Humber

Kirklees, Barnsley, Bradford, Calderdale, Doncaster, East Riding of Yorkshire, City of Kingston upon Hull, Leeds, North East Lincolnshire, North Lincolnshire, North Yorkshire, Rotherham, Sheffield, Wakefield and York.

Each Project is bringing together local education authorities, private and voluntary organisations with relevant interests, health and social services, and training providers. The Department for Education and Employment is providing almost £1 million this year to support the network.

Each Project has determined its own focus and priorities to ensure that they address issues of concern within their region. The focus of the projects ranges from providing for pupils with low incidence disabilities to strategic planning to support inclusion. Early evidence shows that these projects will help to improve and to make more coherent services for children with special educational needs or disabilities.

A formal evaluation programme is in place. Early findings should be available in late summer. We also plan to publish a first set of good practice case studies during the autumn term.

Teachers (Performance-related Pay)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what account has been taken of the situation of (a) disabled and (b) part-time teachers in the threshold procedures for performance-related pay. [118372]

Ms Estelle Morris: The new performance threshold arrangements are accessible to all qualified teachers, including disabled and part-time teachers covered by the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Documents. Teachers' applications will be assessed in the context in which the applicant works. The assessment is about the effectiveness of the teacher in his or her own job.

The DfEE is committed to pursuing equal opportunities and has taken a series of steps to ensure that threshold arrangements do not discriminate on any grounds. The independent external assessors deployed to verify the assessments made by headteachers will receive training in equal opportunities issues and will work to a code of conduct which includes a commitment to pursuing equal opportunities. Their activities will be quality assured internally and by the Department. Applications made by teachers for threshold assessment will also be monitored for equal opportunities implications.

New Deal (Disabled People)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on progress in the establishment of the New Deal for Disabled People. [118371]

Ms Hodge: In his March 2000 Budget statement the Chancellor announced the intention to develop plans for extending the New Deal for Disabled People nationally. We want to build on what we have learnt so far; we also want to ensure that we continue to evolve and evaluate new ways of providing opportunities for disabled people. We intend to announce our detailed plans in June.

Irish Community

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action his Department is taking to (a) identify and (b) address the specific needs of the Irish community in Britain. [107584]

Mr. Wills: This Department is committed to ensuring all its policies and programmes promote equality of opportunity for disabled people, ethnic minorities and between men and women.

Furthermore, Irish was added as a national curriculum language in 1999 in response to representations from schools with a large Irish intake.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Minimum Income Guarantee

6. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his assessment of the impact of the Minimum Income Guarantee on pensioners in Northern Ireland. [117376]

8. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the impact of the Minimum Income Guarantee on pensioners in Northern Ireland. [117378]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government are committed to helping pensioners who are just getting by, to get more, through the Minimum Income Guarantee. Around 73,000 pensioners in Northern Ireland are already receiving their Minimum Income Guarantee through Income Support. We are now turning our attention to 40,000 pensioners, who may not be claiming but are possibly entitled.

RUC

7. Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of the name and insignia of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. [117377]

Mr. Ingram: In his statement to the House on 19 January 2000 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced that the Government have accepted that the name of the Royal Ulster Constabulary should be changed to the Police Service of Northern Ireland.

My right hon. Friend also announced that the new name would come into effect in the autumn of 2001 and that at the same time a new service badge will be introduced. The new Policing Board will be consulted on the new badge.

Port of Belfast

9. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on employment at the Port of Belfast. [117379]

Mr. Ingram: I am advised that the Belfast Harbour Commissioners, who are the Harbour Authority for the Port of Belfast, directly employ 133 people at present. Within the Harbour Estate, as a whole, it is estimated that about 15,000 people are employed in a wide range of industrial and commercial activity.

11. Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of the port of Belfast. [117381]

Mr. Ingram: A proposal by Belfast Harbour Commissioners involving the transfer of the Port of Belfast to the private sector, with a view to establishing a public/private partnership, with Government retaining a "golden" share interest, is under consideration. A further option, involving the restructuring of the port while retaining its true port status, is also being examined at present.

Given the vital role of the port in relation to the Northern Ireland economy, its future is a matter of considerable importance not only to the port authority and port users, but also to those in industry and commerce in Northern Ireland.

Security

10. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland. [117380]

17. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland. [117432]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) on 12 April 2000, Official Report, columns 352–53.

Decommissioning

12. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of decommissioning under the Belfast Agreement. [117382]

13. Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on arms decommissioning. [117383]

Mr. Ingram: Efforts are continuing to seek a way forward to enable decommissioning to occur as soon as possible. We would urge the IRA to re-engage with the Decommissioning Commission immediately.

22. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his latest assessment of the prospects for decommissioning. [117437]

25. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the prospects for decommissioning of terrorist arms and explosives in Northern Ireland. [117440]

26. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the prospects for decommissioning of illegally held terrorist weapons. [117441]

27. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the prospects for decommissioning of illegally held arms and explosives in Northern Ireland. [117442]

Mr. Ingram: The Government cannot force decommissioning to occur. It has to be a voluntary, inclusive and consensual process. I hope by 22 May we will have the issue addressed. The all-party consultation process that is now under way is designed to re-build confidence on all sides so that progress can be made.

Young Offenders

14. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on developments in the treatment of young offenders. [117384]

Mr. Ingram: The report of the Review of the Criminal Justice system in Northern Ireland was published on 30 March 2000. The report puts forward almost 300 recommendations covering all aspects of the criminal justice system, including a number which deal directly with arrangements for young people who offend. The Government are now consulting with the political parties, the Irish Government, members of the public and those working within the criminal justice system. I would welcome my hon. Friend's contribution to the debate on these important issues.

In a separate exercise, a departmental review of the juvenile justice centre estate has been published for consultation. The purpose of this exercise is to determine the number and location of juvenile justice centres needed against a background of a reduced custody population. The consultation period will extend over three months.

Troop Levels

15. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many soldiers were on duty in the Province on (a) the date on which he assumed office and (b) over the Christmas period in 1999. [117430]

Mr. Ingram: Military strengths are recorded on the first of each month and it is therefore not possible to provide an accurate figure for the dates requested. On 1 October 1999 there were 14,552 soldiers in the province and on 1 January 2000 there were 14,319 soldiers in the Province. These are the nearest available dates to those requested.

The figures quoted are for troops available for duty including part-time Royal Irish soldiers. It is not possible to establish the numbers who were actually on duty on these dates.

Political Developments

16. Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on political developments in Northern Ireland. [117431]

18. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the peace process in Northern Ireland. [117433]

23. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on recent political developments in Northern Ireland. [117438]

Mr. George Howarth: We continue to work in close co-operation with the Irish Government and in consultation with the political parties in Northern Ireland to try to find a way forward which will permit the restoration of the institutions as soon as possible and the implementation of the remaining aspects of the Agreement. Progress continues to be made on the implementation of the Agreement: on 30 March I announced the publication of the review of the criminal justice system in Northern Ireland and I expect to bring forward proposals to this House before Easter on matters related to the implementation of the Patten Commission's report on policing in Northern Ireland.

Direct Rule

19. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the administrative difficulties arising from restoring direct rule and from a reduced ministerial team. [117434]

Mr. George Howarth: The re-introduction of direct rule, while necessary to safeguard the institutions from collapse, is no substitute for local political representatives, accountable to the people of Northern Ireland, taking decisions about local issues. On Ministerial complement I am content for the time being with this, but should direct rule continue indefinitely, then I would expect the Prime Minister to decide to increase it.

Victim Support

20. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much funding organisations claiming to support victims of violence have received (a) from the Government and (b) from EU sources in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [117435]

Mr. Ingram: The Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments fund a number of self-help groups, organisations and agencies which support victims of violence and their families. Some of theses organisations do not, however, exist solely to help victims, and there are other organisations which assist victims but do not receive public funding. I have set out the available information on groups which have received funding over the last five years.

With the exception of the NIO's grant to Victim Support (NI) (those sums marked *), payments made by NIO represent 25 per cent. fully additional funding towards projects which have received 75 per cent. funding from the EU Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation (EUSSPPR), which began in 1995, and grants for small pilot schemes paid by the Victims Liaison Unit (those marked ). A total grant of £225,000 is being administered on behalf of the Victims Liaison Unit by the Community Relations Council for which a break down in amounts paid to each group is not available until the scheme ends in July 2000.

Funding made available by DOE and the Department of Social Development has been provided through Making Belfast Work.

In addition the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development have issued letters to offer to Fair for £5,000 and South Armagh British Victims for £2,500. The amounts are expected to be drawn down from the Rural Development Council.

Patten Commission

21. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further discussions he has had with the Northern Ireland political parties regarding the implementation of the Patten Commission's recommendations on policing in Northern Ireland. [117436]

Mr. Ingram: The Government consulted widely on the implementation of the Patten Commission's recommendations as required by the Good Friday Agreement. Although formal consultation ended at the end of November 1999 Ministers and officials have continued to meet the political parties to discuss a range of issues in the Patten Report. These meetings are part of the Government's effort to listen to concerns and put the Government's message across with a view to obtaining the widest possible acceptance and understanding of the Government's decisions in making the police service in Northern Ireland more representative, acceptable and accountable.

Shipbuilding

24. Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what support he is giving the shipbuilding industry in Northern Ireland. [117439]

Mr. Ingram: The Government will continue to give Harland and Wolff every support they can in seeking out new profitable work for the Belfast yard so as to safeguard employment and skills there. Ministers and Departments in Northern Ireland are in contact with the company to discuss how we can work together in the light of present difficulties. The company is currently following up on potential new building contracts.

Human Rights

28. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current application in Northern Ireland of the European convention on human rights. [117443]

Mr. George Howarth: The European Convention on Human Rights applies in Northern Ireland in the same way as the rest of the United Kingdom and Europe.

Assembly

29. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under what conditions he would recommend that the Northern Ireland Assembly should have its suspension lifted. [117444]

Mr. George Howarth: The decision to suspend the operation of the Northern Ireland Assembly and therefore preserve the institution from collapse was taken because the cross-community confidence necessary to make it work had begun to ebb. We are continuing to work in close co-operation with the Irish Government and in consultation with the political parties in Northern Ireland to try to achieve an understanding which gives both sides the necessary confidence to enable an early restoration of the Assembly to occur.

Violence Victims

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria are used to decide which groups claiming to support victims of violence should receive public funds. [117122]

Mr. Ingram: The Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments fund a number of groups which support victims of violence. Individual Government Departments have different responsibilities and assess applications against different criteria.

The Community Relations Unit

The criteria against which applications are assessed by the Community Relations Unit, a Unit within the office of the First and Deputy First Ministers, relate to the improvement of community relations activities and the appreciation of cultural diversity.

The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

The criteria used for selecting groups are the Rural Development Council's standard criteria under their PlaNet Programme. It has the following minimum requirements:

Applicant is a bona fide group.

Based in a rural area.

In an area of disadvantage.

Openness to cross-community participation.

Willingness to address social inclusion issues.

Commitment to group development.

The Department of Social Development

Projects should provide good value for money and as an essential requirement should:

Have specific quantitative and, where appropriate, qualitative, objectives which should be clearly identified.

In accordance with the Making Belfast Work mission statement, be of direct benefit to local communities and be seen by them as needed.

Demonstrate the involvement and influence of the local community in the decisions which affect them.

Complement or be consistent with agreed area strategies.

Be additional to mainstream departmental or agency work, or influence to a significant degree such programmes as they apply to Belfast.

Should be capable of being absorbed into mainstream funding at the end of a specific period or funded from sources other than Making Belfast Work; only in very exceptional cases will Making Belfast Work funding continue beyond three years for any individual project.

Projects will be given preference if they:

Adopt a strategic, innovative, preventative and multi-agency approach to the problems of an area.

Achieve, or at the very least encourage, a high level of local employment.

Involve partnerships among the public, voluntary and private sectors.

Demonstrably enhance the provision of public services in the area.

Harness the skills and experience of the voluntary sector and encourage volunteering.

The Northern Ireland Office

Measure 4.4 of the EU Peace and Reconciliation Programme specifically targets funding at victims and ex-prisoners groups. Decisions about which groups should be funded are taken by an Intermediary Funding Body, the Northern Ireland Voluntary Trust. This method of distribution of funding meets one of the main criteria set down by the European Commission; that decisions with regard to funding should as far as possible be taken at community level. The criteria used by the NIVT in making decisions are:

Clearly demonstrate that they meet the objectives of the sub-programme and measure them (i.e. helping those who are victims of the conflict to come to terms with their losses and accelerate the healing process).

Be backed by sound community development practices and principles.

Promote the full inclusion of marginalised groups and people.

Improve the accessibility of and quality of services for marginalised groups and people.

Promote the active participation of marginalised groups and people in the design and delivery of programmes.

Use approaches which are innovative and imaginative.

Promote gender balance in the management structures of the projects.

Where feasible, have a cross-community dimension.

Victims Liaison Unit

The Community Relations Council, which currently administers the Victim Support Grant Scheme, on behalf of the Victims Liaison Unit assesses applications under any of the following criteria:

Seeking funding to help establish a new group working in the area of victims. The group will need to demonstrate that there is an unmet need which cannot be filled by an existing group or service.

To carry out a "needs analysis".

To train volunteers or staff in the wide range of relevant support services.

To produce training or other resource materials which could be of use to groups or individuals working in this area.

To demonstrate models of good practice.

Priority will be given to projects which can produce results in the time and financial scale of the scheme.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures (a) he is taking and (b) he proposes to take to ensure that public funds given to organisations which claim to support victims of violence are used for that purpose. [117124]

Mr. Ingram: As with any grant award, all projects supported by the Community Relations Unit are subjected to an on going system of regular review and monitoring to ensure that funds are being used for the intended purpose. In addition, projects are also subject to evaluation.

To ensure that public funds paid to victims of violence groups are used for that purpose, both the NIVT and the NIO carry out verification visits on victims of violence projects. In addition to those checks, independent consultants are employed to carry out audits on a range of public funded projects, including victims of violence projects.

Within the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, funds will not be issued until there is an agreed action plan between the group and the Rural Development Council. The Rural Development Council is about to recruit an Audit Officer who will carry out audits/inspection visits to ensure that grant aid has been expended for the purpose for which it was given.

Making Belfast Work projects are monitored by Departmental staff to ensure that groups comply with the terms and conditions attached to the letter of offer or grant.

The Government will continue to monitor and evaluate awards to ensure public funds are used for the purpose for which they were granted.

Management Trainee Assessment Centre

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many companies were invited to tender for the development of the 1998 Management Trainee Assessment Centre; to which company the contract was awarded; what use was made of the results of the Assessment Centre; what plans he has to re-use the materials developed by the contractor; how much was paid to the contractor for work relating to the 1998 Management Trainee Assessment Centre as a percentage of the initial quoted costs; and if he will make a statement. [117317]

Mr. Ingram: Five companies were invited to tender for the 1998 Management Trainee Assessment Centre; the contract was awarded to ASE Consultants; the results of the Assessment Centre were used to determine the rate of progress of individuals on the Management Trainee scheme; there are no plans to re-use the material developed by the contractor for the 1998 Assessment Centre; the amount paid to the contractor for work relating to the 1998 Management Trainee Assessment Centre was the same as the initial costs quoted for the work.

Saville Inquiry

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the cost to date of the Saville Inquiry; and if he will make a statement. [117700]

Mr. Ingram: The total costs incurred by The Bloody Sunday Inquiry up to 31 March 2000 are £19,244,028.

Train Chassis Corrosion

Mr. Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of re-welding train chassis operated by Translink in each of the last three years. [117866]

Mr. Ingram: Translink have informed the Department of Regional Development that they spent £615,706 on rewelding train carriage bogies in 1998–99 but nothing in 1997–98 or 1999–2000.

Chief Electoral Officer

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what his reasons are for barring Irish citizens from submitting applications for the post of Chief Electoral Officer. [117255]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 10 April 2000]: The post of Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland is a Crown Appointment. It was considered appropriate to reserve the post for UK nationals because it discharges sensitive functions of fundamental importance to public life in Northern Ireland, including overseeing the conduct of elections.

PRIME MINISTER

Rented Housing (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what policies are being taken forward by Her Majesty's Government to increase the supply of affordable rented housing in inner London. [117461]

The Prime Minister: The Government are acutely aware of the difficulties many Londoners face in securing good quality housing at a price they can afford. That is why we are giving local authorities and registered social landlords in London an additional £1.3 billion of resources for investment in housing between 1997–98 and 2001–02. London boroughs have received £400 million of these extra resources already.

The Housing Green Paper which was announced last week by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister sets out our aims to ensure a sufficient supply of high quality affordable housing is provided where it is needed, including a new Starter Home Initiative. Londoners will be among those who benefit from our proposals.

Ministerial Code

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the compatibility between paragraphs 126 and 128 of the Ministerial Code and the use by himself, his family, persons within his employ and Ministers within his Government since 1 May 1997 of properties overseas owned by the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson). [116101]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 March 2000]: It is for individual Ministers to determine their actions in accordance with the Ministerial Code. I am not aware of any breach of the Code in relation to these properties.

Serbia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 4 April, relating to military action against Serbia. [118398]

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent reports he has received relating to the type and extent of bomb damage in Serbia in connection with the use of uranium armament; and if he will make a statement. [117522]

The Prime Minister: The UN Environment Programme published a report in October 1999, which noted, inter alia, that many environmental problems in the FRY > do not result from the recent war, but from years of environmental neglect.

The report's authors have suggested that between 50 and 70 per cent. of the pollution pre-dated the conflict.

Following that report, the United Nations asked NATO for information about use of depleted uranium (DU) during the Kosovo conflict. The NATO Secretary-General has responded, confirming that DU was used in operations against armoured equipment, mainly in Western Kosovo.

Kashmir

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he is taking towards finding a permanent and peaceful solution to the situation in Kashmir. [118505]

The Prime Minister: We continue to urge both India and Pakistan to return to bilateral dialogue to find a just and lasting solution acceptable to the people of Kashmir.

Cancer Services

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Prime Minister what progress has been made in improving cancer care services since he hosted the Cancer Summit in May 1999. [118323]

The Prime Minister: Improving cancer services is one of our top priorities for the National Health Service. For the first time we have a single Minister with responsibility both for cancer prevention and treatment. We have also appointed Professor Mike Richards as the new National Cancer Director to spearhead the drive for fairer, faster cancer services and to ensure the implementation of tough new standards of care. A broad programme of work has been put in place to ensure prompt access to cancer diagnosis and treatment and to improve the quality of our cancer services.

We are committed to modernising cancer services and have invested an extra £70 million since 1997 for breast, colo-rectal, lung and outpatient cancer services. £80 million has been made available to cut waiting times, and we are investing £100 million in cancer equipment, with the New Opportunities Fund allocating a further £93 million to this area.

We have introduced a new two-week outpatient standard waiting time for all urgent cancer referrals. This has been in place for breast cancer patients since April 1999 and over 56,000 women have benefited from this standard. This high standard of care will be extended to all those with suspected cancer requiring urgent investigation by the end of this year.

To help improve the quality of cancer services we have published evidence-based guidance on improving outcomes for breast, colo-rectal, lung and gynaecological cancers. Guidance on stomach cancers will be available in the spring, and over the next two years the National Institute for Clinical Excellence will commission further guidance on a range of other cancers.

Personal Envoys

Mr. Maude: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will list the people he has asked to convey messages to foreign Governments, whom he has not described as his personal envoys; on what dates those messages were taken; and to which Governments those messages were sent; [118287]

(2) how many personal envoys he has appointed; on what dates those personal envoys were appointed; to which Governments those personal envoys have made representations; and when. [118282]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 April 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 6 April 2000, Official Report, column 574W.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Prime Minister when (a) Lord Ahmed and (b) Lord Paul were appointed as Prime Ministerial envoys; and what public notification was issued at the time. [118429]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 April 2000]: Lord Ahmed and Lord Paul have not been appointed as Prime Ministerial envoys.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 12 April. [118370]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I will have further such meetings later today.

Security and Intelligence Service Commissioners

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements have been made to appoint a Commissioner under section 8 of the Intelligence Services Act 1994 following the expiration of Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's appointment on 15 December 1999; and if he will make a statement. [119150]

The Prime Minister: Lord Justice Stuart-Smith has accepted an extension of his appointment as Intelligence Services Commissioner until 31 March 2000 to enable him to complete his Annual Report for 1999. He recently completed that term. I thank Lord Justice Stuart-Smith for the contribution he made during his five years as Intelligence Services Commissioner.

Lord Justice Simon Brown, formerly President of the Intelligence Service Tribunal, has accepted an appointment as the Intelligence Service Commissioner for a period of three years from 1 April 2000.

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements have been made to appoint a Commissioner under section 4 of the Security Service Act 1989 following the expiration of Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's appointment on 13 December 1999; and if he will make a statement. [119148]

The Prime Minister: Lord Justice Stuart-Smith accepted an extension of his appointment as Security Service Commissioner until 31 March 2000 to enable him to complete his Annual Report for 1999. He recently completed that term. I thank Lord Justice Stuart-Smith for the contribution he made during the ten years he spent as Security Service Commissioner.

Lord Justice Simon Brown, formerly President of the Intelligence Service Tribunal, has accepted an appointment as the Security Service Commissioner for a period of three years from 1 April 2000.

Advisory Committee on Business Appointments

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the members of the Advisory Committee on Business Appointments; and if he will make a statement. [119149]

The Prime Minister: The current members are:

The right hon. Lord Mayhew of Twysden QC (Chairman)
Sir John Blelloch KCB (Vice-chairman)
The right hon. Lord Shore of Stepney
The right hon. Baroness Williams of Crosby
The Lord Wilson of Tillyorn GCMG
Admiral Sir Kenneth Eaton GBE KCB FEng FIEE
Sir Denys Henderson
Sir Bryan Nicholson.

I am pleased to say that Lord Wilson of Tillyorn has agreed to join the Committee. He had a distinguished career in the Diplomatic Service and served as Governor of Hong Kong. He has also had extensive experience of both business and academic life since his retirement.

The Advisory Committee advises me on applications from the most senior Crown Servants to take up business appointments after leaving the Service, and it also gives advice directly to former Ministers on appointments they wish to accept after leaving office. The members of the Committee are unpaid, and I am grateful to them for the time they give to this role.

HEALTH

Quality Protects

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the outcome of the evaluation of the Quality Protects Management Action Plans submitted to his Department by local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [118864]

Mr. Hutton: All local authorities with social services responsibilities submitted their Quality Protects Management Action Plans (MAPs) to the Department of Health by the end of January. The Social Services Inspectorate has now completed its evaluation of the MAPs, and I have considered their findings. I am pleased to announce that MAPs from all 150 local councils have reached an acceptable standard, with eight assessed as of particularly high quality. I have today written to the chief executives of the authorities to confirm that, subject to Parliamentary approval, they will receive payment of their allocation of the children's services special grant for 2000–01.

The eight MAPs that were assessed as being of particularly high quality were Blackpool, Manchester, Portsmouth, Stockton-on-Tees, Suffolk, Tameside, Westminster and Wandsworth.

Local authorities have made a good start over the past year in implementing Quality Protects, which is making a real difference to the lives of children in need and in particular looked after children. We must maintain that momentum to deliver lasting and continued improvements in the way in which children's services are managed and delivered in order to improve outcomes for our most vulnerable children.

Cancer

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual expenditure allocated by his Department to (a) the Christie Hospital and (b) the Royal Marsden Hospital for cancer care and treatment, in the last three years for which figures are available. [116109]

Mr. Denham: The total income for the Christie Hospital and the Royal Marsden Hospital for the years 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99 is as follows:

£ million

	Christie Hospital	Royal Marsden
1996–97	51.6	65.7

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the annual income of (a) the Christie Hospital and (b) the Royal Marsden Hospital was derived from the provision of private health care services, in the last three years for which figures are available. [116112]

Mr. Denham: The proportion of the total annual income for the Christie Hospital and the Royal Marsden Hospital for the years 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99 which has been derived from the provision of private health care services is as follows:

£ million

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Christie Hospital
Total Income	51.6	53.3	57.3
Private Patients	2.6	2.8	3.7
Royal Marsden Hospital
Total Income	65.7	70.1	74.8
Private Patients	11.7	13.4	15.5

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual Government funding for research into (a) breast cancer and (b) prostate cancer in each of the last two years. [117138]

Yvette Cooper: Our funding for cancer research is provided through a number of routes.

The Medical Research Council (MRC) is the main agency through which the Government support research on the causes and treatment of disease. The MRC receives most of its income via grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. The Department funds research to support policy development in health and social care, and to support effective practice in the National Health Service. The Department also provides NHS support funding for research commissioned by the MRC and charities that takes place in the NHS.

The approximate annual Government expenditure (Department of Health/NHS, MRC and other Government Departments—principally devolved health Departments) on breast cancer and prostate cancer are £9.33 million and £1.55 million respectively. These figures underestimate the total Government research expenditure in these areas, as detailed estimates of NHS support funding are not currently collected routinely.

Since 1997 the Government have committed an extra £800,000 to new research projects on prostate cancer, through the Medical Research Council and through the Department of Health. The Department has actively sought to support such work in prostate cancer, and has not rejected any high quality proposals for work in this area.

The Department recently announced £1 million additional new funding for this financial year for urgent research studies into prostate cancer as a mark of its concern over this disease.

Following the seminar last year at No. 10 a "Cancer Research Funders' Forum" has been established to help improve the co-ordination of cancer research in the United Kingdom. It is being run by the MRC and includes departmental representatives and the major cancer research charities. At the Department's request, the Forum considered the issue of prostate cancer at its first meeting on 10 January. They agreed to set up an expert group on prostate cancer, which will identify gaps in current research and suggest ways of filling them. The expert group met for the first time on 25 February, and expects to report within months.

We have recently appointed a National Cancer Director, Professor Mike Richards, who will spearhead our concerted drive on cancer. He will work in partnership with doctors, nurses, general practitioners, other health professionals and the voluntary sector to improve prevention and modernise cancer services to help ensure equitable access to high quality cancer care. This will include a close interest in the development and progression of research. The Government keep their priorities for research under review. In the NHS priorities are identified through widespread consultation with those using, delivering and managing services. They take account of the burden of disease, potential benefits and Government objectives as well as the responsibilities and work of other funders—including the charities.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the Government spent on treatments for (a) breast cancer and (b) prostate cancer in each of the last two years. [117139]

Yvette Cooper: Information showing expenditure on cancer treatment by cancer site is not available. However, cancer services are estimated to account for 6.3 per cent. (£1.5 billion) of National Health Service hospital expenditure in England. This excludes cancer services not normally provided on an in-patient basis, for example cancer screening, chemotherapy, radiotherapy and community palliative cancer services.

The Department has commissioned work to improve overall NHS information, including national statistics on hospital prescribing, which will give us a more accurate method of recording hospital expenditure on cancer treatment.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the use of taxanes in the treatment of ovarian and advanced breast cancer. [118325]

Yvette Cooper: The efficiency and effectiveness of taxanes is currently being assessed by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. The process is still continuing but we expect the guidance to be issued shortly.

Consultants

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultants are employed in North East England; what strategy he has for dealing with shortages in the number of consultants; and how many were employed in each of the last five years. [117210]

Mr. Denham: The latest information about numbers of consultants in North East England is shown in the table.

Overall, there is no sign of a national shortage of consultants, and where there are problems, these are in certain specialties or in particular geographical areas. Numbers continue to rise steadily and difficulties in filling vacancies are not widespread.

At national level we aim to ensure that there are enough doctors in training for there to be sufficient becoming fully trained specialists to meet the future needs of the National Health Service. At local level, it is for NHS trusts and health authorities, who are accountable for the services they provide, to determine the number, grade and mix of staff they require, in the light of local circumstances, in order to provide quality services to patients.

On 6 April I announced plans to train 393 extra hospital specialists. Added to the specialist doctors already in training, there should be an additional 13,000 fully trained hospital specialists in the National Health Service by 2006–07. The additional places will take forward our plans to increase capacity in the NHS, so that patients have easier access to faster, fairer and more convenient services.

Hospital medical consultants employed in the North East of England

	Headcount
At 30 September
1994	880
1995	1,280
1996	1,160
1997	1,210
1998	1,230

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.
2. The North East of England is defined as the following Health Authorities: Northumberland, Newcastle and North Tyneside, Gateshead and South Tyneside, Sunderland, County Durham and Tees.
3. Before 1996 some hospital medical staff were employed directly by the Regional Health Authority and so may not be included in these figures.

Abortion

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the evidence-based guidelines, published on 13 March, by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, on the care of women seeking abortion will be implemented. [117684]

Yvette Cooper: This new guideline will be circulated to college members. We expect the guideline to be used as the basis of local protocols which are designed to promote the development of high quality services and take account of local needs and service provision. In addition, the guideline will be considered as part of the national sexual health strategy currently being developed.

Dental Services

Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the rate of replacement of fillings and crowns in NHS dentistry in each of the last 10 years. [117853]

Mr. Hutton: During 1998–99, 387,777 fillings and 81,891 crowns or approximately 2 per cent. of treatments for fillings and crowns in England and Wales were replaced under paragraph 7 of the Terms of Service for Dentists (Schedule 1 of the National Health Service (General Dental Services) Regulation 1992).

Comparable information is not available for earlier years.

The percentage does not include fillings or crowns which are replaced in later courses of treatment on which information is not available.

Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how time spent on advising patients on how to improve dental hygiene is reflected in dentists' remuneration. [117945]

Mr. Hutton: Time spent on advising patients on how to improve dental hygiene and maintain oral health is remunerated in a number of ways through the fee scales laid down in Determination I of the Statement of Dental Remuneration. Dentists are paid as follows:

monthly capitation payments for every registered patient under the age of 18 (item 41); monthly continuing care payments for every registered patient aged over 18 (item 45); fee for examination and report (item 1); intensive instruction in the prevention of dental disease (item 6); and, non-surgical treatment of periodontal disease (item 10).

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117811]

Ms Stuart: The Department employs no lawyers.

Legal services are supplied to the Department by the Department of Social Security through a Service Level Agreement. The number of lawyers employed by the Department of Social Security are set out in the answer of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security on 10 April 2000, Official Report, column 25W.

Waiting Times

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish on a regular basis information about waiting times between patients seeing a consultant and receiving in-patient treatment for each specialty at each NHS hospital. [118260]

Mr. Denham: This information is already available on a quarterly basis, as information on waiting times of patients who are waiting to be admitted to an National Health Service trust are published quarterly in Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England, copies of which are available in the Library. The latest data available relate to the quarter ended 31 December 1999.

Commission for Health Improvement

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role the Commission for Health Improvement will play in inspecting and monitoring hospital performance in relation to (a) hygiene and the work of cleaning contractors, (b) nutritional standards for patients' food and catering contracts and (c) preventing and stopping cross-infection. [118382]

Yvette Cooper: The Commission for Health Improvement will provide robust, independent scrutiny of National Health Service arrangements to assure the quality of health care. Its clinical expertise will be brought to bear on the areas identified. It is recognised that there are also important non-clinical, organisational factors to be taken into account. Therefore the Commission will work closely with other external review and inspection bodies such as the Health and Safety Executive and the Audit Commission to ensure comprehensive monitoring of NHS hospitals.

Taxanes

Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines he has issued to health authorities regarding the funding of taxanes; [118344]

(2) if he will list those health authorities which fund the prescribing of taxanes; [118347]

(3) if he will list the (a) spending on cancer drugs per head of population, (b) spending on cancer drugs as a percentage of total spending on cancer and (c) spending on cancer drugs as a percentage of total drugs expenditure, in (i) England, (ii) Scotland, (iii) Wales, (iv) Northern Ireland, (v) other EU countries, (vi) the USA and (vii) Japan, for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement; [118343]

(4) when he expects to receive the final report from the National Institute for Clinical Excellence on taxanes. [118346]

Yvette Cooper: The most up-to-date guidance currently available to the National Health Service on the use of taxanes is included in "Improving Outcomes in Gynaecological Cancer". The efficiency and effectiveness of taxanes is currently being assessed by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. The process is still continuing but we expect the guidance to be issued shortly.

Detailed spending information on cancer services, including drugs, is not currently held centrally, and it is not therefore possible to compare data for England with any other country. We do know that spending on cancer in-patient care is estimated to account for 6.3 per cent. (£1.5 billion) of National Health Service hospital expenditure. This figure does not cover spending on cancer services not provided on an in-patient basis including cancer screening, chemotherapy, radiotherapy and community palliative care services.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies his Department has made of the differences in the annual cost of treatment using beta interferon between the UK and other countries; and what factors are responsible for these differences. [118530]

Mr. Denham: The Department has made no studies of the cost of treatment in different countries. As far as the prices of the beta interferon medicines are concerned, the Department has information both from the manufacturers and from contacts in the health authorities of other countries. Direct comparisons of prices of products of this type are misleading because they are often supplied direct to hospitals, making list prices less significant. Furthermore some countries include distribution costs and some aspects of care within the list price while others account for them separately.

Subject to these qualifications, it can be said that in general the annual cost of beta interferons in the United Kingdom is slightly greater than in other European Union countries, reflecting currency movements since the products were introduced.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason there is no neuro-specialist on the NICE Committee which is examining beta interferon. [118541]

Mr. Denham: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence Technology Appraisal Committee consists of 24 standing members, appointed for three years which combines patient advocates, National Health Service clinicians and mangers, academic experts, and industry representation. However, the standing committee is supported by technology-specific clinical experts brought in for a particular intervention. When the committee appraises beta interferon the clinical experts will be neurologists.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on how beta interferon is targeted for use by MS suffers in the National Health Service; [118329]

(2) what representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) against extending the availability of beta interferon to MS sufferers; and if he will make a statement; [118348]

(3) if he will estimate the number of MS sufferers who will potentially benefit from beta interferon in reducing (a) the progress of MS and (b) the number of MS relapses; and if he will make a statement; [118330]

(4) what plans he has to fund large-scale trials of beta interferon in the treatment of MS sufferers; and if he will make a statement. [118331]

Mr. Denham: We have asked the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) to conduct an authoritative appraisal of beta interferon as part of its first appraisal programme. NICE is expected to report in the summer.

It would be premature to speculate on the number of multiple sclerosis sufferers who will potentially benefit from beta interferon when NICE has not yet come to a view on clinical and cost effectiveness.

Over the past 12 months the Department's records indicate receipt of approximately 1,000 written representations from hon. Members, patient groups and the public expressing concern about the current arrangements for prescribing and funding of beta interferon.

Guidance issued by the Department in 1995, Executive Letter (95)97, recommends that health authorities should have in place arrangements for hospital specialists to initiate treatment in the light of medical evidence and local priorities.

Oncology Drugs

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the allocation of investment to health authority budgets for oncology drugs. [118324]

Yvette Cooper: Funding for oncology drugs is not identified separately within allocations made to health authorities. Improving cancer services is one of the National Health Services top priorities for action, and health authorities and primary care groups will need to take this into account in allocating resources.

We have made clear in a letter to all health authority chief executives that the extra £600 million allocated to the Health Service for 2000–01 will, in part, be used to meet any additional costs arising from implementation of recommendations by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence.

Pathogenesis

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the identifiable causes of (a) ME, (b) MS and (c) HIV/AIDS. [118585]

Yvette Cooper: The causes of myalgic encephalomyelitis also known as chronic fatigue syndrome are not known. A large number of different disorders have been put forward or implicated in trying to identify its causes. These range from biochemical and immunological disorders and various viruses including the Epstein Barr virus (glandular fever). It seems possible that the syndrome represents a spectrum of illnesses, some of which will have an unidentified physical cause.

The causes of multiple sclerosis are not known. However, there is some evidence to suggest cause may be linked to environmental factors. A 1993 British Society of Rehabilitation Medicine Working Party Report on MS notes that the prevalence of MS is related to geographical latitudes, being higher in the north of Britain than in the South. The best evidence to date reports a prevalence rising from 99 per 100,000 of the population in Southampton to 178 per 100,000 of the population in North East Scotland.

There is an international scientific consensus that infection with Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) is the cause of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS). This understanding is based on worldwide studies of individuals with AIDS, populations known to be at risk of AIDS, as well as studies of the virus itself.

NHS Staff (East Somerset)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) nurses, (b) doctors, (c) consultants and (d) midwives were employed by the (i) East Somerset Health Authority and (ii) Yeovil district hospital in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [118639]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 11 April 2000]: The information requested is shown in the table.

NHS Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS): nursing and midwifery staff and hospital medical staff, within Somerset Health Authority, and for East Somerset NHS Trust, for each year as at 30 September

[1] Somerset Health Authority includes Somerset Health Authority, Avalon, Somerset NHS Trust, East Somerset NHS Trust and Taunton and Somerset NHS Trust.
[2] Hospital medical staff includes all doctors working in hospitals within the HCHS sector.

2. 1995 to 1998 figures exclude agency staff and learners.
3. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.
4. A new classification of the non-medical workforce was introduced in 1995. Information based on this classification is not directly comparable with earlier years.

Cleaning and Hygiene Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate (a) how many and (b) what percentage of hospitals have contracted out cleaning and hygiene services for clinical areas to private operators; how many had done so before 1 May 1997; and how many have done so since 1 May 1997. [118517]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 11 April 200]: The information is not collected centrally. Trust chief executives are responsible for standards of cleanliness and hygiene in hospitals. Hospitals contract out provision of cleaning services, or provide them in-house. Regardless of the method of provision, the services provided should meet appropriate standards and provide best value. To help trusts meet appropriate standards we will be publishing later this month "Standards for Environmental Cleanliness in Hospitals", developed by the Infection Control Nurses Association and the Association of Domestic Managers.

Dentists (Pay)

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to include dental therapists in a pay review body; and if he will make a statement. [118518]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 11 April 2000]: Our proposals for modernising National Health Service pay which were published in February 1999 in "Agenda for Change", include bringing some groups of highly qualified staff within the scope of the Nursing Pay Review Body, without changing its fundamentally professional character.

Initial discussions with NHS trade unions on pay modernisation resulted in a joint Framework of Principles and Agreed Statement on the Way Forward which was published on 8 October 1999. Para 7.2 of the Joint Framework sets out the following starting point for more detailed discussions with trade unions on the qualifying criteria for groups to come within the scope of the NPRB:

> Professions with a minimum entry requirement of three years educational study (or equivalent) to diploma level or higher, in a health specific area (other than medicine or dentistry) and which are state registered and have a substantial majority of members employed in health care.
> Exceptions might be agreed for staff groups which met the majority but not all of these conditions
> Staff groups which support professions added to the NPRB remit, and who have a direct connection with the transferred groups similar to that between nursing auxiliaries and registered nurses would also need to be considered for transfer.

I am sure the hon. Member will appreciate that as this is part of continuing confidential discussions with NHS Unions aimed at reaching agreement by summer 2000, I am unable to comment further at this stage.

Re-branding Exercise

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the cost of the re-branding exercise (a) across the NHS and (b) by region. [118670]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 11 April 2000]: Adoption of the national National Health Service mark is being undertaken as items come up for replacement in the normal course of business. As a result, no NHS organisation has been required to undertake any additional work and no additional costs to NHS organisations are envisaged. New NHS organisations formed as the result of mergers will save money by adoption of the existing mark rather than having to invest in designing a new logo.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what date the re-branding exercise in the NHS has to be completed. [118669]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 11 April 2000]: Health authorities have been asked to start using the existing National Health Service mark by January 2000, and NHS trusts by April 2001. No deadline has been set for NHS organisations to apply the NHS mark universally.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the cost of materials which will become obsolete through the re-branding of the NHS. [118733]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 11 April 2000]: No items will become obsolete through the re-branding of the National Health Service. Materials will be ordered in the new style only when they come up for replacement in the normal course of business.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the items used by the NHS on which the new NHS logo is to be placed. [118668]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 11 April 2000]: The National Health Service mark should be used on any item which previously displayed an NHS trust or health authority logo. Items will be ordered in the new style only when they come up for replacement in the normal course of business.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of cost savings he estimates the re-branding exercise for the NHS will entail. [118671]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 11 April 2000]: New National Health Service organisations (formed to modernise the service—such as primary care groups and trusts—or as a result of mergers) have saved money by adopting the existing NHS mark rather than having to invest in designing new logos. Over time, further savings will be generated for the rest of the NHS as a common design standard enables the service to negotiate economies of scale with suppliers. The level of cost-saving depends on local turnover of stock within the NHS: items are being replaced in the new style only when they come up for replacement in the normal course of business.

Hospital Readmissions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients aged 75 years and over were readmitted as an emergency within 28 days of discharge for each quarter since 1998–99; and what percentage of discharges this represents. [118687]

Ms Stuart: The table shows the number of patients aged 75 years and over who were readmitted as an emergency within 28 days of discharge for each quarter since 1998–99; and the percentage of discharges this represents.

The number and percentage of patients aged 75 and over who were readmitted as an emergency within 28 days of discharge each quarter since 1998–99

The information given is collected by health authorities and returned to the National Health Service Executive as part of the quarterly monitoring process. It includes all specialties except psychiatry and learning disability.

Mental Health Act (Charges)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent guidance he has given to local authorities about charging people receiving services under section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983; what estimate he has made of the number of (a) local authorities charging people receiving services under section 117 and (b) people being charged for services under section 117; what estimate he has made of the cost of compensating people incorrectly charged for services under section 117; what estimate he has made of the cost to local authorities of abolishing charges for services under section 117; and if he will make a statement. [118795]

Mr. Hutton: On 10 February 2000 the Department issued a circular to local authorities and health authorities in England drawing attention to the High Court judgment in the case of R v. London Borough of Richmond ex parte Watson (HSC 2000/003: LAC (2000)3). Local authorities still charging for services provided as part of after-care under section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983 were advised that they should immediately cease to do so. The Association of Directors of Social Services (ADSS) has carried out a survey of local authorities in England and Wales with the aim of identifying how many local authorities charge for section 117 after-care services and the estimated costs of providing such services free of charge. We understand that the results have not been published.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce the conclusions of his assessment of the recommendations of the evaluation study by the University of York Health Economics Consortium of the Powered Wheelchair and Voucher Scheme initiatives. [118792]

Mr. Hutton: The report of the evaluation conducted by the York Health Economics Consortium reached two major conclusions. First, additional funds were needed if the electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchair (EPIOCs) scheme is to meet its objectives fully. Secondly, the voucher scheme had largely met its broad objectives of improving choice but relatively few wheelchair users had benefited from it when the evaluation was conducted. The report recommended that continuation of the voucher scheme should be a matter for local discretion. However, since then the take-up of vouchers has risen steadily.

We have committed ourselves to ending the variations in health care provision across the country. For that reason, we could not agree that voucher schemes should become discretionary. We want all disabled people to be able to exercise choice. We therefore announced on 29 March that the current funding level of £14 million for powered wheelchairs and voucher schemes will be made recurrent from 1 April. We decided that:

(i) continued allocation of £14 million should be free of distinctions between what should be spent on powered wheelchairs or voucher schemes, and that health authorities and provider services should consult with service users and take a flexible approach to ensuring this money meets local needs and priorities in wheelchair services; and:

(ii) that all services should continue to operate a voucher scheme which offers users a choice in having a wheelchair which meets their needs.

On 29 March we placed the York Health Economics Consortium's report on the National Health Services internet site to ensure service commissioners and providers have access to it.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to continue the provision of ring-fenced funds for the EPIOC scheme and the wheelchair voucher scheme on the same basis as in 1996. [118797]

Mr. Hutton: Funds were ring-fenced between 1996–2000 to phase in £50 million for the electrically powered indoor/outdoor chairs (EPIOCs) and voucher schemes. Guidance indicated that funding level in the final year, 1999–2000, would become recurrent in National Health Service baseline budgets.

On 29 March I announced plans to allocate to health authorities £14 million for EPIOCs and the wheelchair voucher scheme in 2000–01. This sum is some £6 million greater than that provided in 1996–97. The money will be added recurrently to health authority baselines rather than on a one year at a time basis as in the past, to secure the long-term future of both schemes. Also, health authorities will now be able to use the money flexibly to meet the needs and preferences of local service users, whether that be for EPIOCs, vouchers, or other wheelchair service priorities.

Day Centres

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the charges made by each local authority in England and Wales for attendance at day centres for the physically disabled in each financial year since 1997. [118796]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the charges made by each local authority in England for attendance at day centres for the physically disabled is not collected centrally. However information on the recoupment of fees and charges by each local authority is available at the Department of Health website at www.doh.gov.uk/public/pss—stat.htm.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine TB

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on variations in the susceptibility of cattle to TB infection. [118508]

Ms Quin [holding answer 10 April 2000]: There is no such research in place at present, but this is one of the issues being considered by the TB Husbandry Panel, which is due to report shortly.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the (a) terms of reference and (b) financial resources available to the TB Husbandry Panel. [118514]

Ms Quin [holding answer 10 April 2000]: The aim of the Husbandry Panel is to identify current or future farm management (husbandry) measures which will assist in developing a sustainable policy to control TB in cattle, and its terms of reference are:

The Panel will assess the scientific evidence on the effects of cattle husbandry in relation to Bovine TB, and in particular:

a. review the available literature;

b. take oral and/or written evidence from interested parties, especially those with expertise in cattle farming and TB risk factors, to identify the current expert opinion on best practice.

Taking account of the epidemiological investigations launched by MAFF following consultation with the Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB, the Panel will, within three months of appointment, produce a report which summarises the state of knowledge on the effects of husbandry on controlling bovine TB, and which:

a. identifies approaches being taken by research and development funders which will fill gaps in knowledge and their relative timescales;

b. makes recommendations on the steps and responsibility which need to be taken to encourage careful management practices relating to tuberculosis in cattle;

c. makes recommendations on how best to evaluate husbandry measures for future use, including advice on whether husbandry experiments are justifiable at this stage, and if so, which experiments might be most promising at this stage.

The budget for the Husbandry Panel is £45,083 which is to cover the costs of the secretariat, the Panel's expenses and other associated costs.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive the report of the TB Husbandry Panel and if, following receipt, he will publish it in full. [118507]

Ms Quin [holding answer 10 April 2000]: The Panel is expected to report at the end of April. The report will be published in full.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the current research projects associated with Bovine TB, indicating for each the cost in 2000–01 and the total cost for the project. [118515]

Ms Quin [holding answer 10 April 2000]: The current bovine TB research projects, together with total cost and costs for 2000–01 are shown in the table.

Research project	Cost 2000–01	Total cost
A spatial analysis using GIS risk factors associated with TB incidents in cattle herds in England and Wales	43,354	188,373
Ecological correlates of tuberculosis incidence in cattle	123,779	374,181
Multivariate analysis of risk factors affecting tuberculosis incidents in cattle herds—phase 1	34,370	137,479
Improved diagnostics for cattle	170,449	511,347
Quantification of the risk of transmission of bovine TB from badgers to cattle within localised areas	55,196	167,504
Integrated modelling of M. bovis transmission in badgers and cattle	265,043	890,769
Detection and enumeration of M. bovis from clinical and environmental samples	88,178	297,046
The risk to cattle from M. bovis infection in wildlife species other than badgers	272,348	960,052
The risk to cattle from wildlife species other than badgers in areas of high herd breakdown risk	149,128	591,035
Development and evaluation of strain typing methods for M. bovis	305,346	1,124,682
Understanding the route of TB transmission from badgers to cattle	133,471	266,941
Developing innovative methods to estimate badger population density	240,082	882,089
An integrated study of perturbation, population estimation, modelling and risk	299,323	1,252,592
Novel methods of estimating badger numbers in the wider countryside	63,604	230,424
Genome sequence analysis of M. bovis	51,828	875,101
Antigen presenting cells and T cell responses to Mycobacterium	400,000	1,200,000
Generation of vaccine candidates against M. bovis	313,201	1,566,005
Testing of vaccine candidates for bovine tuberculosis using a low dose aerosol challenge guinea pig model	196,753	1,068,045
Development of badger vaccines	101,865	304,250
Development of badger immunological reagents	139,826	419,560
Development of a turf model to assess the biological control of M. bovis using Mycobacteriphage	20,000	80,000
Testing TB vaccines in cattle	263,642	1,316,635
A molecular genetic analysis of badger social structure and bovine TB	162,451	766,069
The potential of ticks as vectors of Mycobacterium bovis	49,942	49,942
Ecological consequences of removing badgers from an ecosystem	254,240	1,216,016

In addition substantial new research into the pathogenesis of M. bovis in cattle will be carried out in 2000–01 and succeeding years/ Detailed protocols are being developed and precise costings are not yet available.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will request the TB Forum to consider requiring the TB status of individual animals to be included in the cattle movement recording system. [118424]

Ms Quin [holding answer 10 April 2000]: The TB Forum has already discussed this issue which has significant practical implications. The Forum is considering whether the objective could be achieved by simpler means.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the risks of TB infection from slurry spreading practices. [118509]

Ms Quin [holding answer 10 April 2000]: There is no such research in place at present, but this is one of the issues being considered by the TB Husbandry Panel, which is due to report shortly.

Mobile Phone Networks

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the benefits which the roll-out of mobile phone networks in rural areas will bring to farmers. [117690]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I have been asked to reply.

No assessment has been made. However, mobile phones have clear potential benefits for rural communities, including farmers, by improving communications, particularly in isolated situations, and giving users greater freedom and flexibility in work and leisure.

BSE

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what his policy is on the compulsory testing of cattle for BSE. [118319]

Ms Quin: There is no validated test for the detection of BSE in live cattle. Nor is there a validated post-mortem test for the detection of sub-clinical infection. Until such tests are available compulsory testing of cattle will be restricted to the testing of cattle notified to the Department in accordance with the BSE (No. 2) Order 1996.

From 1 January 2001 the UK will commence testing of approximately 7,000 cattle per year after death in compliance with recently agreed Commission proposals on epidemio-surveillance.

Meat and Livestock Commission (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received on setting up a separate meat and livestock commission for Wales; and if he will make a statement. [118404]

Ms Quin: None.

Under the terms of a Marketing Services Agreement signed in 1997, Agriculture Ministers have already consented to the delegation of certain Meat and Livestock Commission functions in Wales. This includes the promotion of Welsh livestock and livestock products by Welsh Lamb and Beef Promotions Ltd.

Agrimonetary Compensation

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to increase the amount of EU agrimonetary compensation paid to dairy farmers in the UK. [118524]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 30 March that £22 million would be paid this year only in agrimonetary compensation to the dairy sector. This represents all the agrimonetary compensation available to this sector, including the 50 per cent. UK contribution.

Primates

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provisions have been made to deal with the potential for zoonotic infections on import of primates carried on the Cap Afrique; and if the veterinary surgeon charged with checking the health and wellbeing of the primates was the purchaser of them. [116341]

Ms Quin: The Department is responsible for licensing the import of primates into quarantine against rabies in premises authorised by the Department. Licence applications do not require the applicant to identify themselves as the purchaser or owner of the animals to be imported or as the purchaser's or owner's agent. Quarantine premises must employ a veterinary supervisor authorised by the Department to be responsible for the health of the imported animals. Employers of staff who work with simians must take account of their general duties under health and safety legislation and consider the risks from zoonoses that may affect staff and take suitable precautions to prevent or control exposure.

Over-30-months Scheme

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set a target date for the introduction of the increase in the maximum weight per animal on which compensation is payable under the over-30-months scheme. [117687]

Ms Quin: The Government have made a commitment to seek an increase in the maximum weight per animal on which compensation is payable under the Over-30-Months Scheme. Implementation of such a change is dependent on the Commission's willingness to make an appropriate proposal and on support from other member states. We will be pressing for early action but the timing is not within our control.

Hedgerows

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to amend the European Union's Common Agricultural Policy in respect of the measurement of field margins, in order to ensure that such rules take account of the character of Britain's hedgerows; and if he will make a statement. [117836]

Ms Quin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 29 March 2000, Official Report, column 172W.

Fallen Stock

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of incinerators owned by hunts that are used for the disposal of fallen stock; and how many hunts (a) charge and (b) do not charge for this service. [117959]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 April 2000]: No estimate has been made by the Department of the number of incinerators owned by hunts that are used for the disposal of fallen stock. However, if Specified Risk Material is to be incinerated, the incinerator must be approved by the appropriate Minister. There are 159 such incinerators at hunt kennels in Great Britain. Information on hunts' charging policy is not collected by the Department.

British Farm Standards Label

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he will employ to ensure that the independent verifiers of the new British farm standards apply appropriate tests to create consumer confidence in this label. [118624]

Ms Quin [holding answer 11 April 2000]: The Government are not directly responsible for this, but are encouraging the NFU (National Farmers' Union) who are developing the new mark, "British Farm Standard". The NFU intend that the mark should only appear on food which meets the requirements of a qualifying farm assurance scheme. We understand that one requirement on the assurance schemes will be that they should have obtained UKAS (United Kingdom Accreditation Service) accreditation or have a plan in place to achieve it. UKAS accreditation can only be obtained if all participants are subject to independent verification. Through verification, participants are subject to regular inspection which will ensure that they meet the high standards of food safety, animal welfare and environmental responsibility as well as other conditions of production that are required by the assurance schemes. The NFU intend to explain to consumers these key values which will underpin the mark.

CABINET OFFICE

Government Car and Despatch Agency

Mrs. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she has concluded her review of the Government Car and Despatch Agency. [119096]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The triennial review of the Government Car and Despatch Agency (GCDA), the start of which I announced on 27 October 1999, has now been completed. The Cabinet Office, assisted by Lorien consultants, has considered the Agency's performance since 1 April 1997, when it was launched, and the options for the future of its functions.

The principal aim of the GCDA, which comprises the Government Car Service (GCS) and the Inter Despatch Service (IDS), is to provide secure, reliable, value for money services to its customers. The evaluation of GCDA's performance over its first three years concluded that it has performed well. It has met 14 of 15 key performance targets (including all of its financial and efficiency and productivity targets) set and completed during the period. The evaluation concluded that it had succeeded in meeting its principal aims and objectives, and made a number of recommendations for structural improvements allowing it greater freedom to pursue its commercial objectives. I have placed copies of the executive summary of the evaluation report in the Libraries of the Houses.

The review of the standard options (continued agency status, market testing and contracting out, privatisation, abolition) considered each business separately. It concluded that the high security requirements of customers and the unique nature of the services provided by GCS meant that it was not suitable for private sector involvement. It went on to propose a programme of modernisation aimed at improving the efficiency, effectiveness and economy of its services. The review recommended that the IDS should establish and develop, through a Public Private Partnership, a secure, flexible, value for money, nationwide service to complement its existing London and dedicated networks.

I have considered both reports and I have decided that GCDA should continue as an executive agency for a period of five years. It will implement the programme of reform recommended by this review which will build upon its success over the past three years, and enable the Agency to deliver the high quality, value for money services its customers require. A revision to the Framework Document will now be prepared and published.

Anti-drugs Strategy (Meetings)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many times the Deputy to the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator has met members and officials of the United States Government since 1 January 1999; on what date and where each meeting took place; and which members and officials of the United States Government attended each meeting. [117063]

Mr. Ian McCartney: During the period 1 January 1999 to 31 March 2000, the Deputy UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator met General Barry McCaffrey, Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy, and his officials, during their visit to the United Kingdom in October 1999. In addition to meetings with General McCaffrey, he also sat in on several bilateral meetings between US and UK officials to discuss a wide range of drugs related issues, including Criminal justices intervention issues and drug treatment programmes.

Lord Levy

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to her answer of 28 March 2000, Official Report, column 76W, if she will list the meetings between Lord Levy and (a) Ministers and (b) officials within her Department on Government business other than in his capacity as the Prime Minister's personal envoy delivering messages in the Middle East. [117783]

Mr. Stringer: To the best of my knowledge, no Minister or senior official in the Cabinet Office has had a meeting with Lord Levy since 1 May 1997 on Government business. This does not include social engagements.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Crown Office List

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the review of the Crown Office List will be published. [119131]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor's Department has today published the Review of the Crown Office List. The Review was chaired by Sir Jeffery Bowman. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Judges

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Lord Chancellor has completed his review of the terms of service of part-time judicial office-holders in England and Wales following the judgment of the High Court of Justiciary in Scotland in the Starrs case. [119130]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chief Justice of England and Wales, and the Lord Chief Justice of Northern Ireland and the Lord Chancellor have agreed new arrangements for part-time judicial appointments for which the Lord Chancellor is responsible. We accord the highest value to the maintenance of judicial independence for all judges, full-time and part-time, and the arrangements have been fashioned for that purpose.

I am placing in the Library of the House two joint statements signed by the Lord Chancellor and by the Lord Chief Justices setting out these changes for the following appointments in ordinary Courts in England and Wales:

Recorders,

Deputy District Judges,

Acting Stipendiary Magistrates,

Deputy Masters or Registrars of the Supreme Court,

Deputy High Court Judges,

Deputy Circuit Judges,

Retired Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, Lords Justices and High Court Judges; and the following appointments in Northern Ireland:

Deputy Resident magistrate,

Deputy County Court Judge,

Deputy District Judge,

Retired Law Lords, Lord Justices and High Court Judges.

The Lord Chancellor has also decided that no useful purpose is served by retaining the separate offices of Assistance Recorder and Recorder and he will, accordingly, be recommending to Her Majesty that all serving Assistant Recorders should be appointed Recorders. In future, appointments will be made direct to Recordership through an openly advertised selection procedure.

I am also placing in the Library of the House joint statements signed by the Lord Chancellor and by the Lord Chief Justice of England and Wales covering the following fixed-term appointments to Tribunals:

Part-time Immigration Adjudicators

Part-time members of the Immigration Appeal Tribunal

Part-time members of the Income and Corporation Taxes Tribunal

Part-time members of the Lands Tribunal

Part-time members of the Pensions Appeal Tribunals

Deputy Social Security and Child Support Commissioners

Part-time Special Commissioners of Income Tax

Part-time members of the Appeals Service (social security)

Part-time Chairmen of the VAT and Duties Tribunal.

The Secretary of State for Social Security and the Chancellor of the Exchequer have placed similar statements in the Libraries covering the following appointments for which they are ministerially responsible:

Secretary of State for Social Security

Pensions Ombudsman

Members of the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority

Chancellor of the Exchequer

Members of the VAT and Duties Tribunal.

These changes will come into effect immediately.

At a later stage, there will be a further announcement about the detailed aspects of these Tribunal arrangements as they will operate in Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales following consultation with the devolved administrations.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Sector (Advisory Group on Openness)

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will accept the recommendations made in the report of the Advisory Group on Openness in the Public Sector. [119124]

Mr. Straw: I set up the Advisory Group on Openness in the Public Sector last year to advise me on how I might facilitate a cultural change to greater openness in the public sector. The Advisory Group reported to me in December and I have carefully considered both the report and its recommendations.

The recommendations address the practical matters necessary to bring about cultural change and to implement a Freedom of Information Act. They set out a broad agenda for action which I am happy to endorse in full. I shall be looking to see how we can best give effect to that agenda and I commend the report and recommendations to all public authorities which will be brought within scope of the freedom of information regime described in the Freedom of Information Bill now before Parliament. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library and is also available on the Home Office website: www.homeoffice.gov.uk.

Police Firearms

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the most recent statistics available for the police use of firearms. [119125]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The statistics for April 1998 to March 1999 show that the number of police operations in which firearms were issued to officers was 10,928, a fall of over 7 per cent. on the previous year. The number of firearms incidents in which firearms were discharged by police was five, compared to three the previous year. There were no fatalities.

There was an increase of 3 per cent. to 7,791 in the number of operations in which armed response vehicles were deployed. Firearms were carried in these vehicles, but were not necessarily issued to officers on each occasion.

Full details are set out in the tables.

Security Service Tribunal

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been made following the expiry of the terms of appointment of the members of the Security Service Tribunal on 18 December 1999; and if he will make a statement. [119126]

Mr. Straw: Lord Justice Mummery has been appointed as President of the Tribunal for a period of five years, following his predecessor's acceptance of an appointment to the post of Security Service Commissioner. Sheriff John McInnes has been re-appointed as Vice-President of the Tribunal and both he and Sir Richard Gaskell have been re-appointed to the Tribunal for a further period of five years.

Lord Justice Simon Brown, formerly president of the Security Service Tribunal, has accepted an appointment as the Security Service Commissioner for a period of three years from 1 April 2000.

Fire Service

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the recommendations of the inquiry into the machinery for determining firefighters' conditions of service. [119127]

Mr. Straw: Professor Burchill, who undertook the inquiry has submitted to me a number of recommendations for improving the working of the National Joint Council for Local Authorities' Fire Brigades. These include proposals which would involve the acceptance by the employees and the union of conciliation and arbitration, in the event of disputes, a clarification of procedures, a streamlining of the negotiation arrangements, and an independent Chair for the National Joint Council.

Implementation of these recommendations would be a matter for the National Joint Council rather than for the Government itself. I am, therefore, consulting the employers and the union, and with other interested parties, to confirm that they are willing to accept the proposals and to give them effect. I expect to announce the outcome of these consultations and to publish Professor Burchill's report early next month.

I am extremely grateful to Professor Burchill for the time and effort he has given to the inquiry, the way he has conducted it and the extent of common understanding and agreement he has already been able to achieve.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has reached a decision on the bids for notional credit approvals under the second round of the private finance initiative for the Fire Service. [119128]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We received indicative bids from ten fire authorities for notional credit approvals under this second Private Finance Initiative (PFI) round for the fire service.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has today decided that notional credit approvals for 2001–02 should be set aside in respect of indicative bids from the fire authorities for:

Tyne and Wear (Phase one of its proposed scheme)

West Midlands

Dorset

Mid and West Wales.

It will now be for those authorities to prepare an outline business case. Confirmation of the credit approvals will be given only on completion of such a business case demonstrating that PFI is the most cost-effective solution for the projects concerned, and on approval of the inter-departmental Project Review Group.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has also decided that he will be prepared to consider further the indicative bids from Tyne and Wear (Phase two) and London once decisions on provision of notional credit approvals for 2002–03 have been taken.

We shall be in touch with all those authorities whose bids were not selected on this occasion to offer guidance on how the bids might be developed and resubmitted in any future bidding rounds.

Kerb Crawling

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to make kerb crawling an arrestable offence. [119129]

Mr. Straw: I am very aware of the nuisance caused by the activities of kerb crawlers. The Government agree that a specific power of arrest would assist the police in dealing with this problem. I intend to include this proposal in the draft of a police and private security Bill, on which we will be consulting later this session, and which we will introduce at the earliest legislative opportunity.

Cybercrime Convention

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress with the Cybercrime Convention. [117521]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the Minister of State, Home Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng), to the hon. Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington) on 21 October 1999, Official Report, columns 621–22W, which remains valid as a description of the state of play.

At the request of the United Kingdom and some other member states, it has been agreed with our Council of Europe partners that the draft convention should be made publicly available and we expect it to be released shortly. We plan to consult relevant interests, including industry, and will place a copy of the draft convention in the Library.

Prisons (Disabled People)

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to adapt prisons to conform to the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [118793]

Mr. Boateng: The Prison Service has accepted that its policies should conform to the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. The Prison Service has already put in place policies, practices and procedures to prevent discrimination, and to provide auxiliary aids or services to facilitate disabled prisoners' and visitors' access to services. A Working Group has been set up to consider what needs to be done to conform with the requirement of the Act to remove or alter physical barriers to disabled persons' access to services.

Asylum Seekers

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000, together with estimates he has made for the year 2000–01 (a) the number of applications for asylum made in each year, (b) the number of dependants of applicants for asylum applying in each year, (c) the number of asylum seekers and dependants being supported at cost to public funds, (d) the costs to public funds of supporting asylum seekers and their dependants, including costs relating to unaccompanied children, (1) in total, (2) per head of population, (3) per income tax payer, (4) per household and (5) as a percentage of total Government expenditure and (e) the cost to public funds of administration associated with asylum seekers and their dependants, (A) in total, (B) per head of population, (C) per income tax payer, (D) per household and (E) as a percentage of total Government expenditure. [118802]

Mrs. Roche: The available figures are given in the table:

[1] Includes an estimated figure for March 2000.
[2] Only available for calendar years.
[3] Including costs associated with unaccompanied children.
[4] The estimated figure for the UK population is 58.8 million, the estimated number of tax payers is 27.9 million and the estimated number of households is 24.2 million. The total managed public expenditure in 1997–98 was 322.1 billion, in 1998–99 is 331 billion (estimated) and in 1999–2000 is £345.2 billion (estimated).
[5] These figures are for total immigration administration which includes asylum administration costs.
[6] Includes National Asylum Support Service (NASS) administration costs.

Figures for dependants are available only for calendar years. In 1997, there were a total of 8,980 dependants, in 1998 the figure was 12,470. Figures for 1999 and 2000 are not currently available.

In 1997–98 to 1999–2000 asylum seekers were supported by the Department of Social Security and Department of Health (Local authorities). Figures for the numbers being supported change from week to week. Financial year figures for supported asylum seekers are not available.

Immigration Service

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate has been made of the cost of (a) Immigration Service personnel (i) in ports, (ii) in Croydon and (iii) abroad and (b) immigration appeal adjudicators and tribunals, in the last three years for which figures are available. [118056]

Mrs. Roche: The total cost to the Home Office for Immigration Service personnel was £89 million for 1999–2000, £84.6 million for 1998–99 and £84.5 million for 1997–98. A detailed breakdown is provided in the table:

Immigration Service personnel costs

£ million

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Total	84.5	84.6	89.0
In Ports	81.8	81.0	84.2
In Croydon	2.5	3.3	4.2
Abroad	0.2	0.3	0.6

Notes:
1. Figures for Immigration Service staff abroad are for Airline Liaison Officers. Costs of Immigration Officers/Chief Immigration Officers at Entry Clearance Units are not available.
2. Costs are for salaries and on costs, but exclude accommodation.
3. 1999–2000 figures are estimated final outturn.

The costs of the immigration appeals adjudicators and tribunals are a matter for the Lord Chancellor's Department/Court Service.

Jill Dando Murder Investigation

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 21 March 2000, Official Report, column 484W, for what reason the number of police officers working on the Jill Dando murder investigation has been reduced; and if he will make a statement on future numbers. [118306]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The number of police officers deployed on any murder investigation is an operational matter for the relevant Chief Officer of Police, in this case the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

The Commissioner tells me that the size of the team investigating Jill Dando's death is subject to regular management review to ensure the efficient and effective progression of the investigation.

Police Stations

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each constituency in Shropshire the police stations indicating those which served rural communities, which were (a) downgraded, (b) closed and (c) opened (i) between 1979 to 1997 and (ii) since May 1997. [118542]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have been advised by West Mercia Constabulary in this operational matter. The answer is given in the table.

Prison Visits

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the use of telephone booking systems for arranging visits to inmates in prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [118491]

Mr. Boateng: The Prison Service recognises that telephone booking systems can be an effective tool in managing and allocating the huge number of booked visits which prison establishments have to organise on a daily basis. An increasing number of prisons are developing Information Technology systems for this purpose. The Prison Service has completed a study into the use of telephone booking systems for social and official visits to prisoners, the findings of which have informed the production of a statement of business requirements for the introduction of a computerised visits booking system in all prisons.

The Prison Service is working, in partnership with the private sector, to develop the delivery of improved services through the effective use of Information Technology. One of the aims of this project is the provision of efficient, responsive, customer focused public services, and booked visits are included within the scope of the services to be provided. The Prison Service is in the process of developing the timetable for this work.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many animals were allowed into the United Kingdom during the last 12 months for use in experiments; and what requirements must be met for such animals to be allowed entry into the United Kingdom. [118488]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Home Office does not record centrally the number of animals imported into the United Kingdom for use in scientific procedures. However, Table 2 of the "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals", published annually in separate volumes for Great Britain and Northern Ireland, records the number of scientific procedures carried out, analysed by Schedule 2 listed species and source of animals. Animals listed in Schedule 2 to the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 can only be acquired from designated breeding or supplying establishments for use in procedures authorised under the Act unless the Secretary of State has granted a specific exemption.

Table 2 identifies animals obtained from non-United Kingdom sources broken down between those acquired within the European Union and those acquired from outside the European Union. The statistics for 1999 are currently being collated and will be published in July. The statistics for 1998 show that the total numbers of animals acquired from non-United Kingdom sources were:

	From European Union sources	From non-European Union sources	Total
Great Britain	6,800	14,745	21,545
Northern Ireland	28	4	32
Total	6,828	14,749	21,577

The following criteria are applied in deciding applications for such exemptions: no suitable animals must be available from designated breeding or supplying establishments within the United Kingdom; the overseas source must be judged to be of good repute; and travel and import controls must be met. Welfare issues involved in the import of animals from abroad, such as journey times, are also considered as part of the Home Office cost/benefit assessment for project licences.

Prisoners (Religious Services)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason inmates in prisons in England and Wales have to make application to attend religious services; and if he will make a statement. [118489]

Mr. Boateng: The Prison Service respects the need for all prisoners to be free to practice their religion and makes provision for prisoners to participate in worship.

That participation is voluntary so numbers can vary and are often quite high. In order, therefore, to ensure proper security arrangements are in place and access and movement is satisfactory, prisoners in some prisons are asked to make applications to attend religious services.

Such applications are not intended to compromise the prisoner's access to worship but to ensure the worship is safe and trouble free.

Parole Board (Murderers)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases were heard during the last 12 months by the Parole Board of inmates convicted of murder and seeking parole; and how many such inmates were granted parole. [118380]

Mr. Boateng: The decision whether to release adult murderers on life licence is a matter for the Home Secretary, subject to a recommendation for release from the Parole Board. In the year ended 31 December 1999, the Board considered 590 mandatory life sentence cases, about half of which were tariff expired and, therefore, eligible for release. The Board recommended release in 75 of these cases. Sixty-three of these recommendations were accepted, three were rejected, and nine are still under consideration.

Those sentenced to detention during Her Majesty's pleasure (having been convicted of a murder committed when under the age of 18) are released on the direction of the Parole Board once their tariffs have expired. The Board considered 41 such cases in 1999 and directed release in 15 of them.

Illegal Sales

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions there were in courts in the United Kingdom for dealing in the illegal re-sale of tobacco, spirits and beer imported from other European countries during 1999. [118487]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office Court Proceedings Database does not hold information about the characteristics of individual cases apart from those that are evident from the description of the offence with which the defendant has been charged.

Defendants prosecuted for the illegal re-sale of items would be prosecuted under section 170 of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979. However, the database does not separately identify such cases from other offences under the Act.

Cannabis

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidance is given to the Crown Prosecution Service on action to be taken against persons with multiple sclerosis who use cannabis as a beneficial homeopathic treatment; and what plans he has to review the guidance; [118531]

(2) what guidance is given to the police on action to be taken against persons with multiple sclerosis who use cannabis as a beneficial homeopathic treatment; and what plans he has to review the guidance. [118529]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Possession of cannabis is a criminal offence and it is for the police and the Crown Prosecution Service to decide whether to prosecute in a particular case, taking account of the individual merits. If there is sufficient evidence to prosecute, then both the police and the Crown Prosecution Service will weigh public interest considerations.

The police have a range of guidance, the most recent was issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers in February last year; there are no plans to review this guidance. The Crown Prosecution Service assess all cases in accordance with the Code for Crown Prosecutors; this Code is currently under review.

Prisoners (Solitary Confinement)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been kept in solitary confinement by reason of their violent nature and representing a threat to others for each year since 1995. [118534]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested cannot be obtained from the centrally available data; a response could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons his Department did not publish the Draft Code of Practice, pursuant to Clause 44 of the Freedom of Information Bill, before the afternoon of 4 April. [118522]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The working draft of the Code of Practice was published at the earliest opportunity following necessary consultations with colleagues.

Copies of the draft Code were placed in the Library on 4 April and sent on the same day to members of the Standing Committee B which had scrutinised the Freedom of Information Bill in Committee.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions Ministers have withheld information from public disclosure under the exemption clauses of the Code of Practice on Disclosure of Official Information since May 1997. [118496]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government publish annual monitoring reports on the operation of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. The reports contain statistics on the number of Code requests received by each Department in that calendar year and include details as to the number of requests which have been refused. However, the reports do not identify which of these cases were referred to Ministers or where decisions were taken by officials.

The 1997 report shows that, for the calendar year, 1,894 requests were refused—of which 1,735 relate to premature applications to the Health and Safety Executive for information relating to civil proceedings. Excluding these cases, the number of refusals of requests over the year was 159.

The 1998 report shows that in that year, 1,745 requests were refused—of which 1,534 related to premature applications to the Health and Safety Executive for information relating to civil proceedings. Excluding these cases, the number of refusals of requests over the year was 211.

The 1999 Monitoring report, which will contain the relevant statistics for last year, is being compiled and I will publish it in due course.

Probation Service

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a review of the (a) hours worked and (b) pay rates of employees of the Probation Service, to include a comparison over the past decade of relativities with (i) teachers, (ii) police officers and (iii) social workers. [118334]

Mr. Boateng: We are looking carefully at workforce planning for the new Probation Service. As part of this, we are taking part in reviews of structures for pay and grading and of employee care and work priorities. I do not believe a further review of hours and pay would be appropriate at present.

Schengen Information System

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if participation in the Schengen information system by the United Kingdom will require the United Kingdom to opt into an agreement based on (a) Title IV of the Treaty of the European Community or (b) other European treaties. [117406]

Mrs. Roche: Participation by the United Kingdom in the Schengen Information System (SIS) will require the exercise of the United Kingdom's opt-in under Article 4 of the Protocol integrating the Schengen acquis into the framework of the European Union, annexed to the Treaty of Amsterdam. The Government have submitted a request under this provision for participation in aspects of the Schengen acquis, including the SIS, and we are currently awaiting its approval. The SIS has been allocated to a legal base in the Treaty on European Union.

Police Recruitment

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 April 2000, Official Report, column 596W, and his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) of 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1–3W, and to the hon. Member for Elmet (Mr. Burgon) of 9 February 2000, Official Report, column 172W, what estimate he has made of the change in police numbers in England and Wales between April 2002 and March 2003 following his announcement that the extra recruits under the Crime Fighting Fund will be recruited over two years rather than three; what number of police officers he plans to recruit in England and Wales in the three years to March 2003; and what are his revised estimates of the total number of police officers in England and Wales over each of the next three years. [118805]

Mr. Straw: The additional funding announced in the Budget will allow us to provide for completing the recruitment of the 5,000 officers allocated under the Crime Fighting Fund by March 2002. It will allow for the recruitment of at least 2,000 in 2000–01 and 3,000 (or the remainder) in 2001–02. This means that the theoretical projections of police numbers, based on forces' estimates for recruitment and wastage, for the next two years are as follows:

March 2001—125,500

March 2002—127,000.

The March 2002 projection approximates to the 1997 figure of 127,158.

On the basis of projections made earlier this year alone, the theoretical figure for March 2003 would be 125,900, as cited in the reply given by the Minister of State, Home Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Clarke) to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 15 March 2000, Official Report, columns 177–79W. Chief Officers projections were made on the basis of the Compensation Spending Review settlement which extends to 2001–02, but in the absence of any information about funding levels for the police service in 2002–03. Funding levels from 2002–03 onwards will be known only when the outcome of the 2000 Spending Review is announced in the summer, when more realistic projections can be made.

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117810]

Mr. Straw: The number of lawyers employed in the Home Office Legal Adviser's Branch on 31 March 1995 was 18. On 31 March 2000, the Branch had 31 lawyers in post (equating, when part-time staff are taken into account, to 30.5 posts) and two vacancies (which have now been filled by lawyers on loan from other Government Departments). Four of the lawyers in post on 31 March 2000 were also on loan from other Government Departments. The Branch provides legal services to the Northern Ireland Office as well as the Home Office.

In addition to its traditional responsibilities, the Home Office has, since May 1997, taken responsibility for an important part of the Government's constitutional programme, including the Human Rights Act 1998, the Freedom of Information Bill and the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Bill. The Branch also has responsibility for Northern Ireland constitutional legislation. Home Office lawyers have 12 Bills (including Bills for the Northern Ireland Office) in the Government's programme for the current parliamentary session.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Violence Victims

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the organisations claiming to support victims of violence which (a) are currently receiving and (b) have received public funds; and how much each has received. [117123]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 12 April 2000, Official Report, columns 189–96W.

Winter Fuel Allowance

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the additional number of pensioners in Northern Ireland entitled to the winter fuel allowance following the European Court of Justice judgment of 15 December 1999. [118120]

Mr. George Howarth: It is estimated that there will be 39,000 additional people in Northern Ireland entitled to Winter Fuel Payments as a result of the European Court of Justice judgment. I should point out that these people will not all be pensioners, as men aged between 60–64 are not receiving retirement pension.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average time taken (a) to process an application for a wheelchair and (b) for an applicant to receive a wheelchair. [118581]

Mr. George Howarth: The average time taken to process an application for a wheelchair depends on the type of equipment required. For level 1 wheelchairs, applications are processed within one working day of receipt at the Regional Wheelchair Centre and chairs are delivered to clients within five working days. For level 2 modified equipment, an application takes 10 working days to process and the equipment is delivered within 20 working days. For level 3 specialised equipment, processing of an order takes 10 working days and delivery of the equipment can take in the region of 3–6 months.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many wheelchairs have been allocated to applicants in each of the last three years in Northern Ireland. [118579]

Mr. George Howarth: The information is as follows:

1 January-31 December 1997: 2,905

1 January-31 December 1998: 3,586

1 January-31 December 1998: 2,631

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons in Northern Ireland have (a) applied for and (b) are awaiting the allocation of a wheelchair. [118580]

Mr. George Howarth: There are 257 applicants awaiting the allocation of a wheelchair. The vast majority of these are existing wheelchair users who, due to changing circumstances, need more specialised equipment, which has been ordered and is awaiting delivery.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) men and (b) women have benefited from the New Deal in the North-East. [117940]

Ms Jowell: Up to the end of January 2000, 31,838 young people (23,926 men and 7,912 women) and 17,753 long-term unemployed adults (15,620 men and 2,133 women) have benefited from the New Deals in the North-East. It is a measure of the success of the Government's Welfare to Work policies that 16,652 people in the North-East have found work through the New Deals. The remainder are benefiting from the help that the Personal Adviser can offer. This includes help with barriers to employment, access to specialist help and training, education and work experience opportunities. New Deals for the long-term unemployed are only part of the package of Welfare to Work measures introduced by this Government. Many other people in the North-East will benefit from the New Deals for Lone Parents, 50 plus, partners of the unemployed and the disabled.

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) men and (b) women have benefited from the New Deal in Houghton and Washington East. [117977]

Ms Jowell: Up to the end of January 2000, 1,032 young people (787 men and 245 women) and 478 long-term unemployed adults (411 men and 67 women) have benefited from the New Deals in the Houghton and Washington East constituency. It is a measure of the success of the Government's Welfare to Work policies that 522 people in Houghton and Washington East have found work through these New Deals. The remainder are benefiting from the help that the Personal Adviser can offer. This includes help with barriers to employment, access to specialist help and training, education and work experience opportunities. New Deals for the long-term unemployed are only part of the package of Welfare to Work measures introduced by this Government. Many other people in Houghton and Washington East will benefit from the New Deals for Lone Parents, 50 plus, partners of the unemployed and the disabled.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 10 April 2000, Official Report, columns 49–51W, if he will provide the corresponding estimates of education standard spending assessments per pupil for (a) England and (b) Thamesdown. [118916]

Ms Estelle Morris: The figures requested are shown in the table. Information for Thamesdown was listed under Swindon in the answer given to the hon. Member on 10 April 2000, Official Report, columns 49–51W.

	Thamesdown (Swindon)	England
SSA
Per Primary Pupil	2,290	2,474
Per Secondary Pupil	2,957	3,175
Total Special and Specific Grant per Pupil	151	173

CABINET OFFICE

Organisation of Public Sector Ombudsmen

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when she will publish the report of the review of the Organisation of Public Sector Ombudsmen in England. [119218]

Mr. Stringer: I am pleased to announce that the report of the review of the organisation of public sector ombudsmen in England is published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House and are also available from the Vote Office.

The start of the review was announced by the then Minister for the Cabinet Office on 30 March 1999 and forms part of the Modernising Government agenda. The review, which was carried out by a team in the Cabinet Office, was wide-ranging: it covered the Parliamentary Ombudsman, the Health Service Ombudsman for England and the Local Government Ombudsmen for England, and looked at the potential interaction between those ombudsmen and other independent complaints authorities such as the independent Housing Ombudsman and the Data Protection Commissioner. The review team consulted widely with those who have an interest in the ombudsmen system, including all Members, the ombudsmen themselves, central and local Government, representative bodies (such as the Local Government Association and the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives) and external interest groups.

The main recommendations in the report are that the Parliamentary Ombudsman, the Health Service Ombudsman in England and the Local Government Ombudsmen in England should be merged into a collegiate structure (a new Commission); and that the present requirement for complainants to put their complaints via a Member to the Parliamentary Ombudsman (the "MP filter") should be removed; and that their procedures be simplified and made more flexible.

The Government welcome the review's focus on providing a more customer-oriented Ombudsman service. It recognises that the recommendations raise a number of significant issues about the status and constitution of the Ombudsmen. Accordingly, we shall now be consulting widely before reaching our final conclusions on implementing the review's recommendations.

GMOs

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps she is taking to increase international co-operation on issues relating to genetically modified organisms. [117726]

Mr. Stringer: International co-operation is a crucial part of this Government's policy in biotechnology, which gives priority to the protection of human health and the environment. The UK is active in a number of international bodies, including the World Health Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organisation, and the Codex Alimentarius group. It has pressed at European level on issues such as GM food labelling and releases of GMOs to the environment; and in January negotiated the United Nations Programme Biosafety Protocol. Most recently, it successfully hosted an OECD conference on GM food safety in Edinburgh. We will be discussing the results of that conference, including the recommendation for an international scientific advisory panel on GM food and environmental safety, with G8 partners and developing countries in advance of the next G8 summit.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Workplace Parking

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many workplace car parking spaces are available at the buildings used and controlled by his Department. [116757]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 30 March 2000]: The number of workplace car parking spaces available at buildings used and controlled by my Department is contained in the DETR Greening Operations Annual Report 1998–99, dated December 1999. We have prepared travel plans for all our key buildings in line with the commitment set out in the Transport White Paper and are reviewing the scope for reducing our car parking requirements in that context.

HSE (Field Operations Division)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the (a) operational managers and (b) principal inspectors of health and safety in the Field Operations Division of the Health and Safety Executive possess qualifications in management. [118407]

Mr. Meacher: The number of operational managers in HSE's Field Operations Directorate with externally recognised management qualifications is three.

The number of principal inspectors in HSE's Field Operations Directorate with externally recognised management qualifications is 11.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the report on management among the principal inspectors of health and safety in field offices of the HSE; and what action is planned as a result of the report. [118388]

Mr. Meacher: It is assumed that the report referred to is an internal study on the workload of operational managers in the Field Operations Directorate. The study was commissioned by the Director of Field Operations and reported to him in June 1998. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library. Action on the specific recommendations in the report has been taken forward by the Directorate in consultation with the managers concerned, and is nearing completion.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that all HSE field offices of the Field Operations Division have staffed reception areas for members of the public in easily-accessible ground floor locations. [118387]

Mr. Meacher: The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 requires the Health and Safety Commission to provide an "information and advisory service" to help the public. While the Health and Safety Executive ensure that members of the public have access to the information and advice they require, it cannot be guaranteed that staffed reception areas in ground floor locations will be available. In light of the relatively small number of personal callers to offices, a judgment has to be made as to whether a permanently staffed reception area is the most efficient use of resources.

Hospital Infections

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance the Health and Safety Executive has issued, or plans to issue, on hospital-acquired infection relating to employees and patients of the NHS. [118406]

Mr. Meacher: HSE has not issued any guidance on hospital-acquired infections to patients, and has no plans to do so. The primary responsibility for issuing such guidance rests with the Department of Health (DoH) although HSE is consulted where appropriate.

HSE has, however, produced guidance which is relevant to certain aspects of the control of infection in health services, notably the Health Services Advisory Committee's guidance "The safe disposal of clinical waste" and "The safe working and prevention of infection in clinical laboratories, mortuaries and post mortem rooms".

HSE's guidance and the code of practice under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1999 cover general precautions against infection risks, although they do not specifically address hospital-acquired infection.

HSE is also planning to produce a leaflet on the risks from blood-borne viruses such as hepatitis and HIV, which will be applicable to a number of occupational groups including the healthcare sector.

HSE (Travelling Expenses)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the travelling expenses were of the NW regional director of the Health and Safety Executive in the last two and the current financial years. [118384]

Mr. Meacher: The travelling expenses for the NW regional director of the Health and Safety Executive are as follows:

1997–98—£2,146.18

1999–20000—£4,489.57

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the increase in travelling claims as a result of the closure of the Health and Safety Executive Office at the Triad, Bootle. [118383]

Mr. Meacher: The estimated increase in travelling claims as a result of the closure of the Health and Safety Executive Office at the Triad, Bootle is £36,518 per annum in the first three years following the closure of the office, and £26,136 in the fourth year, with further reductions thereafter as Inspectors retire or move to other locations.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the total travelling expenses of inspectors of health and safety in field offices of the Field Operations Division were in financial year 1999–2000. [118409]

Mr. Meacher: In financial year 1999–2000, the total travelling expenses of the inspectors in field offices of the Field Operations Directorate were £2,899,965.

HSE (Manchester Office)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what will be the allocation of space per employee at the proposed new location for the Manchester office of the Health and Safety Executive; what is the current allocation; and if the new premises comply fully with the Offices, Shops and Railway Premises Act 1963 as regards (a) toilet provision and (b) space standards. [118386]

Mr. Meacher: The allocation of space at the proposed new location for the Manchester office will be 18.5 sq m per employee. The current allocation at the existing Manchester office is 22.5 sq m. The new (proposed) premises will comply fully with the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 as regards (a) toilet premises and (b) space standards. The Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 replaced the relevant sections of the Offices, Shops and Railway Premises Act 1963.

HSE (Principal Inspectors)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the average age is of principal inspectors of health and safety in HSE field offices. [118405]

Mr. Meacher: The average age of principle inspectors of health and safety in HSE field offices is 49 years calculated as at today's date.

HSE (Meetings)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the NW regional director of the Health and Safety Executive last met (a) the NW TUC and (b) the NW Regional Development Association. [118385]

Mr. Meacher: The NW regional director of the Health and Safety Executive last met the NW TUC on 3 February 1999 and the NW Health Partnership, under the auspices of the NW Regional Development Agency, on 9 February 2000.

Index of Local Deprivation

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which independent academic experts have been consulted over his proposals for changes to the index of local deprivation. [118554]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The index review team benefited from the advice of an advisory panel of 40 academic and other experts. The panel included academics from number of universities including Bath, Bristol, Birmingham, Cambridge, Lincolnshire and Humberside, the London School of Economics, Warwick and York and members of other organisations including the Policy Studies Institute, the Local Government Association, the Improvement and Development Agency and members of the Central and Local Government Information Partnership sub-group on deprivation statistics.

Housing

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral statement of 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 811, on housing, how much of the money he announced has been allocated to Wales; how much of this is additional money; and if he will make a statement. [118486]

Mr. Mullin: The money referred to by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions was for investment in housing in England. The allocation of resources for housing in Wales is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Air Rage

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with his counterparts in other EU member states concerning the incidence of air rage in their respective air carriers; and if he will make a statement. [118532]

Mr. Mullin: Specific discussions at an EU level have not taken place but my officials and those from the CAA actively participate in a number of international fora where air rage issues are discussed and where other EU member states are represented. These include meetings of the International Civil Aviation Organisation, the European Civil Aviation Conference, the International Air Transport Association and the Flight Safety Foundation. I understand in the EU only the UK has published comprehensive data on the incidence of air rage, therefore it is not possible to make comparisons with other member states' carriers.

Housing Act 1996

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if it is Government policy that the Housing Act 1996 should be amended so that local authorities must provide a written explanation of the reasons for (a) excluding and (b) suspending an individual from the Housing Register; [118309]

(2) the Housing Act 1996 should be amended to prevent the exclusion of people in housing need, except in exceptional circumstances. [118308]

Mr. Mullin: The Housing Act 1996 gives local authorities considerable discretion to decide what classes of person qualify, or not, to appear on the housing register. In making any decision to reject a person's application to be put on its housing register, the authority must notify the applicant in writing.

On 4 April 2000, the Government published their plans for a comprehensive review of housing policy in England in the Housing Green Paper "Quality and Choice: A Decent Home for All". This sets out the Government's proposals for providing choice in social housing. The Government do not believe that anyone should be permanently excluded from social housing and therefore propose to remove the power local authorities have to impose 'blanket' exclusions. Instead the Government propose to allow authorities temporarily to reduce the priority or suspend the applications of households on an individual basis where this is justified. In applying any such sanction, authorities would be required to explain the reason in writing and to give applicants a clear indication of any action necessary to have the restriction removed. They would have a right of appeal in cases of dispute.

Any decisions to suspend an application would need to consider carefully the circumstances of the household in order to safeguard vulnerable people. Suspensions would be used in exceptional circumstances where other means of managing a problem had been exhausted.

Gas Safety

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent discussions he has held with representatives of the Health and Safety Executive regarding excess gas flow valves. [118593]

Mr. Meacher: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE), on behalf of the Health and Safety Commission (HSC), is undertaking a fundamental review of the current health and safety regime for the installation and use of gas to determine whether, or how far, changes are needed to the existing system of control.

The use of excess gas flow valves is one of the many issues being considered in the review. HSE officials have twice met a manufacturer of excess gas flow valves; and HSE has received a written submission from them in response to the fundamental review's discussion document.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received about gas safety in domestic dwellings. [118596]

Mr. Meacher: A fundamental review of the current health and safety regime for the installation and use of gas is currently being conducted by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) on behalf of the Health and Safety Commission (HSC). Over 650 replies have been received so far in response to the discussion document "Gas safety review: Options for change" published in November 1999 and recent related consultative exercises in Glasgow and Lambeth.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many gas explosions have occurred in each of the past five years in domestic properties. [118594]

Mr. Meacher: In the period 1995–99 (last available figure to date) the number of gas-related explosions/fires in domestic premises reported to the HSE under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations was as follows:

Year	Number
1994–95	35
1995–96	42
1996–97	40
1997–98	45
1998–99	[1]37

[1] Subject to validation

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to discuss with housing bodies installation of excess gas flow valves in (a) high rise flats and (b) other domestic properties at risk from gas explosions. [118595]

Mr. Meacher: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE), on behalf of the Health and Safety Commission (HSC), is undertaking a fundamental review of the current health and safety regime for the installation and use of gas to determine whether, or how far, changes are needed to the existing system of control. The use of excess gas flow valves in all domestic properties, including high rise flats, is being considered as part of the review.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has recently (a) made to and (b) received from the Health and Safety Executive about the health and safety implications of telecommunications masts sited in residential areas. [118289]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My officials regularly discuss the health and safety aspects of telecommunications development with officials from the Health and Safety Executive. They have, in particular, held discussions about the joint DETR/DH circular on land use planning and electro-magnetic fields. The guidance will be finalised as soon as practicable after the Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones has reported.

Correspondence

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will reply to the letter from the right hon. Member for North-East Hampshire of 29 November 1999, regarding his constituents, Mr. and Mrs. Hewett. [118845]

Mr. Meacher: I replied to the right hon. Member's letter on 12 April.

Westminister Underground Station

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will call for a report from the Health and Safety Executive on the health implications of the continuing accumulation of garbage, in the walkway between Westminster underground station and the House; and if he will call for reports from London Underground on (a) the continued failure (i) to operate lifts at Westminster Station and (ii) to remove netting, fencing and tapes from the walkway from that station to the House on the recessed platform adjoining that walkway and (b) on signal failures on the westbound Jubilee Line on the morning of Monday 10 April. [118910]

Mr. Hill: These are operational matters for London Underground (LU). HM Railways Inspectorate, part of the HSE organisation, is in discussion with LU on outstanding issues at Westminster and elsewhere on the extended Jubilee line.

LUL has cleared litter from the subway in question and will be liaising with Westminster Council (who own the new subway) to ensure that a regime is developed for routine maintenance and cleaning.

Three of the five lifts at Westminster are already operating. The remaining two are expected to enter service by the end of next month.

Fencing, tape etc. are in place where there is still work to be done (such as installing permanent lighting) in order to separate the works from the general public. In the interests of public presentation, white painted hoardings are shortly to replace some fencing, and will cover a few currently exposed ledges.

On the morning of 10 April, trains ran on average every 3–5 minutes westbound through Westminster. There was an 8 minute gap at 08.38 due to the activation of a passenger emergency alarm at Waterloo. There was a 7 minute gap at 09.24 due to a passenger being taken ill on a train at Canary Wharf. Finally, there was a 13 minute gap at 09.48 due to signal computer problems.

Carbon Monoxide Poisoning

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure greater protection for the public from carbon monoxide poisoning. [118872]

Mr. Meacher: The Government fully support the published commitment of the Health and Safety Commission to reducing gas-related carbon monoxide poisoning fatalities by at least 10 per cent. over a 10 year average. To further this aim, the Commission published a discussion document on 4 November 1999, entitled "Gas safety review: options for change" to invite views on a wide range of issues which impact on domestic gas safety. This reflects preliminary representations made to the Health and Safety Executive by key consumer and industry stakeholders, analysis of accident data, and work commissioned under the auspices of the Government's People's Panel initiative on the attitudes, knowledge and behaviour of Panel members in relation to gas safety.

The discussion document and recent related public consultation exercises in Glasgow and Lambeth have yielded in excess of 650 replies, which are now being evaluated. The Government expect to receive a report of the conclusions of the Commission in the summer on what further regulatory or other action may be justified to enable the agreed target to be met or exceeded in the most equitable and cost-effective way.

GM Crop Trials

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress of genetically modified crop trials in the United Kingdom. [117740]

Mr. Meacher: Following my announcement about the Farm Scale Evaluations on 17 March, my Department has been notified of 42 proposed field sites. This information is available on our website, which is regularly updated.

During the spring, GM maize, beet and spring oil seed rape will be planted in part of each field involved in the programme, and the rest of the field will be planted with the equivalent non-GM crop. Independent researchers will then study what effects, if any, growing and managing the GM crops has on wildlife.

Demonstrating the Government's commitment to openness and transparency on GM issues, my Department has arranged a series of public meetings across England, about the research programme. These meetings provide local people living near to the trial sites an opportunity to hear a series of presentations about the Evaluations and to put questions to a panel consisting of an official from my Department, one of the scientists from the independent researchers, a representative from an environmental group and a representative from the biotechnology industry.

Flooding (Planning Guidance)

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made with the revision of planning guidance on flooding. [119334]

Mr. Raynsford: A consultation paper on a new Planning Policy Guidance Note 25 "Development and flood risk" is published today and has been placed on the Department's website.

The Government recognise the importance of flooding and the effects it can have on people's lives. While there is no quick and easy solution, in the longer term a more precautionary and risk-based approach will ensure that new development is not exposed to risk unnecessarily or itself add to flood risk in other areas. Taken together with MAFF and Environment Agency initiatives on flood warning and flood defence, this new guidance will assist in reducing the potential impact of flooding.

The draft guidance published today takes account of the developing knowledge of the likely impacts of climate change, but recognises the inherent uncertainties. Planning decisions should apply the precautionary principle to avoid inappropriate development in flood-risk areas. Where other material considerations outweigh flood risk in favour of proceeding with development, the draft guidance emphasises the need to design and defend such development to an adequate level to ensure the safety of people and minimise property damage. It also emphasises the need for developers to contribute towards the cost of flood defences that may be required as a result of implementing their project.

The draft guidance advises that it is necessary to look at development and flood management on a wider scale and to ensure that run-off from new development is controlled as near the source as possible through the use of sustainable drainage systems. This mitigates the problems caused when additional run-off from extensions to built-up areas increases flood risk downstream.

Thaumasite

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the review of the conclusions of the report of the Expert Group on Thaumasite. [119400]

Mr. Raynsford: I am today publishing, on my Department's website, the review undertaken by Professor Leslie Clark of the conclusions of the report of the Expert Group on Thaumasite which he chaired and which reported in January 1999. When I announced the publication of the report last year I said that I had asked Professor Clark to review its conclusions in a year's time in the light of the findings of further research and monitoring which was then being commissioned.

The review found that the recommendations of the Thaumasite Expert Group's report were robust and continue to minimise the risk of the thaumasite form of sulphate attack in new construction. The report has been generally well received by the construction industry and is viewed as sound and well balanced.

There have been 20 new cases of the thaumasite form of sulphate attack identified in the last year. All of these have taken place in conditions that were anticipated in the report. None have posed any threat to public safety.

The new data available do not permit relaxation at present of the report's recommendations with one exception. There is a majority view within the Expert Group that the report's very conservative procedure for assessing the sulphate class of sulphide bearing ground can now, with safety, be relaxed somewhat in respect of pyritic clays. The review has also suggested the need for clarification of some aspects of the guidance given in the relevant BRE Digests and British Standards.

Local Government Bill

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many replies were received in response to consultation on draft guidance and regulations under Part II of the Local Government Bill [Lords]. [119403]

Ms Armstrong: 176 written responses have been received to consultation to date. None of these have asked to remain confidential. A list has today been placed in the Library of the House and full copies of these have been made available in my Department's library for public scrutiny.

We will consider carefully all these responses before publishing a revised draft for further consultation after Easter.

Water Industry (Competition)

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made with the review of competition in the water industry. [119431]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are today publishing, jointly with the National Assembly for Wales, a consultation paper entitled "Competition in the Water Industry in England and Wales". Copies of this paper have been placed in the Libraries of the House and it is available on the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' website.

The Government believe that the properly managed development of effective competition in the water industry in England and Wales is desirable. It should benefit consumers by promoting greater efficiency, lower prices, innovation and better services—as it has in other utilities. This consultation paper seeks views on how increased competition can be arranged in ways that safeguard, in particular, public health, the environment and wider social objectives. We are keen to receive a wide range of responses to inform policy decisions. We expect that some of these will be taken forward in a future water Bill.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when regulations providing for the phasing out and disposal of polychlorinated biphenyls will be laid before Parliament. [119432]

Mr. Meacher: The Environmental Protection (Disposal of Polychlorinated Biphenyls and other Dangerous Substances) (England and Wales) Regulations 2000 were laid before Parliament today.

They require holders of PCB contaminated equipment to register with the Environment Agency and, subject to certain specific exemptions, for PCBs and associated equipment to be disposed of by the end of December this year. The agency will also have responsibilities in relation to monitoring and enforcement.

The Regulations will have the effect of curtailing release of PCBs, and so lowering their concentrations in the environment, including in relation to sea mammals, in which PCBs have been found in significant quantities.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Green Park

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on (a) the landscaping being undertaken in Green Park and (b) when the fountains will be turned on. [118291]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Royal Parks Agency and I have asked for a reply to be given.

Letter from Viviane Robertson to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 13 April 2000:

A new Chief Executive has not yet been appointed and, because it is an operational matter which is the responsibility of the Agency, I have been asked by the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the nature of the landscaping work in Green Park, and when the fountains are to be turned on.

We are re-seeding the area behind the Canada Gate in Green Park following remedial work to problems associated with flooding in the past. The seeding is due to be completed by the end of the month and the grass should begin to appear during May. The area will remain fenced because it is usually heavily used and the new grass needs to be protected until it is well established.

The Canadian memorial water feature is usually operational. When it fails, as it occasionally does, it is repaired and brought back into service as soon as possible. The Constance Fund fountain is on the route of the Diana, Princess of Wales Memorial Walkway and is being restored in time for the official opening of the walkway in June this year.

Lottery Sports Fund

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much Lottery money has been allocated to the Lottery Sports Fund for each of the last four years; and how much is planned to be allocated in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02. [118783]

Kate Hoey: The total amount of Lottery proceeds (including interest) allocated to sport for 1996–97, 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 was:

£ million

Year	Amount of Lottery proceeds
1996–97	314
1997–98	368
1998–99	307
1999–2000	273

The total Lottery proceeds (including a notional estimate for interest) to be allocated to Sport for 2000–01 and 2001–02 have been estimated using the Lottery income scenarios which the Department sent to distributing bodies in October 1999:

£ million

Year	Forecast income
2000–01	245 to 292
2001–02	226 to 298

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many awards have been made to date by the Lottery Sports Fund; how many have been made for tennis; and what is the total amount spent on tennis projects from the Lottery funds to date. [118784]

Kate Hoey: The five distributing bodies of the Lottery Sports Fund have made over 6,300 awards to sport since the inception of the National Lottery in November 1994. Of these, nearly 600 awards have been made to tennis projects with a total value of over £29 million.

Lottery Arts Fund

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what is the allocation per head from the Lottery Arts Fund since its establishment for Waverley Borough Council; and which local authority has had the (a) largest and (b) lowest allocation per head; [118787]

(2) how much money has been allocated to the Lottery Arts Fund since its establishment; and how much was spent from the fund in Surrey in each of the last three years; [118785]

(3) how many awards have been made from Lottery funds to arts centres for capital projects. [118786]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have asked the Arts Council of England, as the main distributing body of lottery money for the arts, to provide this information. When it is available, I will write to the right hon. Member and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Picketts Lock

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the British Olympic Association about the suitability of the proposed athletics facility at Picketts Lock to host the 2012 or 2016 Olympics. [118114]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 10 April 2000]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I met representatives of UK Athletics, UK Sport, Sport England, the British Olympic Association and London International Sport on 24 March to discuss the bid for the 2005 World Athletics Championships. At that meeting, the British Olympic Association indicated that they were content with Picketts Lock as having the potential for facilities to stage an Olympic Games.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he last visited Picketts Lock, Enfield. [118111]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 10 April 2000]: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have visited Picketts Lock recently.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what financial (a) help and (b) guarantees his Department has offered to UK Athletics for the development of Picketts Lock; [118215]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Lee Valley Regional Park Authority about the long-term ownership and use of the proposed athletics stadium at Picketts Lock; [118110]

(3) what discussions he has held with (a) Railtrack and (b) ministerial colleagues in the DETR about improving rail links to Picketts Lock, Enfield; [118112]

(4) what discussions he has held with Ministerial colleagues in the DETR about improving road links to Picketts Lock, Enfield; [118109]

(5) what external advice he has received on the likely timetable of works for the development of a major athletics facility at Picketts Lock, in relation to (a) design, (b) planning, (c) demolition of existing facilities and (d) construction; [118113]

(6) what discussions he has had with (a) the Lee Valley Regional Park Authority and (b) Enfield Council about the proposed athletics facility at Picketts Lock; and what financial support they have offered for the project. [118117]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 10 April 2000]: UK Athletics is to be congratulated on securing both the 2003 World Indoor Championships in Birmingham and 2005 World Athletics Championships in London at Picketts Lock. UK Athletics is now continuing the process of drawing up detailed proposals for developing the site, including proposals for road and rail links. That process will involve discussions with the Lee Valley Regional Park Authority, the London Borough of Enfield, Sport England, UK Sport, the Government Office for London and my Department, among others.

Prior to making the bid presentation to the IAAF in Paris, UK Athletics and Sport England undertook extensive discussions with a range of parties across London to determine the optimum site for staging the 2005 championships in London. During that process representatives from UK Athletics and Sport England and an official from my Department met representatives of the Lee Valley Regional Park Authority and the London Borough of Enfield on 21 March to discuss the feasibility of the Picketts Lock site for staging the championships. At that meeting, the Park Authority indicated that funds were already earmarked in its business plan for developing the Picketts Lock site and both capital and revenue contributions might be forthcoming to a world-class athletics facility on that site.

National Lottery

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to the oral statement by the Minister for Tourism, Film and Broadcasting, of 11 April 2000, Official Report, column 11WH, if he will set out the Government's position on not-for-profit bidders for the next licence to run the National Lottery. [119305]

Mr. Chris Smith: We have maintained the policy of seeking (and welcoming) any bids from efficient not-for-profit operators; but the selection of the next operator of the National Lottery is a matter for the National Lottery Commission, not the Government. Subject to ensuring that players are protected and the Lottery is run with all due propriety, the Commission will award the next licence to the bidder likely to raise the most for the good causes. Any comments made by my hon. Friend the Minister for Tourism, Film and Broadcasting during the course of the debate on 11 April should not be interpreted as contradicting this position in any way.

Spoliation Advisory Panel

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will announce the membership and terms of reference of the Spoliation Advisory Panel. [119219]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Following consultation on our proposals on both the membership and the terms of reference, I am now able to do so. In establishing the Spoliation Advisory Panel the Government's aim, by providing an alternative to litigation, is to facilitate a just resolution of claims made for cultural objects that may have been looted in the Nazi era between 1933 and 1945.

The membership of the Panel will be:

Chair: The right hon. Sir David Hirst

Mr. Donell Deeny QC

Professor Richard Evans

Sir Terry Heiser

Professor Peter Jones

Mr. Martin Levy

Mr. Peter Oppenheimer

Professor Norman Palmer

Ms Anna Southall

Dr. Liba Taub

Baroness Warnock.

The constitution and Terms of Reference proposed for the Panel are as set out. These have been revised as a result of consultation and the Government believe they offer a fair way forward. The Panel will be able to advise not only claimants and those who hold the items in question in their collections, but also the Government. The Government intend that the Panel should begin work as soon as possible.

Spoliation Advisory Panel

Constitution and Terms of Reference

Members of the Panel

1. The members of the Spoliation Advisory Panel (the Panel) will be appointed by the Secretary of State on such terms and conditions as he thinks fit. The Secretary of State shall appoint one member as Chairman of the Panel.

Resources for the Panel

2. The Secretary of State will make available such resources as he considers necessary to enable the Panel to carry out its functions, including administrative support provided by a Secretariat (the Secretariat).

Functions of the Panel

3. The task of the Panel is to consider claims from anyone (or from any one or more of their heirs), who lost possession of a cultural object (the object) during the Nazi era (1933–45), where such object is now in the possession of a UK national collection or in the possession of another UK museum or gallery established for the public benefit (the institution). The Panel shall advise the claimant and the institution on what would be appropriate action to take in response to such a claim. The Panel shall also be available to advise about any claim for an item in a private collection at the joint request of the claimant and the owner.

4. In any case where the Panel considers it appropriate, it may also advise the Secretary of State

(a) on what action should be taken in relation to general issues raised by the claim, and/or

(b) where it considers that the circumstances of the particular claim warrant it, on what action should be taken in relation to that claim.

5.(a) In exercising its functions, while the Panel will consider legal issues relating to title to the object (see paragraph 7(d) and (f)), it will not be the function of the Panel to determine legal rights, for example as to title;

(b) The Panel's proceedings are an alternative to litigation, not a process of litigation. The Panel will therefore take into account non-legal obligations, such as the moral strength of the claimant's case (paragraph 7(e)) and whether any moral obligation rests on the institution (paragraph 7(g));

(c) Any recommendation made by the Panel is not intended to be legally binding on the claimant, the institution or the Secretary of State;

(d) If the claimant accepts the recommendation of the Panel and that recommendation is implemented, the claimant is expected to accept the implementation in full and final settlement of his claim.

Performance of the Panel's functions

6. In performing the functions set out in paragraphs 3 and 4, the Panel's paramount purpose shall be to achieve a solution which is fair and just both to the claimant and to the institution.

7. For this purpose the Panel shall:

(a) make such factual and legal inquiries, (including the seeking of advice about legal matters, about cultural objects and about valuation of such objects) as the Panel consider appropriate to assess each claim as comprehensively as possible;

(b) assess all information and material submitted by or on behalf of the claimant and the institution or any other person, or otherwise provided or known to the Panel;

(c) examine and determine the circumstances in which the claimant was deprived of the object, whether by theft, forced sale, sale at an undervalue, or otherwise;

(d) evaluate, on the balance of probability, the validity of the claimant's original title to the object, recognising the difficulties of proving such title after the destruction of the Second World War and the Holocaust and the duration of the period which has elapsed since the claimant lost possession of the object;

(e) give due weight to the moral strength of the claimant's case;

(f) evaluate, on the balance of probability, the validity of the institution's title to the object;

(g) consider whether any moral obligation rests on the institution taking into account in particular the circumstances of its acquisition of the object, and its knowledge at that juncture of the object's provenance;

(h) take account of any relevant statutory provisions, including stipulations as to the institution's objectives, and any restrictions on its power of disposal;

(i) take account of the terms of any trust instrument regulating the powers and duties of the trustees of the institution, and give appropriate weight to their fiduciary duties;

(j) where appropriate assess the current market value of the object;

(k) formulate and submit to the claimant and to the institution its advice in a written report, giving reasons, and supply a copy of the report to the Secretary of State, and

(l) formulate and submit to the Secretary of State any advice pursuant to paragraph 4 in a written report, giving reasons, and supply a copy of the report to the claimant and the institution.

Scope of Advice

8. If the Panel upholds the claim in principle, it may recommend either:

(a) the return of the object to the claimant, or

(b) the payment of compensation to the claimant, the amount being in the discretion of the Panel having regard to all relevant circumstances including the current market value, but not tied to that current market value, or

(c) an ex gratia payment to the claimant, or

(d) the display alongside the object of an account of its history and provenance during and since the Nazi era, with special reference to the claimant's interest therein; and

(e) that negotiations should be conducted with the successful claimant in order to implement such a recommendation as expeditiously as possible.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

9. When advising the Secretary of State under paragraph 4(a) and/or (b), the Panel shall be free to recommend any action which they consider appropriate, and in particular may, under paragraph 4(a), direct the attention of the Secretary of State to the need for legislation to alter the powers and duties of any institution.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what recent representations he has received concerning the independence of the Police Complaints Authority from the police that they investigate; [118586]

(2) what plans he has to increase the Police Complaints Authority's independence from the police that they investigate. [118587]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary receives many representations about the investigation of complaints against the police and the need for greater independence in the process. Although the Police Complaints Authority, which oversees the complaints process, is fully independent of the police, the present arrangements rely on police officers to carry out investigations. We recognise that a complaints system with a stronger independent element in the process would do much to bolster public confidence.

In line with recommendations made by the Home Affairs Select Committee and the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry, we commissioned a feasibility study, which we intend to publish shortly. We will, at the same time, invite public comments on the options which have been identified for achieving such a system.

Proxy Voters

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the parliamentary constituencies at the 1997 General Election ranked from highest to lowest by (a) number of proxy voters and (b) proxy voters as a percentage of registered electors. [118381]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The lists of parliamentary constituencies ranked by number of persons who appointed proxies to vote on their behalf at the 1997 general election and those persons as a percentage of registered electors have been placed in the Library.

Charles Kray

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the body of Charles Kray will be released for burial intact. [118878]

Mr. Boateng: I understand that the coroner released the body for burial on 7 April after a post-mortem examination had been carried out on his instructions. No organs or other body parts were retained.

Criminal Records

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of incorrect information from criminal record files provided in response to employment inquiries have been reported to police forces in the last year for which figures are available. [118870]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Such information is not available centrally. We recognise that there are shortcomings in the accuracy of records, which need to be addressed, especially given that the Criminal Records Bureau will come into operation from July 2001 onwards. The Police Service is working to improve the accuracy of criminal records, and the Association of Chief Police Officers has produced proposals for enhancing police data handling. In addition, a report of a review by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary of data quality of criminal records information held on the Police National Computer is expected to be published in the summer.

Fraud (Prosecutions)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of fraud were prosecuted in (a) 1997 and (b) 1999. [117761]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database shows that in England and Wales in 1997 there were 20,744 defendants prosecuted for fraud (including false accounting) offences. In 1998, the figure was 23,880. Provisional data for 1999 will be available in the summer.

Police Numbers

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 April 2000, Official Report, columns 595–96W, and his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) of 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1–3W, on the number of recruits resulting from the additional £11 million, what level of funding is being provided by his Department for (a) 2,000 extra recruits in 2000–01 and (b) 3,000 extra recruits in 2001–02; how many extra recruits will be funded by the £46 million he has announced in total for 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [118847]

Mr. Straw: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave on 6 April 2000, Official Report, columns 595–96W.

Young Offenders (Bullying)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent changes there have been in young offenders' institutions to deal with bullying; if such changes have been effective; and if he will make a statement. [118875]

Mr. Boateng: The most recent change in young offender institutions has been the introduction of Prison Service Order 1702 which was issued in July 1999, a copy of which is in the Library. The Order requires that each establishment has a written anti-bullying strategy and an anti-bullying co-ordinator in place. In addition, each establishment must provide a copy of their strategy to Prison Service headquarters. On 11 April 2000, 55 written strategies had been reviewed by Prison Service headquarters; of these, 10 were from young offender institutions.

The positive action already being taken by establishments will convey to all prisoners that the Prison Service takes the problem of bullying seriously. The Prison Service is confident that the development of the local strategies, together with improved training for staff, will reduce bullying in young offender institutions.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what allegations have been received by his Department of bullying at young offenders' institutions in the last two years; and if he will make a statement. [118876]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested cannot be obtained from the centrally available data without incurring disproportionate costs.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides have occurred in the past two years in young offenders' institutions; and if he will list the institutions. [118877]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is given in the table.

Young offender institutions	Number of self-inflicted deaths 1998	1999
Aylesbury	0	3
Castington	0	1
Glen Parva	2	1
Portland	0	1
Reading	3	0
Stoke Heath	0	1
Swinfen Hall	0	0

Notes:

1. Establishments have been categorised according to their primary role. However, it should be noted that there are a number of other prisons that hold young offenders (eg male remand centres) which are not included.
2. Not all self-inflicted deaths conclude with a verdict of suicide.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Asylum Appeals

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many asylum appeal cases were awaiting a hearing on 1 April. [118492]

Jane Kennedy: At the end of March 2000 there were no arrears of work before the adjudicators. All the cases in the system (some 3,500 at the end of February) were at the appropriate stage of preparation for hearing or promulgation of the decision.

At the end of February, the Immigration Appeal Tribunal had 2,000 cases awaiting hearing. By the end of April all backlog cases which were awaiting a hearing date will have been heard and all new cases will be listed for hearing within five weeks.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of persons over state pension age who are not entitled to a winter fuel payment because they have not paid sufficient national insurance contributions to receive a state pension and who do not receive another qualifying benefit. [118917]

Mr. Rooker: Arrangements are now in place to make winter fuel payments to people aged 60 and over who satisfy the qualifying conditions, regardless of whether they are in receipt of state retirement pension or other social security benefits.

Jobseekers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are registered as looking for work and claiming only national insurance credits in each region of the UK, broken down by sex; and of these how many are aged (a) over and (b) under 50 years. [118758]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Jobseekers Allowance claimants in receipt of national insurance credits only by Government Office Region by sex and age: Great Britain November 1999

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest hundred and shown in thousands.
2. Numbers are based on a 5 per cent. sample.
3. Figures for Northern Ireland can be obtained from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

DEFENCE

Departmental Estate

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many empty houses are owned by his Department in the United Kingdom; how many of them have been empty for over six months; and if he will make a statement. [118062]

Dr. Moonie: As at 29 February 2000, the Defence Housing Executive held a stock of 61,936 married quarters in England, Scotland and Wales, of which 47,385 were occupied and 3,719 were in the course of disposal. Of the balance of 10,832 empty properties, 3,507 were under offer to service families, most of which are likely to be occupied within the next two months. 1,145 were vacant awaiting further unit deployments or use as decant accommodation during refurbishment programmes. 1,652 properties were empty awaiting modernisation and 4,528 were routine voids, that is a working management margin for some 22,000 family moves each year.

Including properties identified for disposal, approximately 8,300 have been empty for more than six months.

Over 6,500 properties are planned for disposal during the next two years. Most of the MOD housing stock in England and Wales is owned by Annington Homes and is underleased by the MOD. Properties identified as having no long-term requirement to the Department are released to that company under the terms of the contract agreed in November 1996 by the previous Administration. Surplus MOD owned properties are sold by Defence Estates.

In Northern Ireland, a further 3,235 married quarters are owned by the MOD, of which 473 were empty as at 31 March 2000 and 236 had been empty for over six months.

Weapons of Mass Destruction

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many weapons of mass destruction are held in the United Kingdom. [118537]

Mr. Hoon: I have nothing to add to the information on our minimum nuclear deterrent set out in the 1998 Strategic Defence Review.

The UK has no biological or chemical weapons. As made clear in the 1999 Ministry of Defence publication, "Defending Against the Threat from Biological and Chemical Weapons", the UK gave up its offensive biological and chemical capabilities in the 1950s. A copy of the publication is in the Library of the House.

National Missile Defence System

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 4 April 2000,Official Report, column 400W, if, in his discussions with the US Defense Secretary or the Deputy Defense Secretary, he (a) indicated UK (i) opposition to or (ii) support for the proposed national missile defence system and (b) offered UK co-operation over the proposed system. [118317]

Mr. Hoon: The US has not asked for UK assistance in the deployment of the proposed National Missile Defence system, nor would we expect them to do so until after a US decision on whether or not to proceed with its deployment. In my discussions with the US Administration on the subject, I have made it clear that the UK would consider any such request carefully. I have also welcomed the fact that the US will make their deployment decision on the basis of a number of important factors, which will include taking account of the views of Allies and the status of the Anti Ballistic Missile Treaty.

Performance Targets

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made by his Department in its strategic environmental appraisal of the Strategic Defence Review; and if he will make a statement. [119123]

Dr. Moonie: The study phase of the strategic environmental appraisal has now been completed. My Department is reviewing its recommendations and I intend to publish the report in the near future.

Serle's House

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if an economic option appraisal was conducted by his Department before making the decision to put Serle's House on the open market; and if he will make a statement. [118914]

Dr. Moonie: I can confirm that a full investment appraisal and cost-benefit analysis was conducted before the decision to dispose of Serle's House was taken.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of moving the Royal Hampshire Regiment Museum from Serle's House to the Guard Room in Upper Peninsula Barracks; who will bear this cost; and if he will make a statement. [118923]

Dr. Moonie: The cost of moving the Western Headquarters of the Princess of Wales' Royal Regiment and the Regimental Museum of the Royal Hampshire Regiment from their current home in Serle's House to the Guard Room in Upper Peninsula Barracks has been costed at approximately £317,000, which will cover the refurbishment of the new site and the cost of removals. This cost will be borne by the Adjutant General's Top Level Budged and offset departmentally by the disposal receipt.

RAF Finningley

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much Government funding (a) was spent in the last 12 months and (b) is planned to be spent in the next 12 months on construction work at the former RAF base at Finningley; [118688]

(2) on what basis Defence Estates is procuring construction work at the former RAF base at Finningley; [118690]

(3) what work is to be carried out by Defence Estates at the former RAF base at Finningley. [118689]

Dr. Moonie: The RAF Finningley site was sold to Peel Holdings in June 1999, at which point my Department ceased to have any involvement with it. No central government funding has been spent in the last 12 months on construction work at the former RAF Finningley, nor will be spent in the next 12 months.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Horn of Africa

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the famine in Ethiopia. [118040]

Clare Short: The situation in Ethiopia is serious. Ethiopia is a very poor country with a GDP of $110 per capita. Many Ethiopians are partially dependent on food aid in most years. This is the third year in succession when the early rains have either failed or been poor. Ethiopia has also been engaged in a war with Eritrea since May 1998. The war has disrupted Ethiopia's economic and social progress. It has also affected food security by diverting trucking capacity and increasing costs; denying access to the ports of Massawa and Assab; and denying rural households supplementary income sources in Eritrea and Tigray. As a result, eight million people now face serious food shortages. According to the information we have available, Ethiopia's initial appeal for 758,000MT of cereals is almost fully met. Britain has provided £4.5 million of food and non-food bilateral assistance this year. We have provided more bilateral food aid this year than any European donor and we will contribute 17 per cent. of the 432,000 metric tonnes which will be provided through the EC this year.

Cyclone Hudah

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the effect of cyclone Hudah on (a) the flooding in Mozambique and (b) Madagascar. [118097]

Clare Short: Cyclone Hudah has not affected the previously flooded areas in southern and central Mozambique. The cyclone made landfall in Pembane in northern Mozambique late on Friday 7 April. Preliminary assessments indicate very limited damage to property and while there has been some localised flooding this has not been exceptional. Full assessments will be completed over the coming days, but it appears there are no outstanding needs at this time.

The cyclone had previously caused considerable damage while tracking across the North East of Madagascar. As a result, there are an estimated 100,000 people requiring immediate assistance. My Department has already provided some £600,000 for immediate relief to those affected by Cyclones Eline and Gloria. We will continue to monitor the situation closely in collaboration with operational agencies on the ground and the British Embassy in Antananarivo and stand ready to respond following completed assessments.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the need for emergency aid for Madagascar after the recent hurricane. [118042]

Clare Short: My officials have maintained close contact with our Embassy in Antananarivo and operational agencies on the ground. There are an estimated 100,000 people requiring emergency assistance as a result of cyclone Hudah. Following the previous two cyclones, Gloria and Eline, effective co-ordination mechanisms were established and the United Nations and Red Cross have been supporting the Government of Madagascar to respond to relief needs.

My Department has already provided some £600,000 for immediate relief to those affected by cyclones Eline and Gloria. This support has been channelled through United Nations Children's Fund, for water sanitation and health activities; and the World Food Programme for food and delivery of relief items to isolated communities. However, due to the increase in the number of people requiring assistance these resources may run out quicker than planned. We stand ready to respond further, pending completion of detailed assessments.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make future aid programmes to Zimbabwe conditional on respect for democracy and human rights. [118047]

Clare Short: Good governance and human rights are among the factors taken into account in formulating strategy in all country programmes. Our Zimbabwe country strategy published in 1999 makes clear our position in relation to Zimbabwe.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs concerning the suspension of aid to Zimbabwe. [118053]

Clare Short: I have been keeping the development programme for Zimbabwe under very close review since 1997, taking full account of other Departments views. It is the Government's view that it would not help the poor in Zimbabwe to suspend our aid programme. We are disbursing less than half the aid that our published Country Strategy Paper makes clear would be available if the Zimbabwe Government showed a commitment to better governance and economic policies that would benefit the country and improve the life of the poor of Zimbabwe.

TREASURY

Business Tax

Mr. St.Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Treasury estimate of business tax based on the OECD definition as a share of GDP in (a) UK, (b) France and (c) Germany in the latest year for which figures are available. [118643]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 11 April 2000]: The latest OECD figures for tax on business as a share of GDP, for the UK, France and Germany, are published in the OECD publication "Revenue Statistics: 1965/98". A copy of this document is available in the House Library.

Public Debt Interest Payments

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the reduction in public debt interest payments resulting from a (a) 2 per cent., (b) 3 per cent., (c) 4 per cent. and (d) 5 per cent reduction in interest rates over a period of three years. [118096]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Because of the wider economic consequences of such large interest rate movements, the impact on inflation and Government borrowing would give rise to indirect changes to debt interest payments which are difficult to predict both in magnitude and direction.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

24. Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Solicitor-General what assessment he has made of the work of the Crown Prosecution Service in co-operating with police and judicial authorities to speed up the completion of court cases. [117755]

The Solicitor-General: Since my appointment as Solicitor-General, I have visited many Crown Prosecution Service offices throughout England and Wales. The people I speak to, and the reports I receive, confirm that the CPS continues to co-operate closely with the police and the courts in bringing a high proportion of cases to a speedy conclusion and, wherever possible, at the first hearing. These improvements have involved a significant change in the working practices for many CPS staff which, I am pleased to report, they have undertaken with enthusiasm and professionalism.

25. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Solicitor-General what estimate he has made of the costs to the Crown Prosecution Service of the closure of local magistrates courts in the last year for which figures are available. [117757]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service does not gather information on any costs (or savings) incurred from the closure of local magistrates courts.

26. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Solicitor-General what progress he has made on the review of the code for crown prosecutors. [117759]

The Solicitor-General: The review team has now been established, and met for the first time on 5 April. Consultation has begun: the team has written to a large number of organisations and individuals with an interest in the criminal justice system, asking for comments on the existing Code. Local consultation is being led by Chief Crown Prosecutors, who will report their findings to the review team. Information about the Code review has been put on the CPS website, together with an invitation to the general public to e-mail or write to the CPS with comments on the Code. The Director aims to publish the new Code in early September.

27. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement on the efficiency of the Crown Prosecution Service. [117760]

The Solicitor-General: In the year ending December 1999, the CPS secured convictions in respect of 98.3 per cent. (980,729) of defendants in magistrates courts, whose case proceeded to a hearing. In the Crown court, convictions were secured in respect of a further 88.4 per cent. (67,352) of defendants.

The CPS have worked closely with the police and courts to implement the Narey and Crime and Disorder Act provisions to bring offenders to court, in many cases the day after charge. In most of England and Wales, at least 60 per cent. of cases are now completed at the first hearing.

The CPS is also developing local plans to implement new criminal justice units with the police to handle cases in magistrates courts more efficiently and new trial units which will allow the CPS to shift the balance of its resources in favour of the most serious cases in the Crown court.

Sentences (Driving Offences)

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Solicitor-General how many unduly lenient sentences the Attorney General has referred to the Court of Appeal in the past five years which relate to driving offences. [117758]

The Solicitor-General: The number of sentences referred to the Court of Appeal in cases which concerned either causing death by dangerous driving or causing death by careless driving while under the influence of drink or drugs is as follows:

1995—five sentences;

1996—11 sentences;

1997—one sentence;

1998—five sentences;

1999—three sentences.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committees

Mr. White: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, how many specialist advisers have been appointed by each Select Committee; and what were the associated costs since May 1997. [118349]

Mr. Darvill: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, how much has been spent on overseas travel by each Select Committee since May 1997. [118360]

Mr. Kirkwood: The information sought by the hon. Members is contained in the Sessional Returns ordered to be printed by the House on 25 January 1999 (HC142) and on 16 December 1999 (HC1). The returns contain comprehensive information about Select Committee activity costs and costs which the hon. Members may find useful.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Imported Livestock (Hygiene)

10. Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on food hygiene standards in respect of livestock imported into the UK from France. [117741]

Mr. Morley: Livestock imported into the United Kingdom from France and from other member states must be certified in accordance with harmonised rules for intra-Community trade. Random, non-discriminatory documentary, physical and identity checks are carried out on such imports. Thereafter, livestock entering the United Kingdom is subject to the same legislation as livestock reared here.

Pig Industry

11. Mr. Hope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action the Government are taking to support British pig farmers and the pig industry. [117742]

Ms Quin: At the 30 March Agriculture summit my right hon. Friend the Minister announced that the Government have decided to introduce a pig industry restructuring scheme. This three year scheme, which has been formally notified to the European Commission and we await its clearance, will make available £26 million to pig producers in its first year. The aim of the scheme will be to help pig producers reduce breeding capacity, reduce costs, overcome any competitive disadvantage and restore long term viability.

My Department has also helped the pig industry through the Agriculture Development Scheme and through measures to promote pigmeat consumption and to tackle misleading labelling.

Climate Change

12. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the effects of global warming and climate change on British food production. [117743]

Mr. Morley: Like many business sectors, agriculture will need to adapt to the effects of changing climatic conditions. Last month, my Department published a booklet summarising a £6 million research programme we have commissioned into the impact of climate change on all sectors of agriculture. The booklet also suggests practical ways in which farm management can adapt.

Fur Farming (Prohibition) Bill

13. Mr. Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received in support of the Fur Farming (Prohibition) Bill. [117744]

Mr. Morley: In excess of 2,000 representations have been received from members of the public and animal welfare organisations supporting the banning of fur farming.

Farming (New Entrants)

14. Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to help new entrants to the farming sector. [117745]

Ms Quin: The Action Plan for Farming announced at the Agriculture Summit on 30 March will help create a long-term perspective for farming which will be of benefit to both existing farmers and new entrants. In addition, measures under the England Rural Development Plan announced in December will be targeted at new entrants where appropriate.

Agriculture Summit

15. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on measures announced as a result of the Prime Minister's agricultural summit. [117746]

Mr. Nick Brown: A wide cross section of farming and food industry interests were represented at the Prime Minister's meeting on 30 March. There has been a good deal of interest in the outcome of the meeting.

Distant-water Trawlermen

16. Shona McIsaac: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about compensation for distant-water trawlermen. [117747]

Mr. Morley: The case for providing compensation for former distant water trawlermen is being given urgent consideration and a decision is expected shortly.

Agenda 2000

17. Ms Ryan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the savings to consumers from the Agenda 2000 reform of the common agricultural policy. [117748]

Ms Quin: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton, South (Mr. Tynan) on 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 307W.

Farmers (Business Support)

18. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what business support he is offering to farmers. [117749]

Ms Quin: The Action Plan for Farming announced on 30 March provides help for farmers in relation to diversification, the use of IT, and training and other steps to develop better business practices including £6.5 million which has been allocated to deliver tailored business advice through the Small Business Service.

Dairy Farmers

19. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what help he is providing for dairy farmers. [117750]

Ms Quin: The Plan for Farming announced on 30 March indicated that we would be paying around £22 million in agrimonetary compensation to dairy farmers this year. Dairy farmers will also benefit from any raising of the maximum weight limit under the Over-Thirty-Months Scheme. It also included the removal of dairy hygiene charges in England. In addition, my right hon. Friend announced last autumn the deferral of cattle passport charges worth some £12 million in total to dairy farmers.

Common Fisheries Policy

20. Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list his priorities for the review of the common fisheries policy of 2002. [117751]

Mr. Morley: The Government are pursuing a wide-ranging agenda of improvements to the Common Fisheries Policy. Our priorities include maintaining six and 12 mile limits, improving the integration of environmental policy into the CFP and introducing a greater regional dimension into decision-making.

Farm Incomes

Ms Keeble: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to address the level of farm incomes. [117739]

Mr. Nick Brown: The Government recognise the serious problems facing the farming industry. That is why my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister hosted a meeting on 30 March with farming and food industry leaders to determine a strategy for the future. A copy of the "Action Plan for Farming", discussed at the meeting, has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the items in his Department's budget on which planned expenditure was reduced by over £100,000 in financial year 1999–2000 and in each of the previous three financial years. [117972]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 6 April 2000]: The information requested by the hon. Member could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Agrimonetary Compensation

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the amount of agri-monetary compensation (a) claimed by the UK in (i) 1997–98 (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000 and (b) that the Government intend to claim in 2000–01. [117971]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 6 April 2000]: The approximate figures are set out as follows for the following CAP scheme years:

Scheme year	£ million
1997	85
1998	48
1999	264

Because payments relate to scheme years, some of the expenditure falls between calendar years.

In addition, we intend to pay £154 million in 2000 and £44 million in 2001. This is subject to exchange rates remaining as they are, and approval of new schemes by the European Commission.

UK/US Meetings

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings have been held between United States Government officials and his Department in (a) the USA and (b) the UK in the last 12 months, indicating the dates and locations of the meetings and the subjects discussed. [118627]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 11 April 2000]: There have been frequent meetings between United States Government officials and MAFF officials over the last 12 months covering a range of bilateral and multilateral issues. Detailed information in the form requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sustainable Agriculture

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the Government's policies on sustainable agriculture. [117736]

Mr. Nick Brown: In December 1999 this Government set out their long-term strategy for the development of a sustainable industry that must be competitive, diverse, flexible, responsive to consumer demands and environmentally responsible. The Plan I announced on 30 March will help steer the industry in a new direction; it will help ensure that Government and industry work together to find ways to improve profitability; and it provides financial support to ease the process of change for the hardest hit sectors. The Government continue to work to secure a more market-oriented CAP.

Agri-environment Schemes

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what his Department's expenditure is on agri-environment schemes in the financial year 1999–2000. [117728]

Mr. Morley: Payments to farmers under agri-environment schemes in England in 1999–2000 are expected to be £87.4 million. The equivalent figure in 1996–97 was £44.4 million. I am pleased to say that this represents an increase of 97 per cent. over the last three years.

BSE

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make publicly available the latest progress report prepared by his Department on bovine spongiform encephalopathy. [119402]

Mr. Nick Brown: A further Progress Report on BSE in Great Britain was placed in the Library of the House today.

The report outlines the measures which have been taken to protect public health since June 1999, including legislation to establish the Food Standards Agency and to lift the retail ban on beef on the bone and beef bones. It summarises the results of action to enforce existing public health measures. An update on the number of cases of vCJD is included.

There is also a section on the protection of animal health which covers controls on animal feed.

The epidemiology section shows that the epidemic of BSE in the UK continues to decline. The number of clinically suspect cases of BSE reported in Great Britain has continued to fall and for the year to 31 December 1999 was 26.3 per cent. less than for the same period in 1998, and 46.2 per cent. less than for the same period in 1997. A continued improvement is expected for the future. The report shows that 63 per cent. of UK herds with adult breeding cattle have never had a case of BSE, including 84 per cent. of beef suckler herds. Reported incidence also shows that herds with more than four cases of BSE account for three quarters of all BSE cases, but represent less than one eighth of all herds.

The section on the European perspective reports the first exports of UK beef produced under the Date-based Export Scheme which started in August 1999. It also covers the Commission's latest proposal for regulation to control and prevent animal transmissible spongiform encephalopathies.

Countryside and Rights of Way Bill

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the farming unions and individuals involved in the industry on the question of the universal access proposals contained in the Countryside and Rights of Way Bill; and if he will make a statement. [118402]

Mr. Mullin: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have received representations on the access provisions of the Countryside and Rights of Way Bill from a range of organisations representing, or associated with, the farming and land management industry, including the National Farmers Union, the Farmers' Union of Wales, the Tenant Farmers Association, and the National Federation of Young Farmers Clubs. We have also received representations from a number of individual farmers and others involved in farming. To provide details of representations from individuals would involve disproportionate cost.

Feed Supplements

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the effect on the feed supplements sector in the UK of Regulation 13 of the Feedings Stuffs Regulations 2000; and if he will make a statement; [115388]

(2) when he will reach a decision on whether to proceed to implement Regulation 13 of the Feeding Stuffs Regulations 2000; and if he will make a statement; [115389]

(3) what assessment he has made of the effect of Regulation 13 of the Feeding Stuffs Regulations 2000 on competition in the European feed supplements sector; and if he will make a statement. [115390]

Ms Stuart: I have been asked to reply.

The consultation on the draft Feeding Stuffs Regulations 2000 specifically requested comments on the proposed Regulation 13 in order that its effect on all sectors could be assessed.

There have been a substantial number of responses and some of these have drawn attention to comparisons with the European feed supplement practices. The Government's response will be drawn up taking account of all the issues raised in consultation, and a decision announced shortly.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Short Money

Mr. Kemp: To ask the President of the Council what steps she takes to ensure that Short money allocated to Her Majesty's Opposition is used exclusively for parliamentary purposes. [118873]

Mrs. Beckett: Recipients of Short money have to furnish the Accounting Officer of the House with the certificate of an independent professional auditor, in a form determined by the Accounting Officer, to the effect that all expenses in respect of which the party received financial assistance during the period ending with that day were incurred exclusively in relation to the party's parliamentary business under the House's resolution.

Mr. Kemp: To ask the President of the Council how much Short money has been allocated to Her Majesty's Official Opposition for each of the last six years. [118874]

Mrs. Beckett: The figures are as follows:

1994	1,439,802.97
1995	1,489,749.12
1996	1,530,190.51
1997	986,762.82
1998	1,112,885.74
1999	3,377,670.28

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

United Biscuits

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the bid by Finalrealm for United Biscuits to the Competition Commission; and if he will make a statement. [117610]

Dr. Howells: The size and European dimension of this proposed bid for United Biscuits means that it has fallen to the consideration of the European competition authorities under the EC Merger Regulation (ECMR). The European Commission assesses such cases on competition grounds and member states have a formal role in the ECMR process.

Ilisu Dam Project

Ms Kingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of (a) the number of British jobs that will be created, (b) the number of existing British jobs that may be sustained, (c) which other countries expect to have jobs created, (d) the number of jobs that will be created for persons from other countries, (e) the number of jobs that will be created for local people and (f) the ratio of jobs for local people to jobs that will be available for persons from other countries, including in Britain, as a result of the Ilisu Dam project by Balfour Beatty Construction. [118029]

Mr. Caborn: Contractual negotiations on the Ilisu project are still progressing and therefore we do not have the detailed information sought by my hon. Friend.

Indeed, such information normally becomes available only some time after contract signature. However, I can say that it is estimated that in the region of 2,000 jobs in Britain could be sustained; other countries where export credit agencies are considering support are: Switzerland, the USA, Germany, Italy, Sweden, Austria, and Portugal; other countries may be involved as sub contractors;

the potential UK goods and services represent around 10–12 per cent. of the total project cost; around half the value of civil works will be expended locally;

the contractor has advised us that the peak work force on site—most of whom will be local—will be around 5,000 and that the construction period will be approximately seven years.

Ms Kingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which banks are investing in the Ilisu Dam project; and what discussions his Department (a) has had and (b) is planning to have concerning the project. [118030]

Mr. Caborn: We understand that a lending syndicate would be led by UBS of Switzerland. As no decision has been taken on the availability of export credit support, discussions have not yet commenced on the financing. If and when a decision is taken to provide support, ECGD will discuss the project with the lending syndicate as part of its normal procedures.

Astra

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library file bundles 120, 121, 140 and 141 in the Astra case. [118393]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 22 March 2000, Official Report, column 611W. It is well established that material obtained through the use of compulsory powers is subject to duties of confidentiality. Disclosure can be made only in certain circumstances and for certain specified purposes. While I am unable to make such material available to the Library of the House, the inspectors' concluded views were set out in their report published in June 1993.

Employment and Tribunal Claims

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many employment and tribunal claims in (a) Wales, (b) England and (c) Scotland in each year from 1995 to 2000 in (i) sex discrimination, (ii) equal pay, (iii) race discrimination and (iv) disability discrimination cases (A) were lodged, (B) were settled through ACAS, (C) were privately settled, (D) were withdrawn, (E) reached a hearing and (F) were successful at hearing; what was the distribution of compensation awards in successful cases separately distinguishing compensation for injury to feelings; and how many individuals were represented at tribunals. [118736]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The following tables set out the information requested. The statistics are produced on a Great Britain basis.

Personal Computers

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will ask the Competition Commission to review the retail personal computer market, with particular reference to exclusive supply arrangements; [118565]

(2) if he will seek a meeting with representatives from the Dixons group of stores to discuss their exclusive supply arrangements with manufacturers of personal computers; and if he will make a statement. [118566]

Dr. Howells: Under UK competition law in the first instance it is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT) to investigate allegations of anti-competitive behaviour and possible abuses of a dominant position.

The Office of Fair Trading announced on 10 April that it would be seeking further information from those that have raised concerns about this market, and will be meeting with them shortly.

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the retail market for personal computers to the Competition Commission; and if he will make a statement. [118583]

Dr. Howells: Under UK competition law in the first instance it is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT) to investigate allegations of anti-competitive behaviour and possible abuses of a dominant position.

The Office of Fair Trading announced on 10 April that it would be seeking further information from those that have raised concerns about this market.

Miners' Pension Funds

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the names of the trustees of the miners pensions funds, giving the date of their appointment and the length of their term in office. [118744]

Mrs. Liddell: The Mineworkers Pension Scheme (MPS) has 10 Trustees, while the British Coal Staff Superannuation Scheme (BCSSS) has eight. Half of the Trustees in each Scheme, including the Chairmen, are appointed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in his role as Guarantor to the Schemes. The remaining Trustees are elected by the Scheme membership. Details are as follows:

British Coal Staff Superannuation Scheme
Appointed Trustees

Mrs. S. Gleig (Chair)—appointed for three years to 30 April 2000
Mr. R. Dennis—appointed for three years to 30 April 2000
Mr. D. Brandick—appointed for three years to 30 April 2000
Mr. M. Atkinson—appointed for three years to 31 December 2001

Elected Trustees

Mr. B. Hancock—elected for three years to 30 September 2000

Mr. D. McIntosh—elected for three years to 30 September 2000

Mr. S. Jukes—elected for three years to 31 March 2002

Dr. R. Chappell—elected for three years to 31 March 2002

Mineworkers Pension Scheme

Appointed Trustees

Mr. N. Braithwaite (Chair)—appointed from 1 September 1999 to 13 February 2003

Mr. D. H. Tucker—appointed for three years to 13 February 2003

Mr. P. J. Keenan—appointed from 6 October 1998 to 30 September 2001

Mrs S. Gleig—appointed from 6 October 1998 to 30 April 2000

Mr. M. Atkinson—appointed for three years to 31 December 2002

Elected Trustees

Mr. J. Perry—elected for three years to 31 March 2002

Mr. J. Stones—elected for three years to 31 March 2002

Mr. G. Bolton—elected for three years to 30 September 2000

Mr. N. Greatrex—elected for three years to 30 September 2000

Mr. J. Wills—elected for three years to 31 March 2002.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received from the trustees of the miners' pension funds concerning arrangements for the showing of surpluses between Government and beneficiaries. [118745]

Mrs. Liddell: I met the Chairmen of the Trustees of the coal pension schemes (the British Coal Staff Superannuation Scheme and the Mineworkers' Pension Scheme) recently and discussed how the Government and Trustees could build on the arrangements put in place at privatisation to the mutual benefit of both Scheme members and the Government. These discussions are continuing.

Miners (Compensation)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total amount paid by his Department for the miners' compensation scheme for chest diseases and vibration white finger (a) to solicitors, (b) in interim payments to miners and (c) as final settlement with miners. [118743]

Mrs. Liddell: As at 9 April the Department has made payments for chest diseases amounting to:

£13.2 million to solicitors, including £9.8 million in trial costs;

£50.6 million in interim and bereavement award payments; and

£5.4 million in final settlements.

As at 9 April the Department has made payments for Vibration White Finger amounting to:

£12.1 million to solicitors, including £4.4 million in trial costs;

£25.4 million in interim payments; and

£55.1 million in final settlements.

Energy Prices

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the average cost of (a) 650 therms of gas and (b) 8,000 units of electricity to consumers (i) paying by direct debit and (ii) paying by means of a pre-payment meter in each of the last 10 years, excluding the last 12 months for which figures are available. [118365]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 10 April 2000]: The information to produce estimates of costs on this basis for the last ten years is not readily available. Estimates of these costs for the years for which this information is available (1998 and 1999) are given in Table 1 as are equivalent bills for customers on standard credit terms. The majority of customers are still on standard credit terms. The available information on bills for earlier years is presented in Table 2. This is based on different levels of consumption to those stated in the question.

TrustUK

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how the consumer launch of TrustUK will be promoted to UK consumers. [118775]

Dr. Howells: The consumer launch is being handled by TrustUK who are currently exploring options and developing a media planning strategy. The launch will take place in central London.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the consumer launch of TrustUK will take place. [118776]

Dr. Howells: The consumer launch is expected to take place in June.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the consumer protection provided by the monitoring standards set out in TrustUK. [118777]

Dr. Howells: TrustUK's criteria require e-commerce code owners to carry out effective monitoring to ensure that traders comply with the codes to which they subscribe. The criteria require monitoring to be carried out independently and with integrity and objectivity. Monitoring work must be capable of being externally verified. TrustUK will be developing statistically robust monitoring techniques.

TrustUK's criteria allow a degree of flexibility as to how monitoring is performed. The Government believe this approach, combined with effective enforcement and sanctions, should provide adequate consumer protection. At the same time it gives code owners some choice about the kind of monitoring procedures they adopt. The Government believe that codes should be flexible instruments, capable of evolving in response to market developments. TrustUK is developing a transparent procedure for keeping its criteria under review.

Assisted Areas Status Map

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the reasons are for the length of time taken by the Government and the European Commission to assess the Assisted Areas Status map for the United Kingdom; and when he expects it to be published. [118938]

Mr. Caborn: We have been engaged in detailed negotiations with the Commission with a view to securing the best possible deal for the UK's Assisted Areas within the constraints set by the Commission's rules on regional aid.

The new Assisted Areas map will be published when the College of Commissioners has approved it.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Oxford Forum

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason reference to the Oxford Forum has been included in the political and economic briefing relating to the USA. [117963]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 6 April 2000]: I regret the administrative error that has led to my hon. Friend receiving an incorrect answer to his earlier question.

The Oxford Forum is a trilateral meeting of parliamentarians and experts from the UK, US and Germany. It was formed as a result of a joint initiative by President Clinton and the right hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major) in 1995. The event has been previously held in Oxford, Berlin, Harvard and Belfast.

Party whips select the hon. Members of the delegation.

The Oxford Forum is included in the bilateral relations paragraph of the US Political and Economic brief as it forms part of the strategy to strengthen relations between parliamentarians.

European Documents

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will deposit a copy of (a) Commission Document, "Building an Inclusive Europe" (6715/00) and (b) the Presidency report, "Strengthening the Common European Security and Defence Policy", discussed at the Lisbon summit, in the Library. [118025]

Mr. Vaz: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security has led a policy responsibility for the areas covered in the Commission Document, "Building an Inclusive Europe" (6715/00). A copy of the document will be placed in the Library once an official version has been received.

I have arranged for a copy of the Presidency Report, "Strengthening the Common European Security and Defence Policy", to be placed in the Library.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes have been made to the implementation of EU financial sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [119401]

Mr. Vaz: EC Regulation 723/2000 amending EC Regulation 1294/1999 concerning a freeze on funds and a ban on investment in relation to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) was adopted by the Council of the EU on 6 April. The Regulation, which enhances the implementation of the existing financial sanctions against the FRY, came into force on 8 April. Among other changes, it clarifies the scope of the freeze of funds by tightening the definition of "the Government of the FRY" and "the Government of the Republic of Serbia".

HEALTH

Prostate Cancer

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of intensity-modulated radiotherapy against prostate cancer. [118328]

Yvette Cooper: Preliminary evidence from the United States of America indicates that intensity-modulated radiotherapy may have a role in the treatment of prostate cancer. However, this treatment is not common practice in the United Kingdom and its effectiveness has not been evaluated.

Papilloma Virus

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of arrangements for the three human papilloma virus pilot tests due to start in the summer. [118695]

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which sites will be used for piloting human papilloma virus testing as part of the National Cervical Cancer Screening Programme. [118703]

Yvette Cooper: The Department is currently establishing an advisory group, which will oversee the commissioning and running of the pilot sites for HPV testing and provide expert advice and support on all aspects of the scope of the project. A limited competition exercise will be held in the summer to select the pilot sites, and it is anticipated they will be chosen by the autumn. Testing will begin when preparatory work at each site is complete.

BCG Vaccine

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress made in identifying an additional supplier for the BCG vaccine. [118603]

Yvette Cooper: The Department has identified other manufacturers of BCG vaccines worldwide and is investigating these possibilities together with experts from the National Institute of Biological Standards and Control, the Medicines Control Agency and National Health Service Supplies. This work is still ongoing due to the complex nature of ensuring the safety and efficacy of any alternative source. Products from different manufacturers vary in their composition. We will need to be assured of the safety and efficacy of these products, that they can satisfy current United Kingdom licensing requirements and also that supply is such that further interruptions to the programme, once reinstated, will not occur. We are not yet in a position to be able to confirm when or if an alternative source will be available.

GM Animal Feed

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure animal feed is labelled to show whether it contains genetically modified organisms. [117730]

Ms Stuart: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that a proposed European Commission Regulation covering novel feed is expected to be presented to Council in the summer. We have been pressing for this as it should contain fair and consistent labelling rules for genetically modified material. In the meantime, the Advisory Committee on Animal Feedingstuffs is considering questions of terminology and thresholds.

Food Labelling

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department is taking to ensure clear labelling of food with regard to country of origin. [117729]

Ms Stuart: Origin labelling rules are harmonised at EU level. We are actively pressing for a review of these rules, and of international guidelines, to improve the amount and clarity of origin information on food labels.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made since 1 January 2000 in labelling all food with the country of origin. [117734]

Ms Stuart: On 1 February my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food issued tough new guidance to industry and enforcement authorities emphasising the need to ensure that country of origin markings on food labels are unambiguous.

Origin labelling rules are harmonised at European Union level. We are actively pressing for a review of these rules, and of international guidelines, to improve the amount and clarity of origin information on food labels.

National Alcohol Strategy

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the full draft of the National Alcohol Strategy will be issued for consultation; and when the strategy will be published. [118374]

Yvette Cooper: The Department plans to launch a consultation paper about a National Strategy to Tackle Alcohol Misuse in England later this year. After a sufficient period for comment the strategy will be published.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 6 March, regarding a constituent (ref: POH(2) 5608/42). [118846]

Mr. Denham: I replied to my hon. Friend on 11 April.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Railways (Shropshire)

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by constituency the railway stations and railway lines in Shropshire which have been (a) closed and (b) opened (i) between 1979 to 1997 and (ii) since May 1997. [118540]

Mr. Hill: This information is not held in the form requested. However, I am aware that Telford Central station was opened in 1985, and that New Hadley station was closed in the same year. A freight only line from Shrewsbury Sutton Bridge to Abbey Foregate was closed in the late 1980s. The Rail Regulator has not given consent to closure of any passenger services or stations in Shropshire since the provisions of the Railway Act in 1993 came into force.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of households that will be taken out of fuel poverty by Government schemes in each of the next 15 years; and what estimate he has made of the cost of such schemes in each of the next 15 years. [118414]

Mr. Meacher: A key programme is the New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme, which with a budget of £260 million over the next two years, is currently expected to take 460,000 households out of fuel poverty. The impact of other policies on the number of fuel poor households is less clear.

We estimate the number of households in fuel poverty is currently about 4.5 million, and that at current rates of the HEES programme the great majority should be removed from fuel poverty within a decade.

Motorways

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many miles of porous asphalt have been laid on motorways in each year since 1995. [118535]

Mr. Hill: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Peter Nutt, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 14 April 2000:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many miles of porous asphalt have been laid on motorways in each year since 1995.

Detailed records are not held centrally by the Highways Agency but we estimate the lengths of porous asphalt laid during these years to have been as follows:

Year	Lengths of porous asphalt laid
1995	1.0 mile, M25 (one carriageway)
1995	0.5 miles, M1 (both carriageways)
1996	1.5 miles, M25 (one carriageway)
1997	2.3 miles, M25 (both plus carriageways), plus 1.5 miles (one carriageway)
1998	7.5 miles, M40 (both carriageways)
1999	0.2 miles, M1 (one carriageway)

Porous asphalt was introduced by the Highways Agency for use on trunk roads in 1993. At that time it was the only option available for providing a quieter road surface but was not suitable for use in all situations. Further development resulted in alternatives including proprietary quiet, thin surfacings, and in 1998, 'whisper' concrete. These two materials offer many of the advantages of porous asphalt with few of its drawbacks, not least its high cost. This has meant that porous asphalt has been little used.

The new quiet surfacings are now being used widely by the Highways Agency both for surfacing new roads and for maintaining existing roads. Their performance is very effective and in use they can often be mistaken for porous asphalt being quiet, and reducing spray in wet weather.

If it would be helpful, John Williams our road surfacings specialist, would be pleased to discuss both porous asphalt and other road surfacings in current use with you. His telephone number is 020 7921 4635.

Road Maintenance (Victoria Embankment)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reason road maintenance work was permitted along the Victoria Embankment on the morning of 6 April; what assessment was made of its impact on (a) road congestion and (b) access for emergency services; what assessment was made of the option of carrying out the work at night; and if he will make a statement. [118650]

Mr. Hill: Westminster City Council is the highway authority for Victoria Embankment. I understand that, on the morning of 6 April, contractors working for Westminster City Council took down a lamp column at the junction of Northumberland Avenue and Victoria Embankment. This was required in connection with Hungerford Bridge works, but had become urgent because the lamp column appeared to be unsafe. The works involved a lorry parked across the junction and the erection of traffic cones in Northumberland Avenue and on the eastbound carriageway of Victoria Embankment.

Works of this type in the carriageway are not usually subjected to formal analysis of their effects on congestion or emergency access unless complete closure of the road is required.

Westminster City Council have advised me that it is their policy to carry out works during the working day to avoid the environmental problems caused by working at night and weekends although planned work is avoided at peak hours on traffic sensitive routes.

Ship Weights

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the deadweight tonnage of (a) UK-owned ships and (b) non-UK-owned ships, strategically and commercially managed in the United Kingdom. [119202]

Mr. Hill: At the end of December 1999, 1,026 trading ships were managed from the United Kingdom. Of these ships, 4.5 million deadweight tonnes were UK-owned and 29.5 million deadweight tonnes non-UK-owned.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many concessionary television licences for persons living in warden-assisted homes have been (a) granted and (b) withdrawn in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [118366]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 10 April 2000]: The following information is provided by the BBC, which has statutory responsibility for the administration of the television licensing system:

Year	Number of accommodation for residential care concessionary licences issued [1,2]
1992–93	635,703
1993–94	655,165
1994–95	677,104
1995–96	641,136
1996–97	650,013
1997–98	651,822
1998–99	645,876
1999–2000	654,191

[1] Qualifying accommodation includes residential and nursing homes, sheltered housing schemes and almshouses.
[2] Records of concessionary television licences issued moved from a wholly manual system to a computerised system in 1996. This change highlighted the inaccuracy of the earlier system and is thought to account for much of the fall between 1994–95 and 1995–96.

A full ten-year record of the number of concessionary licences issued would require manual extraction of information from paper records in the initial years. No records are kept of the number of concessionary licences withdrawn, nor can such information be extracted from existing data, as it is not possible to distinguish between withdrawal of the concession and other reasons for non-renewal.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Special Schools

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made by the Regional Review Group established to consider the issue of therapy input to special schools; and when he expects to receive a report. [118661]

Mr. George Howarth: The Regional Review Group has drawn up an inter-agency agreement for the provision of health and social services to children in schools with special educational needs. It is currently undertaking a number of more detailed reviews of various types of health and social services provision to children with special educational needs, including therapy provision. I understand that the Group will be considering a draft report on this in early May and will also discuss the timing of its referral to the relevant Government Departments.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Land Rover

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Ford Motor Company told him that it was to buy Land Rover from BMW before the official announcement. [118698]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has many contacts with companies including the Ford Motor Company. Issues discussed are often commercially confidential.

BMW/Rover

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will place a copy of the handwritten contemporaneous note taken by officials of his 10 March meeting with Professor Samann in the Library; [118730]

(2) if the note of his 10 March meeting with Professor Samann which was placed in the Library is the only record that was made of that meeting; [118727]

(3) what briefing he received about the details of each of the 27 contacts between his Department and BMW that took place between 1 December 1999 and 31 March 2000; and if he will make available any briefing he received on those contacts; [118723]

(4) when the note of his 10 March meeting with Professor Samann, which was placed in the Library, was prepared; [118709]

(5) to whom the note of his meeting with Professor Samann on 10 March was circulated; [118728]

(6) if he will make public telegrams from (a) UKREP, (b) the Berlin Embassy and (c) HM Consul-General Munich relating to BMW since 23 June 1999; [118720]

(7) what advice he was given by the British Embassy in Berlin between June 1999 and March 2000 in respect of BMW/Rover; [118753]

(8) what briefing was made available to (a) DTI Ministers and (b) other Government departments about the details of any of the 27 contacts between his Department and BMW, details of which he has placed in the Library; [118718]

(9) if he will publish details of all the 27 contacts between his Department and BMW between 1 December 1999 and 31 March 2000; [118722]

(10) if the note from his PPS, dated 22 December 1999, is the only record that was made of his telephone conversation with Professor Milberg of that date. [118714]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: The documents released to the Trade and Industry Committee were made available at the specific request of the Select Committee and I refer to the evidence that I gave to the Select Committee.

It has been the practice of successive Administrations not to disclose information which might undermine the long-established conventions protecting the confidentiality of the internal decision-making process. The Code of Practice on Access to Government Information recognises the need for confidentiality of internal opinion, advice, recommendation and deliberation to ensure that matters can be discussed candidly and frankly within Government.

The Code of Practice also recognises the need to protect a third party's commercial confidences.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) who requested his meeting with Professor Samann on 10 March; [118729]

(2) if the note of his 10 March meeting with Professor Samann, which was placed in the Library, is a full record of the meeting. [118717]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: I refer to my evidence given to the Trade and Industry Committee on 5 April.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make available the internal correspondence between Ministers concerning BMW, Longbridge and Rover since 23 June 1999. [118721]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: These documents contain information that is commercially sensitive.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when he first notified the Prime Minister of the deteriorating situation at Rover; [118725]

(2) when he asked his Department to notify the Prime Minister's staff of the deteriorating situation at Rover. [118726]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: My Department has been in close contact with No. 10 on this issue throughout.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when BMW first indicated to him that it was reconsidering the ownership of Rover, Longbridge. [118751]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: When I spoke to Professor Milberg on 15 March.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the standard practice of his Office in respect of making notes of his official telephone conversations. [118724]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: Telephone calls are monitored and notes are made if the call contained issues of substance.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he took following his meeting on 10 March at which Professor Samann stated that there was a risk of 8,000 job losses. [118719]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: I refer to my evidence to the Trade and Industry Committee on 5 April.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what contact (a) he and (b) his officials had with Commissioner Monti between 23 June and 11 December 1999 concerning Rover's application for regional selective assistance. [118710]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: I had a number of discussions with Commissioner Monti in this period covering a range of issues including the application for aid in support of the R30.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) for what reason he telephoned Professor Milberg on 11 December 1999; [118711]

(2) for what reason no record of his conversation with Professor Milberg on 11 December 1999 was prepared; [118715]

(3) what Professor Milberg said concerning the future of Rover during his telephone conversation on 11 December 1999. [118716]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: I telephoned Professor Milberg at his home on the afternoon of Saturday 11 December. I made the call from my own home. In my evidence to the Select Committee on 15 February, I gave details of the conversation.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what discussions took place between Professor Milberg and the BMW board in January following his conversation of 22 December 1999 with Professor Milberg; [118713]

(2) what steps he took to establish if discussions had taken place between Professor Milberg and his board in January following his conversation of 22 December 1999. [118712]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: My Department monitored the situation to see if a meeting of the BMW Supervisory Board had been called. No such meeting was called in either January or February. After our telephone conversation on 22 December 1999 the first meeting of the BMW Supervisory Board was on 16 March 2000.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the nature of his contacts with BMW between 22 December 1999 and 10 February 2000; [118708]

(2) what contact with BMW took place between 22 December 1999 and 10 February 2000 involving (a) his Department's Ministers or officials, (b) UKREP Brussels, (c) the British Embassy Berlin and (d) HM Consul-General Munich; [118706]

(3) for what reason there is no record of his contact points with BMW between 22 December 1999 and 10 February 2000. [118707]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: My officials were in regular contact in relation to the 88(2) investigation into the aid for the R30 project during this period. They would have informed me if it had been advisable for me to contact BMW directly.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when Professor Milberg asked him to issue the statement which was distributed to the Press on the afternoon of 30 March; [118761]

(2) for what reason he issued a statement from Professor Milberg to the Press on 30 March; [118762]

(3) when he was informed that the text of the statement from Professor Milberg which he issued to the Press on 30 March was not approved by BMW; and what steps he took to inform those present at the press briefing of the official BMW Press Release of the same date. [118760]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to my supplementary evidence to the Select Committee.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the first three tranches of regional selective assistance for BMW/Rover were due to be paid under the agreement with BMW announced in June 1999. [118269]

Mr. Byers: I refer to the evidence I gave to the Trade and Industry Committee on 5 April.

Monitoring the Economy

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the report of the Panel on Monitoring the Economy following the meeting of the panel at the end of January. [118697]

Mr. Byers: Members of the Panel contribute their views frankly and in confidence to help the Government with their work. Publication of a report prepared on the same basis would be a breach of faith.

New Motor Cars

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the embargoed press release on the supply of new motor cars complied with paragraph 9.1 of his Department's Guidance on how monopoly reports are published. [119213]

Mr. Byers: No embargoed press releases were issued to the media concerning the Competition Commission report on New Cars (Cm 4660).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey (Football Deaths)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to investigate the circumstances surrounding the killing of Christopher Loftus and Kevin Speight in Istanbul on 5 April; if he will publish the report of these investigations as soon as possible; and if he will make a statement. [119046]

Mr. Hain: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not have any jurisdiction to investigate these crimes. The investigation into the deaths of Christopher Loftus and Kevin Speight is a matter for the Turkish authorities. We have, however, made it very clear to the Turkish authorities the importance we attach to bringing the killers to justice. The Chief of Police in Istanbul called on the British Consul-General on 8 April to update him on the investigation. He has undertaken to continue to update our consular staff on a regular basis. Consular staff in London will keep the families informed of developments.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hilda Murrell

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 10 April 2000, Official Report, column 64W, whether the evidence in the case of Hilda Murrell currently with West Mercia Police has been referred to the DNA Centre in Birmingham for the purpose of matching tissue; and if he will make a statement. [119045]

Mr. Straw: I understand from the West Mercia Constabulary that a number of forensic exhibits from the Hilda Murrell case are currently with the Forensic Science Service (FSS) laboratory in Birmingham for review to identify any which might give a positive result with the new DNA techniques (Second Generation Multiplex plus and Low Copy Number systems), which have only recently become available. Discussions involving the FSS Major Crime Specialist Adviser on the strategic way ahead for this review are in progress. No DNA sequences were recovered from an earlier forensic review carried out in 1992.

Oakington Reception Centre

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current unit cost per week of keeping a detainee at Oakington; what will be the weekly unit cost per detainee when Oakington is operating at full capacity; and if he will make a statement. [119142]

Mrs. Roche: The current direct unit cost per week of an available place at the Oakington Reception Centre comes to about £1,880. This will reduce to about £527 per week when Oakington is operating at full capacity.

DEFENCE

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with the two studies concerning defence fissile material production and a national capability for arms control verification referred to in Supporting Essay Five of the Strategic Defence Review; and if he will make a statement. [119575]

Mr. Hoon: The decision to produce by this spring an initial report of defence fissile material production since the commencement of the UK's nuclear programme in the 1940s was both ambitious and challenging. There remains much work to be done. However, I am pleased to announce that our reports on the production of plutonium for the Defence programme and arms control verification have now been completed within the timescale set out in the Strategic Defence Review. Copies of the reports, and their associated summary capping papers, will be placed in the Library of the House and published on the MOD website. I also intend to have the summary capping papers circulated at the forthcoming Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty Review Conference in New York, and at the Conference of Disarmament in Geneva, as a contribution to wider consideration of these complex issues. Their publication demonstrates our continuing determination to work constructively towards our goal of the global elimination of nuclear weapons, and our commitment to openness in government.

Airborne Navigation and Attack System

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the France-UK joint co-operation on the Joint Airborne Navigation and Attack electro-optical targeting system; and if he make a statement. [117849]

Mr. Hoon: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 14 April 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about what representations he has received on the France-UK joint co-operation on the Joint Airborne Navigation and Attack electro-optical targeting system. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

I can confirm that, following a competitive invitation to tender for the Anglo-French JOANNA programme, only one tender response was received, a joint response from BAE SYSTEMS and Thomson-CSF. We are considering the tender and hope to be in a position to make a decision in the next few months.

Army Dismissal Policy

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the review of the decision of the Army not to dismiss the soldiers associated with the death of Mr. Peter McBride in 1992; [118882]

(2) what, in ruling whether a soldier should be dismissed from the Army after having served a custodial sentence, is the definition of exceptional circumstances which would justify the dismissal being waived; and if he will make a statement; [118881]

(3) if it is the practice that soldiers convicted of serious charges relating to murder and who (a) are facing or (b) have served custodial sentences are dismissed from the Army; and if he will make a statement. [118880]

Mr. Hoon: The decision of the Army Board to retain Guardsmen Fisher and Wright was recently subjected to judicial review. The Judgment of Mr. Justice Kerr quashed the earlier decision of the Army Board. The Army Board is now obliged to consider afresh the case of the two Guardsmen. This will be a completely fresh consideration and the Board members who made the previous decision will not be involved this time. In considering the case the Board will, of course, take the fullest account of all the circumstances including the content of the Judgment.

Queen's Regulations (9.404) state that a soldier is to be discharged if he has been sentenced by a civil court (or by court-martial) to imprisonment or to detention or to any other form of custodial sentence.

Queen's Regulations (9.404) also state that if in the opinion of the Commanding Officer there are exceptional reasons that make the retention of the solider desirable, the case is submitted with valid and explicit reasons through the Chain of Command for a decision. There are no specific exceptional reasons laid down: Commanding Officers make their recommendations solely on the circumstances of each individual case.

Asymmetric Warfare

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the United Kingdom will help to prepare NATO forces for asymmetric warfare; and if he will make a statement. [117847]

Mr. Spellar: NATO's updated Strategic Concept, launched at the Washington Summit in April 1999, recognises, at paragraph 24, that > Alliance security interests can be affected by other risks of a wider nature, including acts of terrorism, sabotage and organised crime, and by the disruption of the flow of vital resources.

NATO's defence planning processes are designed to adapt Alliance forces to address these changing risks. In addition, much of the follow-on work from last year's Summit, including the Defence Capabilities Initiative (DCI), NATO's Force Structure Review (FSR), and the Weapons of Mass Destruction Initiative (WMDI), will help provide the capabilities that national forces assigned to NATO require if the Alliance is to meet a wide range of threats. The UK is making an important contribution to each of these initiatives.

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117815]

Mr. Spellar: On 31 March 1995, the Ministry of Defence employed 99 Service lawyers and had 15 lawyers on loan from the Treasury Solicitor's Department. Two of the latter were employed abroad. On 31 March 2000, the corresponding numbers were 159 Service lawyers and 23 Treasury Solicitor's Department lawyers on loan, with three of the latter employed abroad. Throughout this period, my Department also used the services of other branches of the Treasury Solicitor's Department, the Crown Solicitor in Northern Ireland, the Department's solicitors in Scotland, and lawyers from private firms when their expertise could not be obtained elsewhere.

Ottawa Convention

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the use of (a) airfield runway denial weapons incorporating anti-personnel devices and (b) anti-tank land mines incorporating anti-personnel devices, with special reference to the Ottawa Convention on anti-personnel mines. [118759]

Mr. Hoon: In accordance with our obligations under the Ottawa Convention and the Landmines Act 1998, the Government's policy is not to use any weapon incorporating anti-personnel mines as defined in the Ottawa Convention. This obligation extends to airfield runway denial weapons and anti-tank land mines, and the UK does not retain stocks of any such weapons which contravene the Ottawa Convention.

HEALTH

Social Services (Lancashire)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what dates during the next 12 months the Social Services Inspectorate, Northern Region, expects to receive reports from Lancashire County Council about progress on the implementation of its Action Plan to improve the operations of its social services. [118918]

Ms Stuart: It is expected that reports will be received at least quarterly and discussions are taking place between Social Services Inspectorate and Northern Social Care Region and Lancashire Social Services about precise dates. I anticipate the first report will be received early in June.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the action plan he has received from Lancashire County Council about its proposals to respond to the findings of the Social Services Inspectorate's report on its running of the county's social services. [118919]

Ms Stuart: It is not for the Department to publish the action plan. It is the responsibility of Lancashire County Council and the right hon. Member may wish to make his request to the Director of Social Services.

NHS Specialised Services

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which (a) medical and (b) other organisations have been consulted about the commissioning of specialised services in the NHS. [119115]

Ms Stuart: Widespread consultation took place prior to the introduction of the new commissioning arrangements for specialised services in April 1999, with views being sought from the medical bodies, the Patients Forum, community health councils, voluntary sector organisations and local authorities. Subsequently consultation takes place through the Regional Specialised Commissioning Groups.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about the funding of specialised services in the NHS. [119114]

Ms Stuart: With regard to representations received on the subject of funding of specialised services, in the last three months my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has dealt with 21 letters, of which 18 letters were from Members of Parliament, and has met representatives from the Oxford Radcliffe Hospitals NHS Trust.

Primary Health Care Groups (Resources)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the allocation of additional resources to each primary health care group as a result of the recent budget announcements by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. [119197]

Ms Stuart: On 28 March my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced details of extra allocations to health authorities for 2000–01. This additional £660 million has brought health authority average increases to 8.9 per cent. in cash terms (6.2 per cent. in real terms).

Health authorities have been directed to increase the budgets/allocations of their primary care groups/trusts by a pro rata share of the entire sum allocated.

A breakdown of the additional allocation to each primary care group/trust is not yet available centrally.

Cannabis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the clinical trials are to begin on cannabis in medicinal form; and if he will make a statement. [118533]

Ms Stuart: The Medicines Control Agency (MCA) has approved an application to conduct a clinical trial with a cannabis-based medicine. The timing of the trial is a matter for the applicant. The purpose of the trial that has been approved is to demonstrate safety and efficacy in a limited number of subjects, and to establish the necessary dosage regimen and delivery mechanisms to provide the most effective relief to sufferers of multiple sclerosis and other neurological disorders. Evidence from clinical trials of safety, quality and efficacy of a medicine is part of the information that is assessed by the MCA in coming to a decision about whether a product should be licensed for marketing in the United Kingdom. If a marketing authorisation were to be issued by the MCA, we would seek to modify the current Misuse of Drugs Act controls on the use of cannabis.

TREASURY

Windfall Tax

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of money raised through the Windfall Tax which has been raised from companies in Wales; and how much of the money raised from the Windfall Tax has been spent in Wales. [118057]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The liability of individual companies under the Windfall Tax is a confidential matter between them and the tax authorities.

Information on the allocation of the Windfall Tax receipts between the different programmes, as currently estimated, is set out in Table 4.1 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report, 2000. Many Windfall Tax funded programmes are demand-led, with expenditure allocated by participant and not by country, region or any other geographical area. For this reason it is not possible to provide a reliable and robust estimate of the amount which has been spent in Wales, so to the extent that relevant programmes are demand led it will tend to reflect the proportion of clients participating.

Budget Calculations

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were (a) the September forecast inflation figure and (b) the September actual inflation figure in each of the past five years. [118749]

Mr. Timms: The following table sets out the RPI inflation rate in September in each of the previous five years and the forecast of RPI inflation for that month in the previous Budget.

	Forecast	Outturn
1995	3	3.9
1996	2.25	2.1
1997	3.0	3.6
1998	3.2	3.2
1999	1.3	1.1

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Homophobia

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the schools which have received the document entitled, "Beyond a Phase: A Practical Guide to Challenging Homophobia in Schools", from Avon Health Authority. [117717]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 5 April 2000]: Under the 1994 Act, this is a matter for individual governing bodies. However, the new sex and relationship guidance on which consultation is taking place makes clear to schools the use of appropriate materials in the classroom. It says:

> Materials used in schools must be in accordance with the PSHE framework and the law. Inappropriate images should not be used nor should explicit material not directly related to explanation. Governors and headteachers should discuss with parents and take on board concerns raised both on materials which are offered to schools and sensitive material to be used in the classroom.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health will be issuing guidance to Health authorities on any material they produce for use in schools.

School Attendance (Dartford)

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact the Government's social exclusion policies are having on school attendance in Dartford. [118822]

Jacqui Smith: Our Social Inclusion: Pupil Support grant is providing nearly £500 million over three years to support Local Education Authorities and schools to introduce measures for tackling truancy and school exclusion. For 2000–01, Kent Local Education Authority, which has responsibility for schools in Dartford, will receive just over £3 million out of the grant to support projects.

During 1998–99 attendance levels in Kent Local Education Authority have risen both at primary and secondary school level by 0.4 per cent. and 0.1 per cent. respectively.

Separate figures for schools in Dartford can be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Ministerial Meetings (Requests)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many requests for meetings with deputations of hon. Members and groups from their constituencies his Department has received in each year since 1997, on issues relating to school admissions policy and organisation; how many have (a) he and (b) other Ministers in his Department (i) seen and (ii) refused to see; and if he will make a statement. [118925]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not available in the form requested. Each year the Department receives many requests for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and other Ministers to meet delegations of hon. Members about many different issues. No comprehensive record of such requests by subject/category is maintained.

Dance Schools

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to support individual children who wish to attend specialist dance schools where provision is not available locally. [119200]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Music and Ballet Scheme provides over 700 Government-aided places for school-age pupils at three independent specialist ballet schools and four independent specialist music schools in England. The great majority of those places are boarding places to enable exceptionally talented children from any part of the country to benefit from the best possible training on offer alongside a broad and balanced general education. We have recently reviewed the Scheme and intend to continue it with some improvements.

In addition, the Dance and Drama Awards provide for 820 talented students aged over 16 to join high quality vocational dance and drama training courses at nearly 30 specialist schools and colleges each year. Funding is available to support students who have to live away from home.

Standard Spending Assessment

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the cost of raising the SSA per pupil to at least the level of (a) the 50 LEA, (b) the 60 LEA and (c) the 70 LEA from the bottom in the year 2000–01. [119404]

Ms Estelle Morris: The estimated costs would be: (a) £282 million; (b) £346 million; and (c) £437 million.

LEA Reserves

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the amount of surplus reserves held by each LEA. [119194]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows, for each local education authority in England, the level of reserves held at 31 March 1999, the latest information available centrally. Reserves are held for the purposes of the authority as a whole and are not specific to education.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Fraud

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the amounts paid to each local authority in the last financial year under (a) the weekly benefit savings scheme and (b) other schemes, in reward to local authorities for action on housing benefit fraud. [118391]

Angela Eagle: The last full financial year for which we have returns for the weekly benefit savings scheme and the challenge fund scheme, which ran for three years and encouraged councils to bid for funding for innovative anti-fraud initiatives, is 1998–99. I have placed a copy of these returns in the Library.

Age Allowance

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the value was of the age allowance for pensioners in each year from its introduction in 1971, to the present day in relation to (a) the index of retail prices and (b) the index of average earnings. [119183]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what change his Department has made since May 1997 in the provision it makes for those suffering from asbestos-related diseases. [119004]

Mr. Bayley: No changes have been made to the Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit scheme with regard to asbestos-related diseases specifically since May 1997.

In April 1997 considerable changes were made to these provisions following advice and recommendations from the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council set out in their report "Asbestos Related Diseases" (Cm 3467). These changes were beneficial to claimants and introduced wide occupational coverage in respect of mesothelioma and removed the 90 day waiting period that operates for other diseases and accidents within this benefit scheme. Changes were also made with regard to diffuse pleural thickening, ensuring that benefit could be paid if the thickening affected one lung only, where previously both lungs had to be affected.

Since May 1997 the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council, whose role is to provide expert independent advice, has continued to carefully monitor developments in this field as it does with regard to all occupational diseases.

Benefits Uprating

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what administrative obstacles exist to basing the annual uprating of benefits on the retail prices index for the previous December. [117590]

Mr. Bayley: Using the RPI for the previous December, which would not be published until mid-January, would seriously disrupt the uprating process. Current arrangement, which base the uprating on September's RPI, published in mid-October, allow for the preparation of the uprating schedule and for the uprating review itself to be completed by the end of November. At the end of November a computer scan is run to identify and uprate pension cases. The scan is required at this time to ensure that order books (which cover 20 weeks) containing foils that pass the uprating date are issued with the correct amounts. Processes for uprating other Social Security benefits are similar.

In-patients

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons interrupted spells as a hospital in-patient are linked for the purpose of assessing reductions in the rates of benefit which are payable. [118912]

Mr. Bayley: Rules about the payment of benefits in NHS hospitals have been part of the Social Security system for over 50 years. Where the NHS provides free maintenance and care in hospital, benefits for the same purpose are not paid in full indefinitely.

The rule which links together interrupted spells as a hospital in-patient is based on the premise that people whose stay in hospital follows this pattern will, in general, have some home savings during the period that they are being maintained and cared for free of charge in hospital. They are therefore treated in the same way as people whose stay in hospital is continuous. For periods when the person is at home, full benefit is restored.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the value was of the £10 Christmas bonus in each year from its introduction in 1972, to the present day in relation to (a) the index of retail prices and (b) the index of average earnings. [119047]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Lone Parents

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many personal advisers work for the personal adviser section of the New Deal for Lone Parents; and what the average case load is in each (a) constituency, (b) local authority area and (c) county. [118610]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Personal advisers are not allocated to specific constituencies, local authorities or counties. Such information as is available is in the table.

Deaf People

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases children or young people who are moderately or profoundly deaf have been refused Disability Living Allowance and later granted the benefit on appeal to the Independent Tribunal Service in each of the last five years; and what percentage of the total such decisions represent. [118564]

Angela Eagle: Information about the disabilities of people who make unsuccessful claims for Disability Living Allowance is not available. Some information on children and young people with deafness who are awarded benefit on appeal is obtained from sampling, but the numbers are too small to provide reliable estimates.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 269W, what is the reason for the difference between the cited average saving of £13,000 per year per local authority from the non-redirection of benefit post, and the figures given by his Department in the supplementary memorandum submitted to the Committee of Public Accounts, Session 1998–99, HC643-i, Appendix 2. [118322]

Angela Eagle: The figures quoted in the supplementary memorandum to the Committee for Public Accounts was based on a pilot of the Royal Mail "do not redirect" scheme which was carried out over a four week period in 1997 in two local authorities. Benefit savings directly attributable to "do not redirect" for around £200,000 were recorded during the pilot. However, our latest estimate which is based on a telephone survey of a much larger sample of local authorities and involving a number of assumptions is that the average local authority will achieve savings of around £13,000 per year by operating this initiative.

The difference in savings can be attributed to a number of factors including:

publicity about the scheme having a deterrent effect on potential fraudsters;

the introduction of a number of other anti-fraud initiatives between the pilot and full introduction of the scheme in February 1999 identifying, preventing and deterring fraud which would otherwise have been identified by "do not redirect"; and the possibility that the pilot which was carried out over a short period of time and involved only two local authorities may have identified an unrepresentative number of fraudulent cases which has not been reflected in live running by a much larger group of authorities.

We would expect the number of fraudulent cases identified and therefore the amount of savings achieved as a direct result of this initiative to continue to reduce as publicity increases and its deterrent effect becomes stronger.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the local authorities that are not using the Royal Mail 'do not redirect' service to counter housing benefit fraud. [118392]

Angela Eagle: The Royal Mail have advised that as at 3 April, the 272 local authorities listed had implemented in full the Royal Mail 'do not redirect' service. Of the remaining 137 authorities, a number are preparing to implement the service and some are operating their own local arrangements. It would be inaccurate therefore to describe such authorities as not operation 'do not redirect'.

Disabled People

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much each of the innovation schemes established as part of the New Deal for the Disabled (a) has cost to date, (b) is currently costing on a monthly basis and (c) is expected to cost in each of the next 12 months. [118606]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

We are unable to provide information on a monthly basis for each scheme, as this information is commercially confidential. However, the overall amount spent up to February is £2,825,058.17.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many innovative schemes established as part of the New Deal for the Disabled there are in (a) each constituency, (b) each local authority and (c) each county. [118598]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows; 24 innovative schemes are part of the New Deal for Disabled People, covering the following areas:

Scheme	Area
Thurso	North Scotland (Highland)
WECIL	Bristol, Bath and North East Somerset, South Gloucestershire, North Somerset Leonard Cheshire Foundation-National
Centrica	North West England

Prince's Trust	Hampshire, Surrey and Isle of Wight
Wigan and Leigh	Wigan
Shaw Trust	South Wales
S.O.L.O.T.E.C.	Bexley, Bromley, Greenwich, Lewisham and Croydon

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase the number of innovative schemes run as part of the New Deal for the Disabled. [118597]

Angela Eagle: Since July 1997, we have announced funding for 24 Innovative Schemes.

Over the coming months we will develop proposals, in partnership with the Department of Education and Employment, for extending the New Deal for Disabled People. We intend to consult widely as we do so and to announce plans in the summer.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when he intends to up-rate the capital limits for the disabled; [118612]

(2) for how many years the capital limits of pensioners and the disabled have been the same; and when they were last different; [118614]

(3) what are the current capital limits for (a) pensioners, (b) the disabled and (c) other persons claiming social security payments. [118613]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Capital limits for Social Security benefits

Benefit	Lower capital limit	Upper capital limit
Council Tax Benefit and Housing Benefit	3,000	16,000
Council Tax Benefit (RC/NH[1])	10,000	16,000
Income Support (for all groups including pensioners and disabled people)	3,000	8,000
Income Support (RC/NH) (for all groups including pensioners and disabled people)	10,000	16,000
Jobseekers Allowance	3,000	8,000
Jobseekers Allowance (RC/NH)	10,000	16,000

[1] RC/NH—In residential care or nursing home.

Notes:

1. The current capital rules for the income related benefits were introduced in 1988. The lower and upper limits have applied to the same client groups since introduction, apart from an increase in limits in respect of people living in Residential Care and Nursing Homes which was introduced in April 1996.
2. The capital limits are kept under regular review but are not increased annually. There are no immediate plans to increase capital limits for disabled people.

State Pension

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reason the April state pension increase is determined by reference to the preceding September's RPI; and if he will list the RPI rates for (a) September and (b) April in each year since September 1994. [118768]

Mr. Rooker: September's RPI has been used as a base for uprating since April 1987. Using the September index, which is published in the middle of October, allows time for the preparation of the uprating schedule and the review process before operational implementation begins at the end of November with a computer sweep of the Retirement Pension caseload. The operational timetable is designed so that those renewal order books which cover pre and post April periods can be issued with the correct rates of benefit. Order books, which generally cover a period of 20 weeks, start to be issued with the new rates of benefit in mid-December.

The published RPI for September and April since September 1994

Year	Percentage
September
1994	2.2
1995	3.9
1996	2.1
1997	3.6
1998	3.2
April
1995	3.3
1996	2.4
1997	2.4
1998	4.0
1999	1.6

Note:

The RPI for September 1999 was 1.1 per cent.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Local Authority Newspapers

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what monitoring his Department undertakes of the content of local authority newspapers; and if he will make a statement. [118782]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department does not monitor the content of local authority newspapers.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy that newspapers published by local authorities should be subject to the complaints procedure of the Press Complaints Commission; and if he will make a statement. [118781]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Press Complaints Commission is part of a self-regulatory regime for the newspaper industry. All local authority publicity, including newspapers published by local authorities, is subject to the statutory regulatory regime provided by the Local Government Act 1986 and the Code of Recommended Practice on Local Authority Publicity issued by the Secretary of State thereunder.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy not to grant permission for the siting of telecommunication masts in residential areas until the Independent Expert Group on mobile phones has reported; and if he will make a statement. [119185]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones, set up at the instigation of the Government and chaired by Sir William Stewart FRS FRSE, is currently considering the possible health effects of the use of mobile phones, base stations and transmitters and is conducting a comprehensive assessment of existing research. The Group is expected to finalise its report shortly. The Government will consider the Group's recommendations and issue a response.

Planning (Flood Alleviation)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue planning policy guidelines to planning authorities indicating how they should handle planning applications for development in areas known to be at risk of flooding but in which the necessary flood alleviation works have not been undertaken. [119474]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning announced on 13 April 2000, Official Report, columns 249–50W, the publication of a consultation draft of a new Planning Policy Guidance Note 25, "Development and flood risk". This sets out all the considerations to which planning authorities should have regard when handling applications for development in flood risk areas. Copies are available in the Library.

We will consider the responses to this consultation with a view to issuing the new PPG in its final form later this year.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers planning authorities have to (a) defer and (b) reject planning applications for development in areas known to be at risk of flooding pending the completion of flood alleviation works. [119473]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Local planning authorities have powers under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to impose conditions on a grant of planning permission requiring the carrying out of necessary flood alleviation works as part of a development where such works would form part of the development. Where the necessary flood alleviation works would be required elsewhere than the development site, local planning authorities may impose a condition requiring that the development should not proceed until those works have been carried out, whether by the developer or by any other body. In addition, a developer and local planning authority may enter into an agreement under section 106 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to ensure that the necessary works are carried out as part of the development.

Flooding issues are important considerations in the determination of applications for development in areas known to be at risk of flooding. Local planning authorities have powers under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to refuse applications where that risk outweighs other material considerations in the absence of flood alleviation works. Where such works are planned, local planning authorities may refuse an application for development on the grounds of prematurity pending the completion of such works.

Second Homes (Council Tax)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by what mechanism and to what value his Department compensates for loss of council tax income to local authorities resulting from the 50 per cent. discount on second homes. [119181]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 14 April 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 15 February 2000, Official Report, column 469W.

Online Services

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the services which (a) his Department and (b) the executive agencies responsible to his Department (i) provide on-line and (ii) expect to be deliverable on-line by 2002. [119443]

Ms Beverley Hughes: So that the Cabinet Office can publish the spring 2000 report monitoring progress towards delivery of all Government services electronically by 2005 we are currently collecting data which will include our progress on delivering 25 per cent. of Government services electronically by 2002. I do not want to pre-empt that report but I can say that we currently provide a range of services electronically that include:

Regeneration Programmes

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans his Department has for merging the New Deal for Communities into the Government's regeneration scheme; [119027]

(2) what plans he has to fund the Single Regeneration Budget beyond Round 7. [119029]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 14 April 2000]: The level of funding for regeneration programmes beyond March 2002 and the respective future role for each programme, including the Single Regeneration Budget and New Deal for Communities, is being considered in the current Spending Review. The outcome of the Review and the Government's new expenditure plans for the period to March 2004 should be announced in July.

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money from the Single Regeneration Budget 5 Programme, "Gateways to Community Success", (a) has been and (b) is due to be, provided to fund skills development and training in the Dartford area. [118843]

Ms Beverley Hughes: "Gateways to Community Success" was approved last year under the Single Regeneration Budget 5 Programme. The scheme aims to develop the capacity of organisations to equip local residents with personal and vocational skills relevant to the needs of the local labour market. Total SRB funding of £4.3 million will be made available to the scheme over a seven year period from 1999 to 2006. In the first year, £200,000 (mainly for set-up costs) was provided by the South East England Development Agency (SEEDA), which is now responsible for Government SRB fundings.

Most of the specific projects supported under this scheme will benefit residents across the whole of the Thames Gateway area in North Kent. It is difficult therefore to break down how much funding will be targeted specifically at Dartford. However, one project under this scheme (Making Connections) is aimed at residents in and around the Temple Hill area of Dartford. Within the overall scheme, this specific project will receive total SRB funding of £809,000. In the first year, £30,000 (again mainly for set-up costs) was provided by SEEDA.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors determine the budget allocation formula for regional development agencies. [119028]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 14 April 2000]: The allocation methods vary for the RDAs eight main programmes and for their administration. Many factors are taken into account. These include: levels of deprivation; existing legal commitments; opportunities; value for money; Structural Fund responsibilities; regional population totals; and likely receipt income. There are also some allocations for common costs and account is taken of the RDAs' corporate plans and of other relevant information supplied.

Local Government Bill

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library the opinion on which he based his decision that he was unable to make a statement, under the provisions of section 19 of the Human Rights Act 1998, that the provisions of the Local Government Bill [Lords] are human rights compliant. [119160]

Ms Armstrong [holding answer 14 April 2000]: The Government do not normally publish their legal advice. However, I can clarify that there are doubts as to whether section 2A of the Local Government Act 1986 is compatible with Article 10 (freedom of expression) of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR), and with Article 14 (freedom from discrimination) when read with Article 8 (respect for private and family life) and Article 10.

The Bill on introduction to the Lords was, in our opinion, compatible with the ECHR. However, clause 91 of the Local Government Bill amends, and thereby reaffirms, the provisions of section 2A. By extension, this amendment casts doubt on whether the Bill is now compatible with the ECHR. On this basis, the Secretary of State made a statement under section 19(1)(b) of the Human Rights Act 1998.

The Government have already said that they intend to remove clause 91 of the Bill and, in its place, provide for the repeal of section 2A of the 1986 Act. In our view, the Bill will then be compatible with the ECHR.

Rail Franchises

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when a rail franchise passes to the successful company in the event of an existing train operating company failing to secure the renewal of its franchise; and what extra monitoring of service standards will be put in place during the transitional period. [119483]

Mr. Hill: The shadow Strategic Rail Authority will agree a date with interested parties. Normal monitoring standards that are contained within the terms of the franchise agreements will apply.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much his Department spent directly or indirectly on asylum seekers in (a) 1995, (b) 1996, (c) 1997, (d) 1998 and (e) 1999; and what estimate has been made of expenditure in the year 2000. [119484]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Home Office will be responding to this Question on behalf of Government as a whole, using information that we have provided to them.

Cycling (Mileage Rate)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide funding for local councils to pay a mileage rate on cycle use by their employees. [119337]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Government do not provide funding specifically for this purpose. It is for individual local authorities to decide whether to pay cycling mileage allowances to their employees, and to meet the cost from their general budgets. We would certainly encourage all councils and other employers to promote the use of cycles; mileage allowances are one way of doing this. The Government have already increased the taxable allowance on business travel by bicycle to 12p per mile.

If cycles are used on official journeys by employees instead of their cars, councils stand to make a considerable saving on mileage payments.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his Department's energy efficiency performance target, expressed as a percentage change in comparison with 1990–91, for each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [118991]

Janet Anderson: The Department's target is to reduce energy consumption by 8 per cent. from a base year of 1994–95 to 1999–2000 and 1 per cent. per annum thereafter. This later base year reflects the fact that the Department was not created until 1993.

My Department is investigating further measures to reduce energy but opportunities are limited as we already occupy energy efficient buildings which are air conditioned and have intensive IT usage.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what has been the percentage change compared with 1990–91 in his Department's energy efficiency in each year since 1990–91; and if he will make a statement. [118990]

Janet Anderson: The percentage change compared with the base year of 1994–95 is as follows:

Year	Percentage change
1995–96	0
1996–97	3
1997–98	7
1998–99	–7

These are provisional data as recording errors mean that the consumption figures have been recalculated back to the base year. The latest data have still to be confirmed by DETR.

My Department is investigating further measures to reduce energy but opportunities are limited as we already occupy energy efficient buildings which are air conditioned and have intensive IT usage.

Museums (North-west)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what funds museums in the north-west of England will receive from the amounts which his Department has allocated to cut museum entry fees; and which museums will receive the money. [119101]

Mr. Alan Howarth: In 1999–2000 to enable free admission for children at the two museums funded by my Department in the north-west which are affected, the National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside (NMGM) received £719,000 and the Museum of Science and Industry in Manchester (MSIM) £188,000. In 2000–01, to enable free admission for children and people over 60, NMGM has been allocated £188,000. The allocation of funds to cut museum entry fees at the museums and galleries funded by my Department in 2001–02 is still under consideration and no detailed figures are available yet. An announcement will be made in due course.

SIMA TV

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what monitoring the Independent Television Commission carries out of programmes on SIMA TV; if SIMA TV broadcasts the statements of Mojahedin Khalq Organisation of Iran and the National Council of Resistances of Iran; when SIMA TV was last fined by the ITC; and if he will make a statement about the future licensing of SIMA TV. [118942]

Janet Anderson: Monitoring is regularly undertaken by the ITC on the broadcasts of all its licence holders. For broadcasters, like SIMA, who have breached the ITC's Programme Codes, this monitoring would be more intense.

Broadcasting statements by groups such as Mojahedin Khalq Organisation or the National Council of Resistances of Iran are not in themselves a problem, provided they carry no incitement to crime, and that they form part of a wider range of views. SIMA was fined £20,000 in November 1999 for not adhering to these points. SIMA may retain its licence as long as it complies with the ITC's Programmes and other Codes.

Turf Football Pitches

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will take action to ensure that there is public access to artificial turf pitches for football in each parliamentary constituency; and if he will make a statement. [118956]

Kate Hoey: There are 577 sites in England providing full size, synthetic turf pitches for community or club use. A further 12 sites have, in principle, been awarded funding from the Lottery Sports Fund. Sport England will shortly be carrying out a detailed analysis of the provision of synthetic turf pitches. Any gaps in existing provision will be assessed on the basis of the size of the population served, rather than by parliamentary constituency. The adequacy of the provision of pitches in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is assessed in the same way.

Canoeing

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action he is taking to (a) encourage increased public participation in canoeing and (b) assist Britain's elite canoeists to prepare for the Olympic Games. [118957]

Kate Hoey: The Sports Councils, through which public funding for sport is channelled, are providing a total of £5.5 million to encourage participation in canoeing and to assist elite canoeists. Sport England has made 31 awards worth £4,071,474 from the Lottery Sports Fund to canoeing projects. It is also providing £220,000 in 2000–01 towards the English development programme of the British Canoe Union (BCU). This will help fund: a network of development officers whose key objective is to generate greater youth participation in the sport; the development of a network of Access Officers whose role will be to open up additional waterways for canoeing; and the delivery of the BCU's equity programme for England which targets the recruitment of more disabled and women participants into the sport. For the period April 2000—March 2001 the BCU will receive from UK Sport World Class Performance Programme Lottery funding of £1,221,471, which includes support for British Canoeists preparing fro the Olympic Games.

I will be meeting my hon. Friend the Minister for Water and Coastal Policy soon to discuss how to improve provision for water-based recreation, including canoeing. In addition, my officials will be discussing these issues with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Countryside Agency, the Environment Agency and British Waterways.

UK Sports Institute

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 14 March 2000, Official Report, column 155W, on the UK Sports Institute, when he will make a decision on the venue for the London Institute of Sport Network Centre. [119041]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 14 April 2000]: It is hoped that the decision will be taken by the end of June.

European Athletics Championships

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his policy towards the proposed bid by Gateshead to stage the 2006 European Athletics Championships. [119043]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 14 April 2000]: The responsibility for preparing and lodging a bid for a major event rests with the appropriate national governing body, in this case UK Athletics. UK Sport is meeting UK Athletics on 18 May to reassess the athletics major event strategy in light of the International Amateur Athletics Federation's decision to award the UK the 2003 World Indoor Championships and the 2005 World Championships. The Gateshead bid is one of the items to be discussed.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when he plans to submit a new map for regional selective assistance to the European Commission; [118087]

(2) what changes he plans to make to the regional selective assistance map. [118089]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 7 April 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle) on 10 April 2000, Official Report, columns 38–39W.

UK/USA Meetings

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what meetings have been held between United States Government officials and his Department in (a) the USA and (b) the UK in the last 12 months, indicating the dates and locations of the meetings and the subjects discussed. [118625]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 April 2000]: There have been a large number of meetings between United States Government officials and officials of the Department of Trade and Industry over the last 12 months.

These meetings have been at many levels and have covered a great range of subjects including multilateral and bilateral trade issues.

Competitiveness Development Fund

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review the DTI's provision of Competitiveness Development Fund resources to the North-west. [119026]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 14 April 2000]: For the financial year 2000–01 the DTI is making available £440,000 of funding under the Competitiveness Development Fund (CDF) to the North West Development Agency. This represents an increase in funding of over 75 per cent. compared to the previous financial year.

In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced on 27 March 2000 details of further measures to encourage innovation and enterprise by businesses, including a new £50 million fund for promoting the development of clusters and business incubation in the English regions. The £50 million will go to the Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) in England over this and next financial year (2000–01 and 2001–02). £15 million is to be made available in this financial year split equally between the eight current RDAs and the London Development Agency when it is established. This, together with CDF funds, will provide a combined allocation of over £2 million of funding for each RDA in 2000–01 for work on competitiveness and enterprise.

Motor Industry (State Aid)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the dates of (a) explanatory memoranda presented to Parliament by the Government and (b) agreements in the Council of Ministers concerning the Community Framework for state aid to the motor vehicle industry, OJ No. C279, 1997; and what application has been made within the specification of the Framework to the Commission by Her Majesty's Government in respect of the Longbridge plant. [118922]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Neither an explanatory memorandum or Council agreement exist for the motor vehicles framework. Frameworks are produced by the Commission without reference to the Council, as they (the Commission) have sole competence on the state aid rules and their interpretation.

Conforming to the requirements of the Community Framework for state aid to the motor vehicle industry, HMG formally notified the £152 million Longbridge package to the European Commission 20 August 1999. The clearance process by the Commission was still on-going at the time of BMW's decision to divest itself of elements of the Rover Group (including Longbridge).

New Deal (Job Creation)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs the New Deal has created; and at what cost. [117328]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

The New Deal is not a job creation programme. The strong economy means that 800,000 people are in work compared with May 1997. 191,600 young people who had faced unemployment of at least six months have been helped by the New Deal move from benefits to work.

Pension and Benefit Payment Methods

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if pensioners in receipt of state pension paid via automated credit transfer will be protected from (a) bank charges and (b) withdrawal charges if they choose to draw their pensions in cash from a post office from 2003. [119419]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the right hon. Member to the written answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Benn), and the hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice) on 7 March 2000, Official Report, columns 613–14W.

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what methods of cash payment benefits he is considering following the introduction of automated credit transfer in post offices and against what criteria they will be evaluated. [119204]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

We have made it clear that people will still be able to collect their cash from post offices if they wish to do so, both before and after the move to ACT in 2003.

We are currently working with the banks and the Post Office on the detailed arrangements. The Post Office already offers banking services on an agency basis for a number of banks. The new Horizon technology currently being installed will give the Post Office the opportunity to offer banking services on an agency basis for a wider range of banks and building societies; and the Post Office have already said that they intend to install 3,000 cash machines.

We are also inviting banks to work with the Post Office to offer a basic banking service to people currently without bank accounts.

However, we recognise that there will be some people who will be unable to pay by ACT. For these, we are considering what alternative simple electronic money transmission system, which could also be accessed at post offices, may be commercially available.

HEALTH

Community Hospital, Sheppey

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much public money has been spent by Thames Gateway NHS Trust on consultants' and lawyers' fees in respect of the PFI contract for the hospital for the Isle of Sheppey. [105196]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 17 January 2000]: Since 1996–97 the amount spent by Thames Gateway National Health Service Trust on advisers costs for the proposed private finance initiative scheme for a new community hospital for Sheppey are:

Expenditure type	Amount
Legal advice	379,000
Financial advice	198,000
Other advice	122,000
Total	699,000

Of these costs, £87,000 were incurred prior to April 1997.

Health Professions Council

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he plans to start consultation on a draft order to establish a health professions council; [118313]

(2) when he expects new professions to be able to register with the health professions council; [118314]

(3) what plans he has to repeal the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960; and if he will make a statement; [118315]

(4) what plans he has to implement a regulatory framework to enable further professions to obtain state registration; and if he will make a statement. [118312]

Mr. Denham: We are currently considering the proposals for consultation on legislation to replace the Council for Professions Supplementary to Medicine. We hope to be able to publish these shortly.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on introducing a statutory registration scheme for operating department practitioners; and if he will make a statement. [118854]

Ms Stuart: Section 60 of the Health Act 1999 provides power to regulate new health professions. This is one of the subjects for consultation on proposals to create a new Health Professions Council.

Biomedical Scientists (Trainees)

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trainee biomedical scientists there are in the NHS. [118588]

Mr. Denham: Trainee biomedical scientists are graduates. The length of their vocational training varies depending on the entry route and the ability of the individual. Accurate figures for the number of trainee biomedical scientists employed by the National Health Service are not available as the information is not collected centrally.

Health Authority Budgets

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each health authority in England and Wales, (a) its total allocation for 2000–01, including its share of the expenditure announced on 28 March, (b) its total allocation if the allocations for 2000–01 had been made on the basis of full weighted capitation and (c) the amount by which its total allocation differs from weighted capitation. [118932]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 13 April 2000]: On 28 March my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced details of extra allocations to health authorities for 2000–01. This additional £660 million has brought health authority average increases to 8.9 per cent. in cash terms (6.2 per cent. in real terms). The information is given in the table.

Information on allocations for Welsh health authorities is available from the National Assembly for Wales.

Day Centres

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authorities levy a charge for day centres. [119482]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of local authorities levying a charge for day centres in England is not collected centrally. However information on the recoupment of fees and charges by each local authority is available at the Department of Health website at www.doh.gov.uk/public/pss—stat.htm.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received on the introduction of charges by social services departments for the use of day centres. [119481]

Mr. Hutton: During the six-month period to April 2000 the Department received an average of two representations per month on the introduction of charges by social services departments for the use of day centres.

Glenthorne Youth Treatment Centre

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has reached a decision on the future of Glenthorne Youth Treatment Centre; and if he will make a statement. [119424]

Mr. Hutton: In my reply to my hon. Friend on 15 December 1999, Official Report, column 223W, I announced that I would be consulting on the future of Glenthorne Youth Treatment Centre, including its possible closure.

That consultation has now been completed and I have considered the representations made to me by the staff of the Centre and their representatives, by Members of Parliament; by local authorities; and by others, especially those representing young people accommodated in the Centre. The Centre has made a valuable and important contribution to the treatment and care of some of the most difficult and disturbed young people in the past, and these representations have paid fitting tribute to that contribution.

When the Youth Treatment Centres were first developed over 20 years ago, there were no comparable facilities for accommodating and treating such difficult and disturbed young people. Things have moved on considerably since then. Local councils have developed their own secure accommodation and have become skilled and experienced at dealing with young people requiring secure care, including young people like those accommodated in Glenthorne. In recent years, the Department of Health has undertaken a major expansion of local authority secure accommodation by providing an additional 170 places for young people. Providers in the voluntary and private sectors have also established their worth. In these circumstances, I have concluded that it is no longer appropriate for the Department to run such a child care facility and that we should therefore withdraw from providing such a service.

We have looked carefully at the option of someone taking over the Centre as a going concern, but, unfortunately, no suitable proposals have been put forward, and 18 of the 30 young people who were in the Centre at the time of my announcement in December have been moved by their placing authorities to alternative facilities. The whole question of the financial viability of the Centre is affecting the morale and welfare of both the staff and the children. It is, therefore, time to bring to an end the uncertainty which has inevitably existed over recent months.

However, the welfare of the children currently placed in Glenthorne is of paramount importance and no decision will be taken on when the Centre will finally close until suitable alternative placements have been found for them. The Department will be working closely with the local authorities and the Prison Service to identify the most appropriate places. Once that transition has been achieved, the Centre will close.

The Department will also be working closely with the Department Trade Union Side to identify posts elsewhere in the civil service to which some of the staff of the Centre could be re-deployed. However, given the specialist nature of some of the posts in the Centre, re-deployment may not be possible in all cases. In those instances, redundancy terms will apply.

This has been a difficult time for the staff of the Centre and I am grateful for the professional manner in which they have continued to conduct themselves.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Accumulated Service Medal

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the Royal Irish Regiment whose claims for the Accumulated Service Medal were reviewed because of insufficient evidence were (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful in claiming the medal. [119345]

Mr. Spellar I have been asked to reply.

A total of 273 such cases have been considered by the Army Medal Board to date. Of these, 226 have been successful, 30 proved to have no entitlement and were rejected, and 17 have been returned to the Regimental Headquarters of the Royal Irish Regiment for further investigation. An additional 624 applications have still to be prepared for Army Medal Board consideration.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm Aid Package

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the value of the farm aid package announced on 30 March, and if he will publish a breakdown of the components of the farm aid package, listing for each component (a) its value, (b) its funding source, (c) eligible recipients, (d) conditions of eligibility, (e) time of availability, (f) budgetary year, (g) whether it has previously been announced by (i) the Government and (ii) the European Commission and (h) if it has been approved by the European Commission and, if not, when he expects such approval to be given. [117970]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 6 April 2000]: The Action Plan for Farming discussed at the Farming Summit on 30 March outlined a programme of measures to help provide a proper, structured plan for the future. The aid measures amounting to over £200 million are listed. Many of the other measures within the Action Plan will also have considerable benefit to the farming industry, though it is not as yet possible to quantify these.

Action plan for farming (13 April 2000)

Measure	Value (£ million)	Funding source	Eligible recipients and conditions of eligibility	Time of availability	Previously announced	EC approval
Introduce a scheme to encourage the restructuring of the pig industry in order to improve its long term viability	'26	UK	To be announced	To be announced	No	An aid notification has been submitted to the EC
Pay to dairy farmers all the agrimonetary aid that EU rules permit this year only	'22	UK (£11 million) and EU'	Aid will be allocated in proportion to milk quota held on 31 March 2000	To be announced	No	An aid notification will be submitted to the EC this month
Pay agrimonetary compensation to beef farmers of £22 million this year only. Payments will be made in connection with Beef Special Premium, Suckler Cow Premium and Extensification Payments for the 2000 scheme year	'22	EU'	Payments will be made in connection with Beef Special Premium, Suckler Cow Premium and Extensification Payments for the 2000 scheme year	The majority will be payable in November, and the remainder in the second quarter of 2001	No	An aid notification will be submitted to the EU this month
Agrimonetary compensation to sheep farmers of £22 million this year in respect of 1999 scheme year claims	'22	EU'	Paid to Sheep Annual Premium claimants in respect of the 1999 scheme year	Payments will be made with the first advances of Sheep Annual Premium in July/August	No	An aid notification will be submitted to the EC this month
Increase support for hill farmers beyond the level specified in the Rural Development Plans submitted to the Commission	'60	UK	The majority of the moneys will be added to the budgets for the LFA compensatory allowances, which will be modified to assist restructuring so as to strengthen the industry and to make it better able to deliver the social and environmental benefits provided by extensive sheep and beef grazing. The remainder will finance a consultancy programme to improve hill farmers' access to business skills	LFA support payments are made in the early months of each year	No	The scheme has been submitted to the EC for approval under the Rural Development Regulation; the changes will need to be discussed with the EC
Seek from the Commission an increase in the maximum weight per animal on which compensation is payable under the Over Thirty Months Scheme	'20	UK	Payable in respect of cattle slaughtered under the Over Thirty Months Scheme	To be determined	No	The Over Thirty Months Scheme for cattle is an EU scheme and thus changes to its rules require the EC to make a proposal to be adopted by the Beef Management Committee on which all member states are represented. A formal request to that effect has been made to the EC

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of the food consumed in the UK is organically produced; and what estimate he has made of the amount that will be so produced in 2006. [118573]

Mr. Morley: Precise information is not available. We estimate the share of organic food in the overall UK market as in the order of 5 per cent.

We have made no estimate for future years.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total amount of money paid under the Common Agricultural Policy to organic farmers in the EU; and what percentage this represents of the total CAP spend. [118577]

Ms Quin: The information requested is not available in the format required.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets other EU member states have set for organic farming. [118574]

Mr. Morley: The information available is not complete but we understand that Austria, Denmark, Finland, France and Sweden have set targets for the conversion of agricultural land to organic farming. In addition several of the German Bundesländer have set such targets. These targets range from 3 per cent. to 10 per cent. of agricultural land.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money his Department has spent on research into (a) organic farming, (b) biotechnology and genetic modification and (c) all areas of agriculture, in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [118568]

Ms Quin: MAFF spending in these areas over the last five years is shown in the tables. The figures for 1999–2000 are provisional.

(a) Organic farming

Year	£ million
1995–96	0.931
1996–97	1.116
1997–98	0.908
1998–99	1.481
1999–2000	(2.027)

The organic farming sector also benefits from much of the other research the Ministry undertakes: for example, its planned spend of over £8 million in 1999–2000 on biological control techniques, plant health, animal welfare and wildlife conservation on farms.

(b) Biotechnology and genetic modification

Year	£ million
1995–96	20.09
1996–97	22.94
1997–98	25.22
1998–99	28.91
1999–2000	(ca. 26)

(c) All areas of agriculture including organic farming, biotechnology and genetic modification

Year	£ million
1995–96	88.94
1996–97	87.14
1997–98	89.74
1998–99	90.58
1999–2000	(90.78)

West Dorset

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will classify West Dorset as an area qualifying for hill farming compensation. [118623]

Ms Quin [holding answer 17 April 2000]: To qualify for hill livestock compensatory allowances, West Dorset would have to be designated as a Less Favoured Area (LFA).

LFAs in the UK were first designated under Council Directive 75/276/EEC, and last amended by Commission Decision 91/25/EEC. For any additional area to be designated as LFA it would need to meet the general criteria set out in Council Regulation (EC) No. 1257/99 (Articles 17–21) and the specific criteria set out in Council Directive 75/268/EEC (Articles 3 (4) and 5) as adopted by Council Directive 84/169/EEC.

Proposals for any extension of the LFA area in England would need to be submitted to the European Commission for approval as part of the England Rural Development Plan. No such proposals have been included.

Lindane

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the approvals for products containing Lindane which have been suspended, withdrawn or revoked from market authorisation in the last five years, indicating the crops for which use of the products had been approved, including off-label approvals. [118804]

Ms Quin [holding answer 12 April 2000]: Those products containing Lindane which have been suspended, withdrawn or revoked from the market since 1 November 1995, and the crops for which they held approval, are:

Pesticides

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reason, in the 1998 survey of the working party on pesticides residues, aldicarburas was not among the pesticides actively sought in retail samples of speciality potatoes. [118803]

Ms Quin [holding answer 12 April 2000]: This was the first time speciality potatoes had been analysed as part of the Government's annual residues monitoring programme. The potatoes were therefore tested against a standard multiple residue screen to give an indication of the residues present. Aldicarb is not part of this general screen. However, processed potato products were also surveyed in 1998, and aldicarb was included in this analytical suite. The results of this survey are due to be published later this year. A special survey on the variability of aldicarb residues in potatoes (including new potatoes) was published in August last year, the results of which are available on the Pesticide Safety Directorate's (PSD's) internet website (http://maffweb/aboutmaf/agency/psd/psdhome.htm), or direct from PSD. The full document is also available to all Members in the Library of the House.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria were used in the 1998 survey of the Working Party on Pesticide Residues to select the countries of origin from which samples of imported speciality potatoes would be tested. [118807]

Ms Quin [holding answer 12 April 2000]: The surveys of the Working Party on Pesticide Residues (WPPR) are not, except in certain circumstances, directed towards produce of particular countries. The samples of speciality potatoes purchased as part of the 1998 survey were representative of what was available on the UK market at the time of purchase.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Third World Debt

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what progress has been made with the launch of a joint IMF and World bank fund to focus on alleviating the debts of the heavily indebted poor countries by the end of 2000; [119049]

(2) what progress has been made with proposals to speed up the HIPC II debt cancellation programme. [119336]

Clare Short: So far, five countries have qualified for relief under the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative. This is disappointing because the target was for 11 countries to have qualified by the Spring Meetings of the World bank and the IMF. The Government remain strongly committed to the G7 target of three-quarters of eligible countries getting to Decision Point by the end of 2000. We are pressing the bank and Fund to speed up the process.

Discussions are also continuing to agree the financing arrangements for the multilateral development banks' participation in the Initiative. Further contributions to the HIPC Trust Fund will be required. UK has made the largest commitment to date—over $350 million. This includes our share of European Community contributions to the Trust Fund.

Primary Education

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 2 February 2000, Official Report, column 619W, on primary education, how much each heavily indebted poor country received from the UK's bilateral aid budget for the provision of primary education for each of the last three years. [118350]

Clare Short: The following table indicates UK bilateral development assistance expenditure on primary education in heavily indebted poor countries over the last three financial years for which data are available. These data refer only to projects and programmes aimed solely at primary education. There is also expenditure on this area included in wider projects and programmes, or funded through NGOs, which cannot be separately identified.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Properties

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those properties held by his Department and agencies responsible to him which are (a) wholly and (b) mainly unoccupied at present, giving locations and when they became so unoccupied in each case. [105308]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 19 January 2000]: A list of those properties which are wholly, or have been mainly, unoccupied that are held by my Department and agencies has been placed in the Library.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many claims under the special payments category of the Jobseeker's Allowance were made in 1999; and how many of these were refused on the grounds of inadequate contribution payments. [108450]

Ms Jowell: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Dr. Brian Mawhinney, dated 17 April 2000:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning special payments relating to Jobseeker's Allowance in 1999. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Employment Service has arrangements to consider claims for compensation from jobseekers who claim to have suffered a financial loss or severe worry and distress, gross inconvenience or embarrassment as a result of errors by our staff, under the terms of a Department of Social Security compensation scheme.

In the period 1 January 1999 to 31 December 1999, we received 391 claims for special payments as a result of alleged error in connection with Employment Service administration of Jobseeker's Allowance. Of these claims for compensation, 16 were in connection with advice concerning the National Insurance Contribution conditions for Jobseeker's Allowance, of which two were refused.

I should add that the Benefits Agency also make special payments as a result of alleged errors with their administration of Jobseeker's Allowance. Therefore, I have asked for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency to reply to you direct on the number of special payments they have made in relation to Jobseeker's Allowance.

I hope this is helpful.

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117814]

Mr. Wills: The Department for Education and Employment (DfEE) does not directly employ lawyers but obtains them from Treasury Solicitor's Department (TSD). The lawyers are employed by TSD and allocated to DfEE. The figures given represent the number of lawyers allocated as at 31 March for the years in question.

As at 31 March 2000, 24 lawyers were allocated by TSD to DfEE.

DfEE came into existence following Machinery of Government changes in July 1995. The figures given for 1995 are for the number of lawyers allocated by TSD to its two predecessor Departments: the Employment Department Group (EDG) and Department for Education (DfE).

As at 31 March 1995, 13 lawyers were allocated to the former EDG and 10 to the former DfE, making a total of 23.

Meaningful comparisons between the numbers for 1995 and 2000 will be difficult to establish as DfEE's responsibilities do not precisely equate with those of its predecessor Departments.

For example, the Health and Safety Executive and the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service were both part of EDG in March 1995 but transferred to the Department of Environment and the Department of Trade and Industry respectively as part of the Machinery of Government changes later that year.

Vulnerable Adults

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to introduce police checks on employees in education working with vulnerable adults. [118739]

Ms Hodge: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has announced his intention to implement part V of the Police Act 1997. As a result, criminal records information will become more readily available to employers recruiting people to work with children or vulnerable adults. Details of how this is to work in education are being developed currently and announcements will be made at a later date.

Disabled People

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will make an announcement about the national implementation of the personal adviser service part of his New Deal for the Disabled. [118599]

Ms Hodge: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 12 April 2000, Official Report, column 186W.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many personal advisers work for the personal adviser section of the New Deal for the Disabled; and what the average care load is in each (a) constituency, (b) local authority area and (c) county. [118609]

Ms Hodge: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Personal advisers are not allocated to specific constituencies, local authorities or counties. The table sets out the coverage and average caseload per personal adviser (as at 25 February) for each pilot area.

New Deal (Advertising)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the total cost to date of publications on, and advertising of, New Deal programmes for the unemployed. [118512]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 10 April 2000]: A sum of £1,849,405 has been spent on publications and a sum of £9,697,576 has been spent on advertising New Deal. These figures exclude the cost of VAT but include amounts incurred for New Deal for Young People, New Deal 25 plus, New Deal 50 plus, New Deal for Partners of Unemployed People and New Deal for Disabled People.

The sums do not include expenditure on the promotion of New Deal for Lone Parents, as the Department of Social Security takes the lead on this programme.

Deputations

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many requests for meetings with deputations of hon. Members and groups from their constituencies, his Department has received in each year since 1997, on issues relating to (a) further and (b) adult education; how many have (i) he and (ii) other Ministers in his Department (1) seen and (2) refused to see; and if he will make a statement. [118924]

Mr. Wicks: This information is not centrally available and could be collected only at a disproportionate cost.

Pre-school Sector

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pre-schools and playgroups in Dartford (a) have benefited and (b) are expected to benefit from the special Government grants made available to relieve financial pressure on the pre-school sector. [118821]

Ms Hodge: Our records for the 1998 and 1999 schemes to assist pre-schools and playgroups facing financial difficulty show that no applications for grant were received from pre-schools and playgroups in Dartford.

Arrangements for the administration of the new scheme, which I announced on 29 March 2000, will be discussed with the voluntary pre-school and playgroup support organisations. Among the main issues to be taken into account in deciding applications for grant will be the financial position of the group, quality issues, longer term viability and any comments received from the local Early Years Development and Childcare Partnership.

Ofsted Inspections

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the total cost of Ofsted inspections since their inception for (a) the county of Cheshire, (b) the constituency of Crewe and Nantwich and (c) the town of Crewe. [119013]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 13 April 2000]: This is a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, Chris Woodhead. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his Department's energy efficiency performance target, expressed as a percentage change in comparison with 1990–91, for each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [118999]

Mr. Wills: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 22 March 2000, Official Report, columns 548–49W. It was explained then that a new target had been set across the Government estate, to apply from 2000–01, of a one per cent. per annum reduction in greenhouse gas emissions. The base year will be 1999–2000 as it was the final year to which the previous target applied. My Department will aim to meet this target. It represents a change against the previous cross-Government Target to 31 March 2000 which was expressed in terms of reductions in energy expenditure. Measurement in greenhouse gas emissions provides a much better fit with the current climate change programme and the UK's Kyoto targets.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the percentage change compared with 1990–91 in his Department's energy efficiency in each year since 1990–91; and if he will make a statement. [118998]

Mr. Wills: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 22 July 1999, Official Report, columns 580–84W, which reported progress for all central government departments to 31 March 1998. The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions expect to publish results for the period up to March 1999 shortly.

School Milk

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what recent discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Health regarding the reintroduction of free milk for school children; and if he will make a statement; [119009]

(2) what recent representations he has received regarding the reintroduction of free milk for school children; [119011]

(3) what assessment he has made of the feasibility of reintroducing free milk for school children. [119012]

Jacqui Smith: The law already requires that those local education authorities and schools that choose to provide milk must make it available, without charge, to pupils whose parents receive Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and the Secretary of State for Health have not had any recent discussions about extending eligibility for free school milk. In the last six months we have received only three letters from members of the public pressing for the re-introduction of compulsory free school milk for all school children.

The Government have no plans to extend eligibility for free school milk or to make the serving of free milk compulsory. We have not therefore assessed the feasibility of doing so. We have however legislated to allow free drinking milk to be served at any time during the day, rather than only at lunchtime.

Milk is one of many foods that play an important part in a balanced diet. Milk and dairy foods are part of our proposals for minimum nutritional standards for school lunches, which will come into operation next year. We will be recommending in our guidance to school caterers that drinking milk should be made available every day. We also encourage schools to claim existing subsidies for school milk, such as those available through the European Community School Milk Subsidy Scheme.

Early-years Education

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what additional resources were allocated to maintained nursery schools as part of the Chancellor's Budget; in which Government publication reference to these additional resources is to be found; and by what means the information was communicated to maintained nursery school headteachers and governors; [119193]

(2) what additional resources have been allocated to those early years educational providers that form part of local education authorities' Early Years Childcare and Education Development Partnerships to provide early years places for all four year olds, as a result of the recent Budget announcements. [119195]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 14 April 2000]: I have written to the headteachers of all schools in England who will benefit from the extra £290 million we are making available following the Budget. This includes maintained nursery and primary schools. The money is part of a real terms increase of over 10 per cent. this year. Copies of the letters, including those sent to nursery schools, are being placed in the Library. The final allocations are subject to approval of a special grant report which was laid before Parliament on 6 April and is being debated on 17 April. No additional resources have been allocated directly to Early Years, Childcare and Education Development Partnerships. I have, however, made an additional £0.5 million available for pre-schools' groups and playgroups facing financial difficulties. This follows a similar scheme last year, and will give groups time in which to consider their longer term plans.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what definition of nursery places is used by his Department in providing funding for nursery places for four-year-olds. [119492]

Ms Hodge: A nursery education place consists of five $2\frac{1}{2}$ hour sessions per week over three terms of 11 weeks each.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many Early Excellence centres have been set up in the last three years; and at what cost. [119493]

Ms Hodge: We have designated 29 Early Excellence Centres in the last three years. Specific DfEE funding of £6 million has been made available during that period.

Leeds LEA

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many times his Department's officials have met the team of consultants appointed to evaluate Leeds Local Education Authority; and what future meetings will take place and for what purpose [119249]

Ms Estelle Morris: DfEE officials and Leeds officers met with PricewaterhouseCoopers' Leeds LEA team when interviewing them for the work in Leeds, and meet them at the regular steering group meetings which check on progress. Three such meetings have taken place and two further steering group meetings are planned for May. Individuals from the team will also continue to meet officials from the Department for the range of purposes set out in the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend on 11 April 2000, Official Report, columns 89–90W.

Maintained Nursery Schools

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the maintained nursery schools that have closed in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000. [119198]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 14 April 2000]: The maintained nursery schools that have closed in the academic years 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 are listed in the following table. There are no proposals for nursery school closure currently under consideration as far as the Department is aware. All the nursery school closures were linked to the establishment of alternative nursery units at other schools except one where the nursery school was closed as there were surplus nursery places in the area. Since 1997, four new nursery schools have been established.

Capital Modernisation Fund

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to make further allocations from the Capital Modernisation Fund which will benefit disadvantaged communities. [119655]

Mr. Wills: We are pleased to announce that £10 million is being allocated from the Capital Modernisation Fund to help bridge the digital divide in the most disadvantaged communities. The initiative will do this by wiring up communities to enable people living in them to use the new information and communications technologies to access jobs, learning opportunities, Government and other services, and to help individuals and their communities fulfil their potential.

School Funding

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what means each school will receive the additional direct funding announced in the Budget; and what conditions will be applied as to how the resources are to be spent. [119199]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 14 April 2000]: My right hon. Friend laid a special report, under section 88B of the Local Government Act 1988, before the House on 6 April. Once it has been approved, it will empower him to make payments to local authorities on condition that they pass those payments to schools, within a specified time period. The additional funding will be part of schools' delegated budgets, so they will be free to decide what to spend it on. It will give extra support to secondary schools in raising standards as part of the new Key Stage 3 programme, which will include: the setting of challenging school-level targets, and development of strategies to meet them, by all secondary schools with Key Stage 3 pupils for performance in the Key Stage 3 tests in 2002; and new Year 7 tests for pupils who have not yet achieved level 4 in English and maths. The tests will be available free in 2001 so that all secondary and middle schools can test all eligible pupils. The additional funding will help primary schools to meet the challenging literacy and numeracy targets they have set for both 2001 and 2002.

Community Learning

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the future of community learning, its funding and the bodies that will be responsible for determining the provision of community learning in each local education authority area. [119494]

Mr. Wicks: In our Prospectus for the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) we made it clear that adult and community learning is a vital part of the Government's plans to drive up achievement, widen participation in learning, and strengthen community confidence and capacity.

Our first consultation document on the funding of post 16 learning, published in January, confirmed the strategic contribution that local authorities, together with local Learning and Skills Councils, can make. The Learning and Skills Bill (Lords) now before Parliament includes the necessary provisions to allow this. The Secretary of State has already recognised the importance of local education authorities in adult and community learning by guaranteeing them a minimum level of funding in the first two years of the LSC, provided they maintain their spend in this area and effectively implement their lifelong learning plans.

Our second funding consultation document, to be published in May, will set out the roles of all those concerned in post 16 learning and invite comments on our proposals for funding, including the funding of adult and community learning.

ConneXions Service

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many staff will be employed by his Department, additional to the current establishment, as a result of the introduction of ConneXions. [119497]

Mr. Wicks: The ConneXions service will largely be staffed by existing civil servants, but will draw as necessary on secondees from other Government Departments, the voluntary, youth and private sectors where appropriate. We do not anticipate any significant increase in the current establishment.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the funding of the ConneXions service and its impact on local education authority budgets. [119496]

Mr. Wicks: The funding for the ConneXions service will come from the bringing together of existing resources devoted to youth support and guidance. We are also considering what additional resources will be needed and can be made available as part of the Government's Year 2000 Spending Review.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much time on average he estimates that a personal adviser will spend with each young person under the ConneXions service. [119500]

Mr. Wicks: This will depend on the needs of each individual young person.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how he plans to screen mentors in the ConneXions Service for their suitability to work with young people. [119144]

Mr. Wicks: The ConneXions service is responsible for the physical and emotional safety of all young people coming into contact with mentors. ConneXions partnerships will have responsibility for ensuring that personal checks have been completed on mentors working with young people.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many personal advisers will be employed in the ConneXions service. [119499]

Mr. Wicks: The ConneXions service will ensure that every young person, whatever their needs, has local access to appropriate high quality guidance and support during their teenage years. A key factor in achieving this will be to ensure that all young people have access to a personal adviser. It is too early at this stage to give precise information on the numbers of personal advisers to be employed by the ConneXions service. The service will be phased in from April 2001 and the ConneXions partnerships will be responsible for deciding how best to deliver the service in their area, in the light of local circumstances.

Piloting of the service which is due to start shortly will provide helpful information on the number of personal advisers needed.

Contracted-out Services

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many youth workers, careers officers and education welfare officers are employed by (a) local education authorities, (b) careers services and (c) other contracted-out services. [119498]

Mr. Wicks: There are just under 8,000 full-time equivalents employed on work delivering careers service contracts. This includes careers officers, assistant careers officers and staff employed in management and support functions. The number of careers staff employed outside careers services is unknown.

Numbers of youth workers are not collated centrally but the audit of youth services in local authorities in England based on 1996–97 data indicates that the number of full-time professional youth workers employed by local education authorities is about 3,200. In addition there are about 7,900 professionally qualified working part-time and about 16,000 not professionally qualified working part-time. The number of youth workers outside local education authorities is unknown but there are likely to be significant numbers in the voluntary sector.

The precise number of education welfare officers employed by local education authorities is not collated centrally but for England is estimated to be around 3,000.

School Sixth Forms

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how capital funding for sixth forms will be allocated under the new funding arrangements for post-16 years education. [119495]

Mr. Wicks: Arrangements for capital funding for school sixth forms will be unaffected by the new post-16 funding arrangements. Central capital funding by the Department for Education and Employment will continue to go directly to local education authorities and to schools.

Class Sizes

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was the average size of sixth form classes taught by one teacher in maintained secondary schools in each of the last five years; [119409]

(2) how many pupils were taught at Key Stage 4 in classes with 30 or more pupils in maintained secondary schools in each of the last five years; [119412]

(3) how many sixth form classes taught by one teacher in maintained secondary schools had (a) 25 or more and (b) 30 or more pupils in each of the last five years. [119418]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is shown in the tables.

Provisional national estimates of class sizes in maintained secondary schools, which were published on 12 April, found reductions between January 1999 and 2000 in the numbers of pupils in classes of 35 or more taught by one teacher. Overall, only 0.2 per cent. of pupils in maintained secondary schools in England were in classes of over 35 pupils. For 14 and 15-year-old pupils, only 0.1 per cent. of pupils are in classes of over 35, representing a fall of nearly one half between January 1999 and 2000. Similarly, within the same time period, the number of pupils aged 16 or more in classes over 35 also fell to only 775 pupils, a reduction in the number of pupils of about one third. These figures were published in a Statistical First Release, "Class sizes in maintained schools in England: January 2000 (15/2000)".

In respect of classes with more than 35 pupils taught by one teacher in maintained secondary schools, provisional national estimates (published on 12 April) found reductions between January 1999 and January 2000 in the numbers of pupils in such classes. Overall, only 0.2 per cent. of pupils in maintained secondary schools in England were in classes of over 35 pupils. For 14 and 15-year-old pupils, only 0.1 per cent. of pupils are in classes over 35, representing a fall of nearly one half between January 1999 and 2000. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average size of classes taught by one teacher in former grant-maintained secondary schools in each of the last five years. [119417]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is shown in the table. Class sizes in former grant-maintained secondary schools are generally smaller than those in local education authority maintained secondary schools.

[1] Provisional
[2] Includes schools who, under the new framework, were redefined as Community or Voluntary-Aided schools

Provisional national estimates of class sizes in maintained secondary schools were recently published in Statistical First Release "Class sizes in maintained schools in England: January 2000 (15/2000)" on 12 April 2000.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what recent research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the effect of large class sizes, including in sixth forms, on secondary schools; [119413]

(2) what recent representations he has received on class sizes in secondary schools; [119414]

(3) what plans he has to reduce class sizes in secondary schools; and if he will make a statement; [119415]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State receives representations from time to time on various issues related to class sizes. The evidence, including from Ofsted, indicates that class size is most important at Key Stage 1. That is why we pledged to reduce the size of infant classes to 30 or below, ensuring that all children benefit, and helping to give young pupils the important start they need. We are well on track to deliver our pledge by September 2001 at the latest.

The average number of pupils in secondary classes is 22—about five fewer than in primary schools. The pupil/teacher ratio in secondary schools is 17.1—more than six lower than in primary schools. Class sizes in secondary schools have been rising steadily since 1998, when the figure was 19.9.

In the recent budget, secondary headteachers each received between £30,000 and £50,000. It remains for headteachers to decide how to use this money but, spent on teachers, the secondary pupil/teacher ratio could be reduced by 0.4. More generally, between 1997–98 and 2000–01, overall funding per secondary school pupil has increased in cash terms by some £580—an increase of around 20 per cent.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils were taught (a) English, (b) maths and (c) science in classes with 30 or more pupils taught by one teacher in maintained secondary schools in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [119411]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on the size of classes by subject area in maintained secondary schools in England is not collected by the Department.

Provisional national estimates of class size in maintained secondary schools were published in a Statistical First Release, "Class sizes in maintained schools in England: January 2000 (15/2000)", on 12 April 2000. This release is available from the Library.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list each local authority with pupils in classes of 36 or more taught by one teacher in maintained secondary schools, indicating the number of such pupils in each such local authority. [119410]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on classes of size 36 or more for secondary schools by local education authority area has been placed in the Library.

Provisional national estimates of class sizes in maintained secondary schools, which were published on 12 April, found reductions between January 1999 and 2000 in the numbers of pupils in classes of 36 or more taught by one teacher. Overall, only 0.2 per cent. of pupils in maintained secondary schools in England were in classes of over 35 pupils. For 14 and 15-year-old pupils, as few as 0.1 per cent. of pupils are in classes over 35, representing a fall of nearly one half between January 1999 and 2000. Similarly, within the same time period, the number of pupils aged 16 or more in classes over 35 fell to only 775 pupils, a reduction in the number of pupils of about one third. These figures were published in a Statistical First Release, "Class sizes in maintained schools in England: January 2000 (15/2000)".

Special Educational Needs

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children had statements of special educational needs by age in each year since 1995; and what percentage of the total school under 18 years population this represented. [119536]

Jacqui Smith: Information on the number of children with statements of special educational need (SEN) by age has been published centrally since 1997. The latest information available is as follows:

Age	1996	1997	1998	1999
Under 5	8,440	8,999	8,631	9,167
5–15	208,204	215,909	—	—
5–10	—	—	94,826	97,150
11–15	—	—	126,508	134,162
16–19	12,545	13,650	14,763	15,105

These figures relate to all children for whom LEAs maintain a statement including children not placed in schools. The table reflects the years in which the information was collected and a change in the age bands used to collect it from 1998.

The percentage of the total under 18 school population with statements of SEN in each of the years 1995 to 1999 is 2.6 per cent., 2.8 per cent., 2.9 per cent. and 3.0 per cent. respectively.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children with statements of special educational needs were in designated special units within (a) primary schools up to and including year six and (b) secondary schools from year seven onwards in each year since 1995. [119537]

Jacqui Smith: Information on the number of children with statements of SEN in designated special units within primary schools and secondary schools is not collected centrally.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which local authorities in England and Wales have (a) adopted and (b) implemented the form of assessment recommended in the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority document "Supporting the Target Setting Process-Guidance for effective target setting for pupils with special educational needs". [119535]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not collected centrally.

The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) commissioned Durham University to undertake a monitoring exercise last summer to ascertain the extent to which the P scales, the assessment framework proposed in the publication 'Supporting the Target Setting Process—Guidance for effective target setting for pupils with special educational needs', are being used in schools. 313 schools, including 116 mainstream and 197 special schools, took part in the survey. The exercise was supported by the 63 local education authorities (LEAs) in which the schools are situated.

A further monitoring survey on the P scales planned for next summer will specifically examine the use made by LEAs of the P scales, as well as school take up and use.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what percentage of the primary schools in England and Wales have been placed on special measures in each year since 1995; [119540]

(2) what percentage of primary schools with local education authorities designated special needs units have been placed on special measures in each year since 1995 in England and Wales. [119534]

Ms Estelle Morris: The percentage of primary and maintained and non-maintained special schools which have been placed in special measures since 1995 is contained in the table. While there are some special schools which cater for pupils wholly of primary school age, or wholly of secondary school age, there are many others which cover age ranges bridging part or the whole of the primary and secondary phases. The attached table does not distinguish between special schools covering the wide number of possible different age ranges. The figures in the table represent the proportion of all primary and maintained and non-maintained special schools which were inspected by Ofsted during that academic year and deemed to be in need of special measures.

Academic Year	Primary	Specials
	Percentage
1994–95	0.20	0.50
1995–96	0.40	2
1996–97	0.80	3
1997–98	1	3
1998–99	0.80	1

Higher Education

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information he has collated on admission to higher education institutions broken down by the nature of the educational establishment previously attended in each of the last five years. [119145]

Mr. Wicks: The information is given in the table, based on students gaining places on full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses through UCAS. Equivalent data for admissions to part-time undergraduate courses are not available.

UCAS UK-domiciled acceptances to higher education institutions by previous educational establishment

Learning and Skills (Humberside)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what provision has been made for representatives of the Humber colleges to be members of the Humber Task Force overseeing the transition from TECs to learning and skills councils. [117832]

Mr. Wicks: The role of the Humber task group is not to oversee the transition of the TEC into the Learning and Skills Council but rather to collect information from current funding bodies (such as TECs, FEFC, and Local Education Authorities) on the range and volume of provision currently being funded in each area. The aim is to ensure that sufficient funds will be available in each area to at least maintain current levels of provision and to avoid disruption for learners resulting from the introduction of the new arrangements.

Since they are not funding bodies there is no requirement for a direct representative of Humber colleges on the Humber task group, although a college principal who is a chair of one of the four Local Learning Partnerships has been invited to join the task group.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in how many TEC areas in Yorkshire and Humberside local further education colleges are not directly represented on task forces overseeing the transition from TECs to learning and skills councils. [117833]

Mr. Wicks: There are nine TEC areas in Yorkshire and the Humber region. Four Learning and Skills Councils are planned for the region and there are, therefore, four task groups in the region. The role of these task groups is not to oversee the transition of the TECs to the Learning and Skills Council but rather to collect information from current funding bodies (such as TEC, FEFC, and Local Education Authorities) on the range and volume of provision currently being funded in each area. The aim is to ensure that sufficient funds will be available in each area to at least maintain current levels of provision and to avoid disruption for learners resulting from the introduction of the new arrangements.

Since they are not funding bodies there are no representatives of local colleges on any of the task groups in each region, although a college principal does sit on the South Yorkshire task group because of the wider remit that the group has identified to link LSC development with objective 1 status for South Yorkshire.

Waltham Forest LEA

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what publication date has been set for the Ofsted report on the London Borough of Waltham Forest local education authority; and if HM Chief Inspector of Schools has power to publish Ofsted local education authority reports without consulting the local education authority concerned as to the publication date. [119408]

Ms Estelle Morris: This is a matter for HM Chief Inspector of Schools and I have therefore asked Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Basic Skills Agency

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on (a) his quinquennial assessment of the Basic Skills Agency, (b) his plans for its continued public funding and (c) its relationship with work to improve adult literacy standards being conducted within his own Department. [119146]

Mr. Wicks: The Department's quinquennial review of the Basic Skills Agency is now in its final stages; the resulting report will be placed in the Library of the House. We anticipate that the Agency will continue in its present role at the forefront of innovation and development in basic skills and will continue to receive public funding to support that role.

Work has already begun on a number of new measures to tackle the problem of poor basic skills among adults, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State plans to announce a full national strategy for the longer term later this year. To manage the implementation of this national strategy we are setting up a new Adult Basic Skills Strategy Unit at the Department for Education and Employment. The new Unit and the Basic Skills Agency will need to work closely together in carrying out their separate but complementary roles in support of the national strategy.

LEA Funding Bids

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each local education authority in Hampshire the (a) number and (b) value of funding bids made to his Department in (i) the financial year 1979–80, (ii) the financial year 1990–91 and (iii) each financial year from 1992–93 to 1998–99 for the repair of school buildings. [116021]

Jacqui Smith: The three tables answer the hon. Gentleman's question for the financial years from 1995–96 to 1998–99. We have no access to records for any years before then.

Year	Number of bids	Value of bids
Hampshire
1995–96[1]	17	4,600
1996–97[1]	12	5,893
1997–98	40	12,949
1998–99	171	23,970
Southampton[2]
1997–98	12	3,946,000
1998–99	86	4,421,205
Portsmouth[2]
1997–98	9	2,776,000
1998–99	125	2,864,862

[1] Figures for 1995–96 and 1996–97 do not include bids made under the Schools Renewal Challenge Fund.
[2] Before 1997–98, all Portsmouth and Southampton schools were maintained by Hampshire LEA.

Student Loans Company

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what guarantees of minimum service he has set for the Student Loans Company; [119039]

(2) what monitoring procedures he has put in place to measure the efficiency of the Student Loans Company; and if he will make a statement on performance to date. [119040]

Mr. Wicks: We set the Student Loans Company challenging performance targets each financial and academic year, which are detailed and reported on in the Company's Annual Report. Targets for the financial year 1999–2000 and academic year 1999–2000 cover lending, tuition fees, collections, customer services, managing the sold loans portfolio, and the Company's operating costs.

The latest published performance against our targets is set out in the Company's 1999 Annual Report, copies of which are available in the House Libraries.

Education Maintenance Allowances

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has to extend Education Maintenance allowances beyond the pilot schemes currently in operation; when he will announce a timetable for extending the scheme; and what criteria local education authorities must satisfy to qualify for inclusion in the Education Maintenance Allowance scheme. [119037]

Mr. Wicks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 29 March 2000 that an additional £50 million will be allocated from September 2000 to expand the education maintenance allowance (EMA) pilots. The new money will allow us to expand some of the original pilots and to introduce EMAs in 40 new areas (which were set out in the Secretary of State's announcement). We will shortly announce the model that each new area will be testing.

We have chosen a selection of new areas where we believe the EMA has the potential to make the most difference. They have relatively low post-16 participation, low GCSE attainment and high deprivation. The choice of areas also includes some additional rural areas where we will be concentrating on transports costs.

The new pilots will mean that EMAs will be available in almost a third of the country. We will be monitoring the new pilots carefully to inform future decisions about EMAs, including whether to expand further.

PRIME MINISTER

New Zealand Honours List

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the Government of New Zealand concerning the possible discontinuance by New Zealand of the practice of making nominations for knighthoods and damehoods. [119032]

The Prime Minister: None. This is a matter between the Government of New Zealand and its Head of State.

Pig Farmers

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Prime Minister if he will visit Parliament Square to meet the protesters there; and if he will ensure that the state aid available to pig farmers is processed and paid as a matter of urgency. [119447]

The Prime Minister: Under state aid rules, the European Commission must approve a scheme before it can be introduced. The scheme we announced at the farming summit on 30 March has already been formally notified to the Commission, which has two months to respond. The scheme will be introduced as soon as possible following Commission approval.

WWI Executed Soldiers (Pardons)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to discuss pardons for soldiers executed in the First World War when he next meets the Prime Minister of New Zealand. [119159]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 April 2000]: There are no such plans. The Government's position was outlined by the then Minister for the Armed Forces, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton, North and Bellshill (Dr. Reid), in a statement on 24 July 1998, Official Report, columns 1372–75.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions in the past two years he has met representatives of (a) farming unions, (b) the Country Landowners Association, (c) the Country Sports Organisation and (d) the Old Age Pensioners Association. [118888]

The Prime Minister: Over the past two years I have met farmers, countryside representatives and pensioners at a number of events. Specific examples include meetings with farmers representatives at the farming summit on 30 March 2000, countryside representatives on 11 November 1999 and pensioners at a reception for older people held on 14 June 1999. In addition, during the course of my visits throughout the country I meet and talk to a wide range of people, including pensioners and people from rural communities on a regular basis.

Colombia

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if Her Majesty's Government will discuss with other donor countries the Plan Colombia mechanisms for monitoring progress on human rights, including contact with Colombian non-governmental human rights organisations; [119450]

(2) if he raised human rights improvement during discussions on Plan Colombia with President Pastrana. [119449]

The Prime Minister: Following his talks with President Pastrana on 13 April, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs announced that the United Kingdom would be willing to convene a gathering of interested countries at official level to study the proposals in Plan Colombia in advance of the donors conference planned for July in Spain. Monitoring progress on human rights will be one of the areas discussed. During the talks on 13 April, President Pastrana reaffirmed his commitment to ensure respect for human rights.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Prime Minister what recent discussions he has had with the President of Colombia concerning British assistance for Plan Colombia. [119050]

The Prime Minister: I met President Pastrana on 13 April. We exchanged views on a number of issues, including how the international community might help President Pastrana take forward the peace process in his country. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs announced that the United Kingdom was willing to convene a gathering of interested countries at official level to study the proposals in Plan Colombia in advance of the donors conference planned for July in Spain.

DEFENCE

Weapons of Mass Destruction

2. Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent assessment has been made by his Department of the threat to the United Kingdom from (a) nuclear, (b) biological and (c) chemical weapon attack. [117880]

Mr. Hoon: As of today, our assessment is that there is no current significant threat to the UK from weapons of mass destruction. Obviously, however, we continue to monitor developments closely in conjunction with our Allies.

Royal Navy Ship Orders

24. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met management and trade union representatives from the shipbuilding industry to discuss the placing of contracts for the construction of vessels required by the Royal Navy. [117904]

Dr. Moonie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and my noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement have met both management and trade union representatives from the shipbuilding industry within the last two weeks.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will announce the next round of orders of ships for the Royal Navy. [117899]

Mr. Hoon: We hope to be in a position to announce a preferred bidder to meet our long-term strategic sealift requirement later this year. We also expect to place contracts for Survey Vessels during the summer, for Demonstration and First of Class Manufacture of the new Type 45 Anti-Air Warfare Destroyer in the autumn, and for the Alternative Landing Ship Logistic (ALSL) in late 2000. Over the longer term, our plans call for the manufacture of over 30 new major warships with contracts being placed at the appropriate time.

Kosovo

26. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the security situation in Kosovo. [117906]

29. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the military situation in Kosovo. [117909]

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the security situation in Kosovo. [117897]

Mr. Spellar: KFOR and UNMIK face a challenging security situation in Kosovo. Ethnic intimidation and violence continues, often orchestrated by a small number of extremists. British forces are making a major contribution to addressing these problems. We will ensure that British forces committed to KFOR are at the right strength, and have the necessary equipment to do their job.

We decided recently to deploy additional helicopters and unmanned aerial reconnaissance vehicles to improve KFOR's intelligence gathering capability. We are also deploying 60 members of the Ministry of Defence police to reinforce the UNMIK police, joining some 100 United Kingdom police officers already serving in Kosovo.

European Defence Co-operation

27. Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made since the Helsinki summit in improving European defence co-operation. [117907]

Mr. Hoon: We continue to make excellent progress on the European defence initiative. At the recent informal European Council in Lisbon, EU member states agreed the process for taking forward the commitment to improving capabilities made at Helsinki. The interim bodies necessary for the EU to decide on military matters were established in March.

MOD Employees (North-east)

30. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of his uniformed and civil employees are based in the North-east region; and what percentage of his uniformed employees were recruited in the North-east region. [117910]

Mr. Spellar: As at 1 October 1999 the Ministry of Defence had one per cent. of its uniformed and civilian employees based in the North-East region. These are the latest figures that are available.

The three Services recruited the following numbers of uniformed personnel in the North-east region in the financial year 1999–2000:

Royal Navy Rating Entrants 8 per cent.

Army Officers and Other Ranks 8.36 per cent.

RAF, Officers and Airmen 15.39 per cent.

There are no statistics available for Naval Officer entrants for the region as these were calculated on a different basis.

The figures represent entrants who joined through recruiting offices in the North-east region and do not necessarily mean that they are from the region.

Child Support Agency

31. Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made on reforming the service restrictions affecting deductions from service personnel pay to ensure that Child Support Agency deduction of earnings orders can be fully implemented. [117911]

Mr. Spellar: The purpose of Minimum Rates of Pay is to protect Service personnel and their families from hardship. Of the Child Support Agency maintenance awards made against Service parents, 99 per cent. are met in full. In only one in a hundred Service cases is less than the full amount of a maintenance award being paid. This contrasts with the current Child Support Agency average of only 40 per cent. of parents paying in full, with 30 per cent. paying nothing at all. Nevertheless, consideration is being given to reforming minimum Service pay regulations.

Defence Medical Services

32. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on recruitment and retention of staff in Defence Medical Services. [117912]

Dr. Moonie: As we have previously acknowledged, there are serious shortages of manpower in the regular Defence Medical Services. Manning levels over the last year have been fairly stable although the numbers leaving on premature voluntary retirement continue at higher levels than we would wish. Recruitment into training is generally satisfactory, with nurse training places and medical cadetships having been increased. Direct entry recruitment of qualified personnel is difficult, particularly of qualified doctors. Measures to improve both retention and direct entry recruitment are under consideration.

Bulgaria and Turkey

33. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contact his Department has had with (a) the headquarters of the South-East Europe Brigade at Plovdiv in Bulgaria and (b) the Partnership for Peace study centre at Ankara, Turkey. [117913]

Mr. Spellar: The United Kingdom Ministry of Defence has had limited informal contacts with the Headquarters South-East Europe Brigade, Plovdiv, Bulgaria, and the Partnership for Peace study centre in Ankara, Turkey. In the case of the Headquarters, a visit was made on 21 March by a group of Staff and Students from the Joint Services Command and Staff College during a regional tour, accompanied by the British Defence Attaché, Sofia. There has been contact between the Commander and Staff of the Partnership for Peace study centre, Ankara, and the UK Officer attached to the Regional Training Centre, Bucharest, which also has recognition as a Partnership for Peace training centre.

Representatives from the UK Armed Forces are due to attend two events at the Ankara centre later this year.

Air Transport

34. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to procure new transport aircraft to meet his Department's short-term strategic airlift requirement. [117914]

36. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the RAF's air transport capabilities. [117916]

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to procure heavy-lift aircraft in the short and medium term. [117878]

Mr. Hoon: We are continuing to assess the proposals for both our short-term and longer term airlift requirements and hope to be in a position to make a decision in the next few weeks.

RAF Scampton

35. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what units, apart from the Red Arrows, will be based at RAF Scampton. [117915]

Mr. Spellar: Currently, there are no plans to base other RAF units at RAF Scampton. However, following my recent announcement that the Red Arrows will be based at Scampton, (subject to TU consultation), we will consider ways of maximising MOD use of the retained estate. In addition, we have agreed that the firm of Bombardier can use one of the surplus hangars for aircraft maintenance, which will create job opportunities in the local area. There should also be scope to market surplus hangar capacity on the airfield site.

Recruitment

37. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if each armed service has fulfilled its recruiting targets for 1999–2000. [117917]

Mr. Spellar: The latest available figures for recruits against the 1999–2000 intake targets for each of the Armed Services are:

	Intake	Percentage of target
Naval Service	4,954	99
Army	15,671	95
RAF	4,130	96
Total Services	24,755	96

Defence Logistics Organisation

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in establishing the Defence Logistics Organisation. [117883]

Mr. Spellar: We have met the Strategic Defence Review commitment to create a single unified Defence Logistics Organisation (DLO) on time, on 3 April this year. The DLO is committed to reducing its costs by 20 per cent. by the year 2005, and these savings will go towards our continuing programme of modernisation for the UK's Armed Forces. DLO key initiatives include a lean support programme; a reduction in non-explosive stocks; about 20 per cent. reduction in current storage capacity; the introduction of the Government Purchasing Card and the development of a Defence Electronic Commerce Service.

Balkans

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of the reserve forces in supporting the regular Army in Bosnia and Kosovo. [117891]

Mr. Spellar: We continue to value the significant contribution which the reserve forces make to operations in the Balkans.

The reserves have consistently provided between 10 and 14 per cent. of the manpower for the UK's contribution to NATO operations in the former Yugoslavia since operations commenced in 1995. Currently, reservists represent some 13 per cent. of the UK force in Bosnia and some 10 per cent. in Kosovo; indeed, 18 personnel from the Royal Monmouthshire Militia based in my hon. Friend's constituency have volunteered for service in the Balkans since July 1998.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel have been (a) injured and (b) killed, in (i) Kosovo and (ii) Bosnia since NATO land forces have been involved; how many have left the UK armed services as a result of injuries sustained while there; and if he will make a statement. [119151]

Mr. Spellar: Since NATO land forces have been involved, four personnel have been killed in the Kosovo theatre of operations and 26 in the Bosnia theatre of operations to date. Injuries have been reported in respect of nine personnel in the Kosovo theatre of operations and 261 in the Bosnia theatre of operations in the period up to the end of 1999. All figures are in respect of regular armed forces personnel.

Information in respect of the number of personnel who have left the armed forces as a result of injuries sustained in Kosovo and Bosnia is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Military Equipment Contracts

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate (a) the number of contracts for the (i) repair and (ii) modification of military equipment and (b) their cumulative value which in 1998–99 were subject to (A) an open and (B) a restrictive tender. [117895]

Dr. Moonie: In 1998–99 there were 2,307 contracts awarded for repair activities. Of these, 1,211 with a cumulative value of around £278 million were awarded as a result of competition, and the remaining 1,096 (valued at around £676 million) were non-competitive.

In the same year, 224 contracts for modification of equipment were awarded. Of these, 120 contracts with a cumulative value of around £14 million were awarded as a result of competition. The remaining 104 contracts (valued at around £66 million) were non-competitive.

De-mining

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance his Department is giving in the clearing of land mines. [117898]

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to assist those involved in humanitarian de-mining. [117892]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, North (Helen Jones) today, Official Report, column 688.

US National Missile Defence System

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what co-operation his Department is having with the US Department of Defense concerning the National Missile Defence system. [117908]

Mr. Hoon: We have dialogue with the US Administration on their possible deployment of a National Missile Defence system. The US has not asked for UK assistance in the deployment of the system, nor would we expect them to do so until after a US decision has been made on whether or not to proceed with its deployment.

DERA

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that the effectiveness of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency will be maintained if the proposals for its part-privatisation are implemented. [118987]

Mr. Hoon: The Government concluded in the Strategic Defence Review that, in order to guarantee the ability of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) to continue to conduct world-class research, we would harness the opportunities offered by a Public Private Partnership. Last year's consultation exercise on a potential PPP proposal produced a wide range of useful comments from stakeholders.

As a result of this process, I announced in October that we would be widening the scope of our discussion to take these comments into account. That work is now complete and has led to the development of two revised models for potential PPP structures, known as "Core Competence" and the "Public Sector Option". A detailed evaluation of these options indicates that Core Competence best meets the PPP objectives while also responding to the views of stakeholders. Both models are described in a consultation document which has been placed in the Library of the House and which is also available on the internet at www.mod.uk/commercial/ppp/dera/.

The essence of Core Competence is a clear separation of those functions which are best developed within a PPP, and those which are best performed wholly within Government. Around three quarters of DERA would be turned into a company, which we would hope to float on the stock market as soon as its potential is judged to be suitably developed. A core of staff would be retained wholly within the MOD to provide a high level overview of defence science and technology. This ensures that MOD would retain access to in-house impartial advice and allows management of the defence research programme and international research collaboration. Specific very sensitive areas and programmes would also be retained.

I believe that this approach would create two vibrant sustainable organisations. The new company would have the freedom to flourish, to grow its business and to diversify the wealth of knowledge it has built up over the years to the benefit of the wider UK economy while still providing the MOD with the essential services we will continue to need long into the future. The retained organisation will be a small but also world-class organisation offering rewarding careers within MOD and the wider civil service.

This approach is good for DERA, good for MOD and good for the wider UK economy. It will provide the UK technology sector with added impetus and ensure we are well placed to take on the challenges and opportunities offered by the 21st century.

All stakeholders are now being invited to submit their views on the revised proposals. As the exercise has proved, we are willing to listen and to respond to comments before taking a final decision.

Army (Drugs Offences)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is the practice that soldiers convicted of serious charges relating to drugs offences and who (a) are facing or (b) have served custodial sentences are dismissed from the Army; and if he will make a statement. [118879]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 April 2000]: All soldiers, wherever they are serving, are liable for Compulsory Drug Testing (CDT). CDT is primarily an administrative, not a disciplinary matter. Following a positive test result or the refusal to provide a specimen, an Army officer would be required to resign, and a soldier will normally be administratively discharged. A commanding officer does, however, have the discretion to retain soldiers of the rank of Lance Corporal or below if:

(a) It was the first occasion on which drug misuse had been detected, or the first occasion on which he or she had refused to undergo testing, and

(b) In the case of a positive test result, no trace of Class A drugs was detected and,

(c) In all other respects the individual is considered a good serviceman or woman whose retention would be in the interest of the service.

To serve a custodial sentence a soldier would need to be found guilty of a disciplinary offence following which the rules contained in Queen's Regulations 9.404 would come into effect. The rules state that a soldier is to be discharged if he has been sentenced by a civil court or by court-martial to imprisonment or to detention or to any other form of custodial sentence. If in the opinion of the commanding officer there are exceptional reasons that make retention of the soldier desirable then the case is to be submitted with valid and explicit reasons to the Director of Manning (Army) for a decision.

Defence Estate Review

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will publish the conclusions of his Department's review of the Defence Estate in Greater London. [119317]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the then Under-Secretary of State gave the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 18 January 2000, Official Report, columns 405–06W.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Lime Grove site owned by his Department in Eastcote, Middlesex. [119319]

Dr. Moonie: The Eastcote site was formally transferred to my Department by the Department of Trade and Industry on 31 March 2000. Its future is being considered as part of our wider review of the Department's estate holdings in London. If it is determined that the Eastcote site is surplus to defence needs, the property will be disposed of.

Married Quarters

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military married quarters were sold in the UK during 1999; and how much revenue was raised by the sales. [118833]

Dr. Moonie: The majority of Service Families Accommodation (SFA) in England and Wales was sold to Annington Homes Limited (AHL) on 5 September 1996, on a 999-year lease. The Ministry of Defence leases back those properties it requires to house Service families on a 200-year lease. Those properties not required for Service use are released to AHL, as they become available. 1,472 properties were disposed of in this way in 1999 calendar year. The amount raised from these sales is a matter for AHL.

In addition, Defence Estates remains responsible for a small number of SFA's in England and Wales and all of those in Scotland. Of these, 478 have been disposed of in the period providing revenue of £10,437,516.

RAF Neatishead

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of RAF Neatishead. [119283]

Mr. Spellar: As I explained in my letter of 5 April to the hon. Member, work in relation to the future of RAF Neatishead is ongoing. It is hoped that this work will be completed by late spring, when I will write to the hon. Member again. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

US-licensed Anthrax Vaccine

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his letter of 19 March, Ref. D/Min/(AF)JS/0906/00/P, what conclusions he has drawn from his scrutiny of the report of the Congressional Committee on National Security which reviewed the US Department of Defense's policy on the use of US-licensed anthrax vaccine and the way in which that policy had been implemented. [117973]

Mr. Spellar: We have studied the Committee's report and a response by the US Department of Defense refuting the Committee's findings. These concerned both the safety and efficacy of the US anthrax vaccine and the scope of the US Department of Defense's mandatory immunisation programme. The anthrax vaccine produced in the UK differs from the US product and is administered in a different way. Independent advice in both the UK and the US has confirmed that vaccination against anthrax is safe and effective. Against this background, it remains our policy that vaccination against anthrax has an important part to play as one of a range of measures to provide protection against biological weapons for our armed forces.

RAF Bruggen

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the expenditure on (a) runway resurfacing, (b) hardened bunkers and (c) other capital expenditure at RAF Bruggen over the past five years. [119182]

Mr. Spellar: No expenditure at RAF Bruggen has been incurred on the provision of runway resurfacing or hardened bunkers over the past five years. Other capital expenditure on facilities at Bruggen over this period amounts to £9.295 million, including VAT. These facilities will be used by the Army, who will be transferring units there when the RAF withdraw.

TREASURY

Minimum Wage and Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when definitive estimates on the number of people who have benefited from (a) the national minimum wage and (b) the working families tax credit by parliamentary constituency will be available; and if he will make a statement. [114569]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested on the national minimum wage falls within the responsibility of the Office for National Statistics (ONS). I understand from ONS that definitive estimates by constituency of the number of people that have benefited from the national minimum wage are not yet available. Up to the end of March 2000, there had been 1.03 million awards made of the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) in the United Kingdom. Available figures by constituency are given in the tables which have been deposited in the Library.

C154 Certificates

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many C154 certificates have been issued since the start of the scheme; and how many requests for C154 certificates have been rejected. [118605]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue has issued 781,742 registration cards. This includes not only permanent cards but also temporary cards and replacement cards. The Inland Revenue does not keep a record of applications where registration cards are refused.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what checks on eligibility are made in respect of an applicant before a C154 certificate is issued. [118604]

Dawn Primarolo: Where a person works as a subcontractor on a contract to which the Construction Industry Scheme applies they must register with the Inland Revenue if the contractor is to comply with the rules of the scheme when paying them for the work they do. If the contractor does not comply with the rules of the scheme they may incur a penalty.

Subcontractors who are not eligible to receive a certificate entitling them to receive payment gross will be issued with a registration card. This card must be presented, in person, to the contractor before payment can be made. Payments to registration card holders are made after deduction of 18 per cent. on account of tax and Class 4 National Insurance. Under the old scheme, only those who wished to receive payment gross needed to apply to the Inland Revenue for a card. The registration card has been successful in ensuring that 50,000 subcontractors, who were previously unknown to the Inland Revenue, have now registered with a tax office.

In order to register for the scheme an individual must take a completed application form, together with a recent passport size photograph and two proofs of identify, one of which must carry a photograph and one must show their current address, to a tax office.

An individual who also has proof of their National Insurance number, which can be validated by the Inland Revenue through the NIRS system, will be issued with a permanent registration card—CIS4(P). An individual who is unable to provide proof of their National Insurance number, or whose number cannot be validated, is issued with a temporary registration card—CIS4(T) which is only valid for up to three months. The temporary registration card is replaced once the Inland Revenue has validated the individual's National Insurance number.

To date the Inland Revenue have issued approximately 61,000 temporary registration cards, of which over 54,000 have now expired.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people will receive the Working

Families Tax Credit from 18 April (a) in the Stoke-on-Trent, South constituency and (b) in Stoke-on-Trent as a whole. [118591]

Dawn Primarolo: For the Stoke-on-Trent, South constituency, I refer my hon. Friend to my answer today, Official Report, column 370W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Marsden). It is estimated that 6,200 families in Stoke-on-Trent have been awarded the Working Families Tax Credit by the end of March 2000.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families are in receipt of the working families tax credit in the Crosby constituency; and what percentage they constitute of the total number of families in the constituency. [118685]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 11 April 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer today, Official Report, column 370W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Marsden) for the number of Working Families Tax Credit awards in Crosby. Estimates of the number of families at constituency level are not available.

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families in Dartford will benefit from the increase in the under-16 child credit in the working families tax credit. [118823]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer today, Official Report, column 370W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Marsden). Almost all families having new awards, or renewing awards, from June 2000 will benefit from the increase in the under 16 child credit.

Helen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families are in receipt of the working families tax credit in (a) Warrington and (b) Warrington North constituency. [118856]

Dawn Primarolo: The information is contained in the table relating to the answer I have today given my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Marsden), Official Report, column 370W.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Brake: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's energy efficiency performance target expressed as a percentage change in comparison to 1990–91 for each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [118993]

Mr. Timms: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 22 March 2000, Official Report, columns 548–49W. It was explained then that a new target had been set across the Government estate to apply from 2000–01, of a 1 per cent. per annum reduction in greenhouse gas emissions. My Department will aim to meet this target. It represents a change against the previous cross Government target to 31 March 2000 which was expressed in terms of reductions in energy expenditure. Measurement in greenhouse gas emissions provides a much better fit with the current climate change programme and the UK's Kyoto targets. The base year will be 1999–2000 as it was the final year to which the previous target applied. Figures will be released when they are available on performance in 1999–2000 against the target to 31 March 2000 with 1990–91 as the base year.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage change compared to 1990–91 in his Department's energy efficiency in each year since 1990–91; and if he will make a statement. [118992]

Mr. Timms: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale), on 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 582W which reports progress for all central government departments by 31 March 1998. I hope to publish shortly results for the period up to March 1999.

Exports

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 15 March 2000, Official Report, columns 187–88W, what assessment he has made of the recent trends in export volumes; and if he will make a statement. [118849]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 14 April 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to Chapter B (The Economy) of the Financial Statement and Budget Report published on 21 March 2000.

Tobacco Duties

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the hypothecated expenditure in the current financial year for the NHS resulting from the increase in tobacco duties announced in the Budget. [119214]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 14 April 2000]: The extra £2 billion in 2000–01 allocated for the National Health Service by the Chancellor in the Budget is inclusive of £235 million, which is the anticipated yield for the 5 per cent. real terms increase in tobacco duty in that year.

Anti-depressants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on death caused by (a) Dothiepin and (b) other anti-depressant drugs. [118889]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Kidgell to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 17 April 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), has been asked to reply to your recent question on the causes of death from Dothiepin and other anti-depressant drugs. I am replying in the Director's absence.

Information on the underlying causes of drug-related deaths where Dothiepin or other antidepressants are mentioned is given in the attached table. The data has been extracted from the ONS drug-related deaths database.

Number of drug-related deaths with a mention of Dothiepin or other anti-depressants by underlying cause, England and Wales usual residents, 1993–97

Underlying cause of death[1]	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Dothiepin[2]
Drug dependence/abuse	3	1	4	5	2
Accident	40	38	34	44	37
Suicide and Undetermined	155	207	190	218	261
Drug Psychoses/assault	0	0	0	0	0
Total	198	246	228	267	255

Drug Psychoses/assault	0	0	0	0	0
Total	256	225	258	270	279

[1] The underlying cause of death are categorised as follows:
Deaths with the underlying cause codes 304, 305.2–9, using ICD9 where the named substance was mentioned on the death certificate
Deaths with the underlying cause codes E850-E858, using ICD9 where the named substance was mentioned on the death certificate
Deaths with the underlying cause codes E950.0–5, E980.0–5, using ICD9 where the named substance was mentioned on the death certificate
Deaths with the underlying cause codes 292, E962.0, using ICD9 where the named substance was mentioned on the death certificate
[2] These figures for Dothiepin include all deaths where drugs containing Dothiepin Hydrochloride were mentioned (including any mention of the brand name Prothiaden)
[3] Death with a mention of antidepressants but with no mention of drugs containing dothiepin hydrochloride

Office for National Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the reasons for the time taken to outsource Office for National Statistics projects as recommended by the Treasury Taskforce; and if he will make a statement on the current policy in respect of outsourcing work at the Office for National Statistics. [118885]

Mr. Timms: In February 1999, the then Economic Secretary announced a programme of efficiencies for the Office for National Statistics (ONS) which was expected to release £20 million through a combination of internal efficiency and outsourcing. These savings would be reinvested in the ONS to improve the range and quality of the statistical information it produces.

The programme of internal efficiency has proceeded and is releasing savings. The outsourcing of the facilities management services is also nearing completion, according to the original timetable, and should offer the ONS considerable savings.

However, before any outsourcing of other activities, we have asked the ONS to review their business strategies and to consider to what extent the private sector can contribute to their achievement. Government policy remains to draw on the best of the public and private sector to deliver modern, high quality, public services.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to improve the efficiency of the Office for National Statistics, with particular reference to the in-sourcing of work that can be undertaken cost-effectively there. [118886]

Mr. Timms: The Office for National Statistics is currently undertaking an Efficiency Programme which aims, through a combination of internal efficiencies and outsourcing of central services, to release £20 million to improve the quality and range of its statistics.

The internal efficiencies achieved, since the beginning of the Programme in February 1999 are summarised as follows:

	Amount in 2000–01
IS development	205,000
IS consolidation	750,000
Accounts processing	100,000
Merge Marketing/Press	100,000
Merge Personnel/HRD	100,000
Reduce property holdings	300,000
Total	1,555,000

The ONS is also reviewing a range of other areas to achieve more internal efficiency savings. Examples of the activities involved include finance and planning, general administration and document output. In addition, business areas such as Business and Prices and the Registration service are undergoing major efficiency reviews which will consider the most cost effective approach to these areas of work.All of these internal efficiencies, together with the rest of the ONS Efficiency Programme, will help ensure that resources are focused towards the delivery of a high quality statistical service.

Environmental Taxes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the losses to the National Insurance Fund from the reductions of employers' contributions resulting from the introduction of the landfill tax, the climate change levy and the aggregates levy (a) separately and (b) in total, for each year from their introduction to 2010–11; and what proposals he has to compensate the Fund for that loss. [118934]

Dawn Primarolo: Budget 2000 confirmed that the climate change levy will be introduced from April 2001 and the aggregates levy from April 2002. The revenues from these levies will be recycled to business through cuts in employer NICS of 0.3 and 0.1 percentage points respectively. This is consistent with the Government's approach to shifting the burden of taxation from "goods" such as labour to "bads" such as environmental pollution.

The estimated costs of the reduction in employer NICS for each year until 2010–11 are shown in the table. This represents the costs of a 0.3 percentage point reduction in employer NICS from April 2001 and a 0.4 percentage point reduction from April 2002.

£ billion

Year	Exchequer cost of reduction in employer NICS
2001–02	1.0
2002–03	1.4
2003–04	1.5
2004–05	1.6
2005–06	1.7
2006–07	1.7

£ billion

Year	Exchequer cost of reduction in employer NICS
2007–08	1.8
2008–09	1.9
2009–10	2.0
2010–11	2.1

The Treasury Grant provides a mechanism for the balances on the fund to be maintained at the level recommended by the Government Actuary as the appropriate minimum balance.

Betting Duty

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the actual and estimated yield from betting duty for the years 1996 to 2001. [119452]

Mr. Timms: Information on the actual yield from betting duty can be found in "HM Customs and Excise Annual Report", Table L2 "Betting, Gaming and Lottery: Receipts". The estimated yield from betting and gaming duties in 1999–2000 and in 2000–01 can be found in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report March 2000", Table C9 "Public Sector Current Receipts".

National Insurance Records

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to deal with delays in processing national insurance records in the Newcastle centre; and if he will make a statement. [117967]

Dawn Primarolo: Inland Revenue National Insurance Contributions Office process information onto National Insurance accounts, and although it is recognised that there have been delays in finalising this work in the Newcastle centre, they are implementing a programme of recovery to clear the work items on hand caused by earlier difficulties.

Constant monitoring ensures delays are kept to a minimum.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Electronic Tagging

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral statements of 29 November 1999, Official Report, columns 26–27 and 28 March 2000, Official Report, column 234, and to his answer to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and the Weald of 29 March 2000, Official Report, column 145W, what types of offender serving sentences of four or more years he estimates will be released earlier than at present as the result of the availability of electronic monitoring as a condition of release on licence, under the provisions of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, with particular reference to offenders convicted of (a) homicide, (b) drugs offences, (c) robbery, (d) assaults, (e) firearms offences, (f) burglary and (g) terrorist offences; if he will define the term serious offenders, used in his oral statement of 29 November; if it is his policy that the timing of the release of (i) serious, (ii) high-risk and (iii) sex offenders should not be influenced by the electronic monitoring provisions of the Bill; and if he will make a statement. [118307]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 7 April 2000]: The electronic monitoring measures in the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill will not change the timing of any prisoner's eligibility for release. The basis of any discretionary release decision will continue to be careful risk assessment. The use of the new licence conditions will be subject to piloting before full implementation. Evaluation of the pilots will include consideration of the impact of the new licence conditions on discretionary release decisions taken by the Parole Board and by the Prison Service, on behalf of the Secretary of State.

In the vast majority of cases, we anticipate that the availability of electronic monitoring as a licence condition will have no impact on release decisions.

Prison Service Orders will make clear there are no circumstances in which the availability of the new electronic monitoring provisions in the Bill should influence decisions on release made by the Prison Service, on behalf of the Secretary of State.

In addition, using the powers available to him under section 32(6) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, the Home Secretary will direct the Parole Board that in considering certain types of case, decisions on release should not be influenced by the availability of the new powers of electronic monitoring in the Bill. The Home Secretary's Directions to the Parole Board will cover any sex offender required to register under the Sex Offenders Act 1997, and any sexual or violent offender who is serving an "extended sentence" as provided for in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. The Directions will also apply to all prisoners serving a licence sentence, to other prisoners serving a determinate sentence for homicide or attempted homicide, terrorism, arson, robbery or assault and to any other prisoner whose offending or other behaviour suggests that he poses a clear risk of violence to the public. This definition could include prisoners convicted of drugs offences, firearms offences or burglary, depending on the circumstances of the cases.

The types of case where the use of electronic monitoring may provide sufficient extra reassurance to influence a decision in favour of release are expected to be those where the Parole Board is considering prisoners who are at the lower end of the offending scale (within the category of prisoners eligible for parole), and who pose no obvious risk of violence to the public.

It is, therefore clear that the Home Secretary's policy is that the timing of the release of serious, high risk and sex offenders, as defined above, should not be influenced by the electronic monitoring provisions of the Bill.

The term "serious offenders" has different legal definitions in different contexts. In the context of my oral statement of 29 November, the term "serious offenders" was a reference to those prisoners serving sentences of four years or more who will be covered by the planned Directions to the Parole Board.

Immigration Checks (Young People)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what immigration checks are made on

(a) young children and (b) young people allowed into the UK; how such checks are followed up; and if he will make a statement. [118390]

Mrs. Roche: The normal requirements of the Immigration Rules apply to persons under the age of 18. For a British Citizen or other European Economic Area national the immigration officer establishes nationality and identity to confirm exemption from the immigration control. For other nationalities, the immigration officer must be satisfied that the individual is eligible for entry for the purpose requested.

Every effort is made to try to ensure that inquiries or an interview are conducted in the presence of a responsible adult either accompanying or meeting a child.

Once granted entry, the normal requirements apply in respect of those seeking an extension of stay, or with failure to observe the time limit which render the child's or young person's stay unlawful.

Metropolitan Police (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women from ethnic minority backgrounds are officers of the Metropolitan Police Force; and what ranks are held by these officers. [118502]

Mr. Straw: The information requested is given in the table, provided by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, and represents the position as at 31 March 2000.

Rank	Total Male	Female
Chief Superintendent	2	0
Detective Chief Superintendent	0	0
Superintendent	3	0
Detective Superintendent	0	0
Chief Inspector	4	0
Detective Chief Inspector	3	1
Inspector	16	1
Detective Inspector	5	0
Sergeant	70	6.69
Detective Sergeant	18	1
Constable	615.6	180.16
Detective Constable	75	12

Vulnerable Adults

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation to make police checks on people working with vulnerable adults compulsory; and if he will make a statement. [118738]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Criminal Records Bureau, which is being established under Part V of the Police Act 1997, will provide information from police and criminal records to employers, voluntary organisations and others in positions of responsibility for vulnerable adults. The 1997 Act does not make such checks compulsory. It is for those organisations and others, including departments and authorities with responsibility for employing people in positions of trust, to lay down their particular vetting requirements and procedures. This might include legislating for particular sectors where this is considered appropriate.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that asylum seekers in receipt of food vouchers are able to purchase food required for dietary or religious reasons, including halal meat. [118869]

Mrs. Roche: Our voucher provider, Sodexho Pass, is required to ensure that vouchers can be exchanged in a wide variety of retail outlets. A number of major retail stores accept the vouchers. In addition, Sodexho Pass have contracted with a large number of independent retailers, including stores supplying specialist dietary or religious needs.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 3 April 2000, Official Report, columns 366–68W, concerning applications for asylum, what grounds are required for admission of persons seeking asylum from each applicant state; what grounds have been regarded as acceptable in respect of those granted asylum; when he expects to publish complete figures for 1999; and what representations the Government have made to applicant Governments about such claims. [118865]

Mrs. Roche: All asylum applications, regardless of the applicant's nationality, are considered in accordance with the criteria set out in the 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees. To qualify for asylum a person must be outside his/her country of nationality and have a well-founded fear of persecution for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion. Those who meet these criteria are granted asylum; those who do not meet the requirements of the 1951 Convention may nevertheless be granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom if there are exceptional compelling humanitarian reasons why they should not be required to leave. Asylum statistics for 1999 are expected to be published in June 2000.

Ministers and officials regularly take the opportunity to discuss the question of migration to the United Kingdom with the Governments of applicant nations. These discussions include measures which may be taken to prevent the possible abuse of the United Kingdom's immigration legislation and asylum process.

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which cities have been judged appropriate for the housing of asylum seekers with HIV infection under the new dispersal arrangements. [118948]

Mrs. Roche: We have not selected particular areas for those with HIV infection. Instead, when asylum seekers make an application for asylum they are invited to indicate whether they have any special needs. Consideration is given on a case-by-case basis to those needs both in terms of the accommodation and support package and the proximity to any medical treatment which may be required.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost is to his Department as of the week commencing 9 April of placing (a) unaccompanied minors, (b) single asylum seekers and (c) asylum seekers' families with children in the cities of (i) Glasgow, (ii) Edinburgh, (iii) Liverpool, (iv) Sheffield and (v) Newcastle; and if he will make a statement. [118967]

Mrs. Roche: The information is not available.

The National Asylum Support Service has contracts with a number of private sector contractors. The information on contract price is commercially confidential. In any event, this information is not disaggregated by area of location.

The Home Office is not responsible for the costs of unaccompanied minors.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the Government spent on research and development in relation to methods of conducting (a) animal experiments and (b) non-animal alternatives to vivisection in 1999; and if he will make a statement. [118826]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Most work done on alternatives is neither done by the Government nor with Government money. Nonetheless, each year, the Home Office makes available to the Animal Procedures Committee (APC) a budget for the research into the development and promotion of alternatives which replace animal use, reduce the number of animals used or refine the procedures involved to minimise suffering. Work aimed at improving the environmental conditions in which laboratory animals are kept and transported has also been sponsored. Through national advertising, the APC Research and Alternatives Sub-Committee invites applications for funding of suitable projects. It then selects the most appropriate and monitors progress. Details of completed research for 1998 is published in the Report of the Animal Procedures Committee for 1998.

The budget available to the Committee in 1998–99 for this purpose was £259,000 (an increase of 42 per cent. from £182,000 the previous year). However, this is not the only money spent by the Government on alternatives: other Departments also fund such work; estimates of spending reach approximately £2 million each year. Industry, too, spends millions of pounds each year on the search for and development of alternatives.

On an international level, the United Kingdom Government will continue to support the European Centre for the Validation of Alternative Methods (now known as the Unit for the Validation of Biological Testing Methods) through contributions to the European Union. It is the unit's task to monitor and co-ordinate research into alternatives and to develop the processes of validation—that is, the assessment of alternative methods to see whether they are reliable and whether they produce a level of information similar to the animal based tests they are to replace. The lack of progress in some areas is more often due to the limitations of science than to inadequate funding.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations have been made to him on the LD50 tests in the last six months; and if he will make a statement; [118900]

(2) what representations have been made to him this year on licences for the LD50 tests; if his Department examines alternative methods before granting such licences; and if he will make a statement. [118902]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Halton (Mr. Twigg) on 21 October 1999, Official Report, column 624W and to the replies I gave the hon. Gentleman on 4 april 2000, Official Report, column 437W and on 10 April 2000, Official Report, column 72W.

No new licences authorising the LD50 test (Organisation for Economic Co-Operation and Development Guide 401) have been issued since 21 October 1999. Representations made on two licences under section 12 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 were both withdrawn recently and the licence holders have agreed to submit the licences for removal of authority for the LD50 test.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations have been made to him on reducing the number of dogs used in regulatory toxicology; and if he will make a statement. [118901]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government recognise the particular concern about the use of dogs in scientific procedures. Under the terms of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, animals may only be used where there are no alternatives and where the benefits of the programme outweigh any suffering caused to the animals concerned. In addition, certain species (such as dogs, cats and primates) can only be used where animals of no other species are suitable. Special conditions, tailored to each project, control and minimise any pain or suffering caused.

I receive correspondence from members of the public who find it particularly difficult to accept that species that are kept as domestic pets or companion animals are also used in procedures. Such animals must be purpose-bred and supplied only by designated establishments. Dogs are only used in about 0.25 per cent. of all procedures. (The results of this work have produced medicines which have cured illness, saved human lives and indeed added to veterinary science which have assisted animal care.)

I have not received representations direct, but I am aware of recent campaign material on the subject from the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection.

Animal Procedures Committee

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what advice (a) he and (b) his officials gave to the Chairman of the Animal Procedures Committee about the resignation of Dr. David Christopher from the Animal Procedures Committee in 1997; and what advice he has given to the Chairman about Gill Langley's membership of the Committee; [118907]

(2) when he was informed that Gill Langley was the author of the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection report on Harlan UK; [118905]

(3) following the report from Home Office officials on the credibility of the BUAV report on Harlan UK, what assessment he has made of the extent to which Gill Langley met the requirement for members of the Animal Procedures Committee to act in good faith and to the highest standards of impartiality, integrity and objectivity. [118906]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The authorship of the report of the findings of the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection investigation at Harlan UK Hillcrest (published in June 1999) was not formally notified to the Secretary of State until 29 March 2000. I understand that a member of the Animal Procedures Committee declared an interest when the subject was raised at the Committee's meeting on 9 February. I have no assessment to offer on her role as Committee member: nor has advice about her membership (which is an appointment made by the Secretary of State) been given to the Chairman.

Dr. Christopher resigned from the Animal Procedures Committee in 1997, after the establishment with which he was associated was investigated by the Home Office. Again, no direction was given by the Secretary of State nor officials to the then Chairman or to that member. As was proper, the Secretariat to the Committee advised the Chairman only on how to handle discussion of the investigation at the relevant meetings of the Committee.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the reasons are for the delay in the forwarding of appeals papers by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to the Appellate Authority, relating to the case of Immigration Reference No. GAN75908, Home Office Reference Number IMP01009547/2(S), PO23042/99, in accordance with assurances given to the hon. Member for Wakefield on 23 December 1999; and if he will make a statement. [118839]

Mrs. Roche: The Immigration Service sent the appropriate appeals papers for this case to the Appellate Authorities on 22 January 2000. Unfortunately there is no record of receipt. To avoid further delay, duplicate papers were then sent by facsimile on 10 March but, in this form, they were not acceptable to the Appellant Authority. The Immigration and Nationality Directorate will now forward a full bundle to the Authority as a matter of urgency.

Lord Archer

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many person-hours the Metropolitan police have committed to date to investigating the allegations that Lord Archer of Weston-Super-Mare had sought to persuade a potential witness to commit perjury in the Daily Star libel case. [118928]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has informed me that up to 12 April, members of the Organised Crime Group have spent approximately 720 hours on the investigation of allegations of perjury made against Lord Archer.

Crime Fighting Fund (Dartford)

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the 5,000 additional police officers which funding from the Crime Fighting Fund will create will be allocated to the Dartford area. [118825]

Mr. Straw: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made on 9 February 2000, Official Report, columns 172–74W, which set out details of the share of the 5,000 recruits under the Crime Fighting Fund for all forces in England and Wales. My reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) on 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 1–3W gave details of additional money for fighting crime and that the three year Crime Fighting Fund would be brought forward with the aim of delivering the recruitment scheme over two years.

It is for the Chief Constable of Kent to decide how to deploy the additional officers he has been allocated under the Crime Fighting Fund. Power to set establishment levels for each force was removed by the previous Government in 1994, under the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994. It is for chief officers to determine staffing requirements within the overall resources available.

Police Vehicle Accidents

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were (a) killed and (b) injured in each of the last five years in accidents involving police vehicles while answering emergency calls. [119206]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Figures dealing with responses to emergency calls are not available centrally as statistics collate them together with accidents arising from pursuits. Information has been provided by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary, to whom forces submit statistical returns.

Crime (Alcohol and Drugs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of crimes committed by those under the influence of (a) alcohol and (b) heroin in each of the last three years. [118890]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Statistical data are collected on offences involving alcohol or illegal drugs only, not on offences which may have been committed under the influence of alcohol or illegal drugs. A report published in 1998 on research carried out during 1996 and 1997 on behalf of the Home Office by the University of Cambridge sheds light on the links between alcohol, drugs and crime, Further data collected during 1998 and 1999 are currently being analysed as part of the NEW-ADAM programme for interviewing and drug testing arrestees. It is hoped to publish the next set of full results in the first half of this year.

The research undertaken so far on drug testing of arrestees, based in five locations, indicates that three-quarters (74 per cent.) of arrestees had recently taken at least one illegal drug and/or alcohol prior to arrest. The proportion of arrestees testing positive for alcohol average 25 per cent., while that for heroin/opiates was 18 per cent. These findings confirm the supposition that offenders tend to be heavy consumers of drugs.

While this study considerably advances knowledge of drugs-crime links, it will always be difficult to calculate a single percentage figure reflecting precisely what proportion of all crime is alcohol- or drug-related.

Figures on drug offences in 1998 were published in February 2000 in Home Office Statistical Bulletin Number 3/00 "Drug seizure and offender statistics, United Kingdom, 1998". Some alcohol-related statistics are also published. Figures on breath tests were published in Statistical Bulletin 16/99 "Breath Test Statistics, England and Wales, 1998", motoring offences in Statistical Bulletin 12/99 "Motoring Offences, England and Wales, 1997"; other offences involving alcohol are included in "Criminal Statistics England and Wales 1998" published in March 2000. Copies of all these publications are in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent in the past three years in prisons to deal with misuse of (a) illegal drugs and (b) alcohol. [118887]

Mr. Boateng: Information is readily available only about spending on elements of the drug strategy which are co-ordinated centrally. The figures are:

1997–98: £9 million

1998–99: £9 million and, following the Comprehensive Spending Review,

1999–2000: £31.5 million.

In addition, establishments will have funded locally driven drugs and alcohol initiatives, details of which are not collected centrally.

Probation Service

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department will continue with the second phase of the Probation Information Technology programme called Copernicus; and if he will make a statement [119333]

Mr. Boateng: Yes. Phase 2 of the Copernicus project is under way.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many probation properties have clear legal titles in England and Wales; [119330]

(2) what is the current value of the Probation Estate in England and Wales. [119328]

Mr. Boateng: The current value of the probation non-hostel estate in England and Wales is estimated to be in the region of £52 million. Further work will be undertaken to verify the legal titles of all premises used by probation services in England and Wales, and until then it is not possible to quantify property holdings that do not have clear titles.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) who he commissioned to develop a Probation Estate Transitional Strategy; what were the principal conclusions of that strategy; and if he will make a statement; [119327]

(2) what consultations he has had with probation organisations prior to the decision to accept the recommendations in the Probation Estate Transitional Strategy; and if he will make a statement; [119297]

(3) what representations he has received concerning the Probation Estate Transitional Strategy; and if he will make a statement; [119296]

(4) if he will publish the cost/benefit analysis for the options contained in the Probation Estate Transitional Strategy; and if he will make a statement; [119295]

(5) if he will publish the business case for the Probation Estate Transitional Strategy; and if he will make a statement; [119294]

(6) if he will make a statement on the implications of the Audit Commission studies of the management of the police estate and local authority estate for the Probation Estate Transitional Strategy; and if he will make a statement. [119298]

Mr. Boateng: The Probation Estate Transitional Strategy was an internal document produced by officials in the Home Office. It drew on the advice provided by a consultants' report, but was not dependent upon that report. Prior to and during the formulation of the Probation Estate Transitional Strategy, Home Office officials consulted with the principal probation management organisations, Central Probation Council (CPC) and Association of Chief Officers of Probation (ACOP), who are represented through the Probation Estate Advisory Committee. Some 10 representations concerning the Probation Estate Transitional Strategy have been received, from probation committees/boards and from the probation organisations, CPC and ACOP. Forty six probation services also responded to a request for comments on the consultants' area survey reports.

A business case and cost/benefit analysis are contained in the consultant's report which will be published in due course and a copy placed in the Library.

In 1999, the Audit Commission published "Action Stations—a management handbook on improving the management of the police estate". Management of the much smaller national probation estate presents a very different set of issues, but as much of the good practice guidance has generic application to all property management, it provides a useful reference source/guide.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what claims he expects for compensation from companies who are unsuccessful in bidding for the Case Recording and Management System for Probation Service in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [119301]

Mr. Boateng: Any procurement for Information Technology for a new case recording and management system for probation services in England and Wales will be conducted in accordance with regulations and, therefore, there would be no grounds for compensation.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will authorise a further version of the Case Recording and Management System for the Probation Service in England and Wales to take into account the changes contained in the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill; and if he will make a statement. [119300]

Mr. Boateng: Work is currently under way to consider the implications of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill for Probation Service Information Technology systems.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the assessment conducted by Amey Vecta Ltd. on the effectiveness of probation information technology in Merseyside; and if he will make a statement. [119299]

Mr. Boateng: This is an independent report commissioned by and prepared for Merseyside Probation Service. Publication is a matter for that Service.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if existing contracts to install and maintain probation information technology will be renewed; and if he will make a statement. [119430]

Mr. Boateng: The existing contracts for supply and maintenance run until the end of 2001. A new procurement will be undertaken for contracts thereafter.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to use the Private Finance Initiative in relation to the probation estate; and if he will make a statement. [119331]

Mr. Boateng: No decisions have been taken about the future financing of the probation estate in England and Wales as a whole and a range of options, including Private Finance Initiative (PFI), will be considered in due course. Local PFI initiatives are already being considered for probation services in Mid Glamorgan and Avon and Somerset.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what implications the Probation Estate Transitional Strategy has for staff levels; and if he will make a statement. [119332]

Mr. Boateng: The matter is under consideration at present. It will, however, be a matter for the new probation boards to determine their staffing needs.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the management of the Probation Estate will be the subject of external tenders in line with existing procurement rules; and if he will make a statement. [119329]

Mr. Boateng: It is proposed that management of the probation estate be carried out by a dedicated central team. However, should any external specialised property management services be procured by this management team, then these will of course follow the procurement rules then in force.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Libel Awards

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions since 1986 the (a) damages and (b) costs awarded to a successful litigant in a libel action against a national newspaper have exceeded £499,000 in the case of (a) and £699,000 in the case of (b). [118909]

Jane Kennedy: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Community Legal Service (Dartford)

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when a community legal service partnership is due to be created to cover the Dartford area. [118842]

Mr. Lock: The South Eastern Legal Services Committee will shortly be consulting on their plan for developing CLS Partnerships in the region. The plan proposes that CLS Partnerships should be rolled out in four phases. Dartford has been listed as one of the areas in the fourth phase. We hope that Dartford will form a CLS Partnership by spring 2001. If it proves possible to form a CLS Partnership in this area earlier, the Lord Chancellor will give serious consideration to supporting any such proposal.

CABINET OFFICE

Mr. Peter Wyman

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office in what (a) paid and (b) unpaid capacity Mr. Peter Wyman of PricewaterhouseCoopers has assisted Her Majesty's Government during the period 1987 to 2000. [117039]

Mr. Stringer: The names of the contract firms who carry out work for the Government would appear in official records, but the names of the officials from that firm would not necessarily be recorded. Mr. Wyman may, therefore, have carried out work for the Government on behalf of PricewaterhouseCoopers. There is no way of identifying the details without incurring disproportionate cost.

Correspondence

Mr. Watts: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will publish the latest figures showing the volume of correspondence received by Ministers and agency chief executives from hon. Members in 1999, the targets set for the replies and the replies sent within target times. [119663]

Marjorie Mowlam: The 1999 correspondence figures are set out in the table. The table also sets out comparative figures for 1998, first published on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–05W. Members' attention is drawn to the footnotes which accompany the table and which provide general background information on how the figures are compiled.

Notes on 1999 figures[27]

[1] Includes correspondence on the Intervention Board.
[2] Letters addressed to the Law Officers but subsequently replied to by the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP). In addition, the DPP received 228 letters direct from MPs in 1999 of which 94 per cent. were replied to within 15 working days.
[3] Includes all Ministerial replies, not only replied to letters from MPs.
[4] Includes letters from Peers and MEPs. Also includes 387 letters where Agency Chief Executives replied on Ministers' behalf.
[5] This figure includes only correspondence received between 1 April 1999 and 31 December 1999. 1998 and 1999 figures are not directly comparable, as a new data system now provides figures relating to letters received from MPs only.
[6] Includes 49 cases relating to Wales.
[7] General correspondence (excluding correspondence on migration and visa matters).
[8] Correspondence on migration and visa matters only.
[9] 15 working days is the target for all correspondence other than correspondence on Prison Service issues.
[10] 20 working days is the target for correspondence on Prison Service issues and takes account of particular geographical circumstances. The target is the same whether replies are sent by Ministers or the Director General.
[11] The Home Office's overall performance was badly affected by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's operational difficulties. Encouragingly, the rest of the Home Office achieved 72 per cent. of replies within target.
[12] Head Office figures.
[13] Local Office and "delegated" figures (where local officials have replied direct to MPs).
[14] This figure excludes letters which were subsequently replied to by the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP).
[15] Excludes letters from MPs to Ministers where Agency Chief Executives have replied on Ministers' behalf.
[16] Includes letters from MPs to Ministers where the Agency Chief Executive has replied on Ministers' behalf.
[17] Figures for Northern Ireland Departments relate to the period 1 January 1999 to 2 December 1999, the date of devolution.
[18] In addition, the Child Support Agency received 308 letters on GB cases direct from MPs in 1999 of which 49 per cent. were replied to within the 20 working day target.
[19] Includes 214 letters where the Chief Executive replied on Ministers' behalf.
[20] The Scotland Office came into existence on 1 July 1999. Figures relate to the period 1 July 1999–31 December 1999. Figures do not include interim replies.
[21] Includes 301 letters where the Chief Executive replied on Ministers' behalf.
[22] Includes 16 letters where the Chief Executive replied on Ministers' behalf.
[23] The Treasury Solicitor's Department reduced its target in May 1999 from 15 working days to 10 working days.
[24] Includes 20 letters where the Chief Executive replied on Ministers' behalf.
[25] The Wales Office came into existence on 1 July 1999. Figures relate only to the period 1 October 1999—31 December 1999.
[26] The Cabinet Office performance was badly affected by the need for wide consultation on correspondence concerning "external" issues. On issues relating to Cabinet Office domestic issues, the Cabinet Office replied to 97 per cent. of letters within target.
[27] The 1998 figures are taken from the 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–05W. Please also refer to the notes given with that reply. Departments and Agencies which received a total of between one and ten letters from MPs during 1999 are not shown in this table.

Public Sector Regulation

Mr. Watts: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps she has taken to improve public sector regulation. [119662]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Government are concerned about the amount of red tape and bureaucratic procedures that are affecting the delivery of public services to the citizen. I recently established a team within the Regulatory Impact Unit in the Cabinet Office to examine and review the red tape and bureaucracy that exists within the Public Sector and to recommend ways of reducing them. I asked the Public Sector Team to produce an initial report on police paperwork, in conjunction with the Government Departments with responsibility for the criminal justice system.

I am delighted to publish today their report called "Making a difference: Reducing Police Paperwork", copies of which I have placed in the Libraries of the House. The report recommends a number of deregulation measures on police paperwork, which my ministerial colleagues and I hope will free up police time, enabling them to deliver their front line services more effectively.

The Public Sector Team will continue to work towards making regulation in the criminal justice system more efficient and effective, and will, in due course, also turn their attention to regulation affecting health, schools and local authority issues.

WALES

National Lottery

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money was spent in Wales by the National Lottery on each of the sectors of activity which it supported during 1999. [118341]

Kate Hoey: I have been asked to reply.

According to the distributing bodies the amount of National Lottery money awarded to grant recipients based in Wales during 1999 was:

Good cause	Amount
The Arts	14,260,264
Charities	26,611,341
Heritage	17,767,408
Millennium projects	97,712
Sport	7,329,822
Education, Health and the Environment	632,158

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Defence

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what recent discussions he has had with his European Union counterparts regarding (a) the missile threat to Europe, (b) the US Government preparations to pursue National Missile Defence, (c) US-Russian discussions on ABM treaty modifications and (d) continuing NATO discussions on theatre missile defence; [119169]

(2) what recent representations he has made to his European Union counterparts regarding the threat to Europe from weapons of mass destruction. [119172]

Mr. Vaz: These issues are the subject of regular discussions in NATO. European Union partners which are also members of the Alliance take part in the discussions. These issues also arise frequently in our bilateral contacts with EU partners. Proliferation issues are regularly discussed in the appropriate European Union Common Foreign and Security Policy forum.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the progress made in setting up modalities for full consultation, co-operation and transparency between the EU and NATO. [119174]

Mr. Vaz: The United Kingdom is fully involved in the continuing discussions to ensure the best means of ensuring full mutual consultation, co-operation and transparency between the EU and NATO.

The Presidency will report on progress to the European Council at Feira on 19–20 June.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what recent representations he has made to the US administration on further development of the European Union's Common Security and Defence Policy; [119175]

(2) what recent representations he has received from the US administration on the development of the European Union's Common Security and Defence Policy. [119177]

Mr. Vaz: The Secretary of State visited Washington in February, and discussed European Defence with Mrs. Albright. The Defence Secretary discussed European Defence with his US opposite number in January. There are other frequent Ministerial and official contacts.

The US Administration remains supportive of the initiative: in recent Senate testimony, Assistant Secretary of State Marc Grossman commented that:

ESDI will be good for the Alliance, good for US interests and good for the US-European relationship.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the progress made by the EU in setting up consultation and co-operation links between the EU and (a) NATO's non-EU members, (b) other countries who are candidates for accession to the EU and (c) other prospective partners in EU-led crisis management; [119178]

(2) what recent discussions the EU has had with (a) non-EU European NATO members and (b) other countries who are candidates to the EU on establishing appropriate structures for dialogue and information on issues related to security and defence policy and crisis management. [119173]

Mr. Vaz: The UK, other EU members and the Presidency have regular bilateral and multilateral discussions with the non-EU European NATO members and EU candidates on this subject.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with other Government Departments on (a) the missile threat to Europe and (b) the US Government preparations to pursue National Missile Defence. [119171]

Mr. Vaz: We are in continuous contact with all other Government Departments with an interest in these issues.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from (a) the Czech Republic, (b) Hungary and (c) Poland on the development of the European Union's Common Security and Defence Policy. [119176]

Mr. Vaz: The Secretary of State met the Foreign Ministers of Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic on 29 February. I met their deputies on 31 March-1 April. The future role of the non-EU Allies in EU crisis management operations was discussed in detail on both occasions.

Gibraltar

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date the European Court of Human Rights issued its decision on the right of the people of Gibraltar to vote in European Parliament elections; how he plans to comply with the decision of the court; and if he will make a statement. [119018]

Mr. Vaz: The judgment was given on 18 February 1999. Within a month the Government tabled an amendment to the 1976 EC Act on Direct Elections in order to extend the European franchise to Gibraltar. We have continued to press for that, and will spare no effort to secure Gibraltar's enfranchisement.

US National Missile Defence System

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from the US Administration on the US Government's preparations to pursue National Missile Defence. [119170]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes South-West (Dr. Starkey) and the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) on 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 408–09W. We remain in regular dialogue with the United States Administration.

EU Charter of Fundamental Rights

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's policy is on incorporating the Charter of Fundamental Rights into the Treaty. [119306]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 10 April 2000, Official Report, column 78W.

Bosnia

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many suspected war criminals have been apprehended by British forces in Bosnia. [117902]

Mr. Hain: British SFOR troops have successfully detained nine war crimes suspects indicted by the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia. They have also been involved in the arrest of a further two suspects with other SFOR forces. An indictee was also shot dead by British SFOR personnel acting in self-defence during a detention operation.

International Criminal Court

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to place the ratification of the International Criminal Court on the agenda at the Copenhagen Plus Five Conference in June. [118970]

Mr. Hain: The UK regularly encourages support for the International Criminal Court (ICC) at appropriate multilateral fora. The Copenhagen Plus Five Conference will review implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action which resulted from the World Summit for Social Development in 1995, and consider further initiatives. As ratification of the ICC falls outside the issues covered at Copenhagen, it is not expected to feature on the Conference agenda.

Colombia

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his US counterparts concerning financial assistance for Plan Colombia. [118973]

Mr. Battle: UK officials keep in close contact with their US counterparts on all aspects of foreign affairs, including the peace process in Colombia. During President Pastrana's visit to the UK on 13 April, we discussed ways in which the international community might assist. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs suggested the UK could take the lead in hosting an international gathering of officials and technical experts, including those from North America and Europe, to discuss the details of Plan Colombia in the next two months.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Colombian Government concerning UK assistance for (a) social and economic aspects of Plan Colombia and (b) military assistance for Plan Colombia. [118972]

Mr. Battle: We had a friendly and productive discussion with President Pastrana on 13 April about all aspects of Plan Colombia. We discussed the ways in which the international community could be of assistance, and focused in particular on the need for alternative development, the fight against drugs, and institution building.

Joint Environmental Markets Unit

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 6 December 1999, Official Report, column 539W, on the Joint Environmental Markets Unit, when he will implement his commitment to second staff from his Department to work for the Unit. [116069]

Mr. Hain: The joint FCO/DTI British Trade International has identified the environment sector as a priority area of its trade promotion work, and has close links with the DTI/DETR Joint Environmental Markets Unit (JEMU).

In addition, the FCO is in the process of enhancing its interchange programme with other Government departments. As part of this, we hope to institute regular secondments to JEMU in due course.

Abdullah Ocalan

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Turkish Government regarding the death sentence imposed on Abdullah Ocalan. [118831]

Mr. Vaz: I met the Turkish Foreign Minister during his visit to the UK in September 1999 and expressed our opposition to capital punishment under any circumstances. The Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), repeated this message to the Turkish Ambassador in December 1999. In the regular meetings between British and Turkish officials, we consistently make clear to the Turkish authorities our opposition to the death penalty as a matter of principle.

The UK also supported the statements by the EU Presidency on 29 June and 25 November 1999, which confirmed our opposition to the death penalty imposed upon Mr. Ocalan. Our general position on capital punishment was most recently restated at the EU-Turkey Association Council on 11 April by the EU Presidency.

We welcome the Turkish Government's decision in January to await the outcome of Mr. Ocalan's appeal to the ECHR before taking further action and have urged them to maintain the moratorium on capital punishment which has been in place for 15 years.

Visa Applicants (Islamabad)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to provide shade and water for visa applicants queuing at the British High Commission in Islamabad; and if he will extend the system used in respect of visa applicants at the Deputy High Commission in Karachi to Islamabad. [118915]

Mr. Vaz: Covered accommodation for some 400 visa applicants, with drinking water and toilet facilities, is already provided inside the British High Commission at Islamabad. Similar accommodation and facilities are provided in Karachi, in a more modern building.

The land outside the compound at Islamabad belongs to the Pakistani authorities. The High Commission has repeatedly asked their permission to construct facilities which would provide shade for visa applicants. No response has been received.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British passport holders are resident in Zimbabwe; and how many other residents of Zimbabwe could claim a right of abode in the UK. [118895]

Mr. Hain: We cannot provide exact figures of the number of British passport holders resident in Zimbabwe because British nationals are not obliged to register with our High Commission in Harare. As of 12 April there are 9,000 British nationals and some 5,500 dual British/Zimbabwe nationals registered with the High Commission. Actual numbers will be higher.

Any Commonwealth citizen with a UK born parent or married to a British citizen may qualify for right of abode in the UK. For the reasons given above it is not possible to put a figure on how many residents of Zimbabwe may be eligible to claim.

Algeria

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he was first informed of the MI5 report about the involvement of the Algerian Government, or part of it, in serious human rights violations committed in Algeria. [118926]

Mr. Hain: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to comment on the operations of the security and intelligence agencies. In line with this policy the Government do not reveal what information is held by the Security Service.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Algerian Government, and when, concerning their obligations under international law to undertake full and open investigations of human rights abuses. [118927]

Mr. Hain: I raised this issue personally with the Algerian Prime Minister during my visit to Algiers on 12 April.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ask the Algerian Government to invite the UN Working Group on Enforced and Involuntary Disappearance to visit Algeria, with particular reference to the treatment of women relatives of the disappeared in Algeria during recent demonstrations. [118937]

Mr. Hain: I welcome the recent announcement by the Algerian authorities that international NGOs, including Amnesty International, have been given dates to visit. We continue to press the Algerian government to allow access to UN experts. I raised this issue personally with the Algerian Prime Minister during my visit to Algiers on 12 April.

Iran

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs further to the oral answer to the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) of 11 April 2000, Official Report, column 178, what steps the Government plan to take to monitor the trial and other legal proceedings in respect of the 13 members of the Jewish community from Shiraz; and if he will make a statement. [118986]

Mr. Hain: Since my answer to the House on 11 April we are concerned at reports that trial Judge has decided to hold the trial in camera, and have made our concerns known to the Iranian authorities. The pattern of developments is not entirely clear, but our Embassy is following events closely. We note that defendants have now had the opportunity to appoint their own counsel, and that all those detained have done so.

The first session of the trial took place on 13 April. We understand that the trial has been adjourned until 1 May at the request of the defence lawyers to allow them to prepare their defence. We and our EU partners will continue to monitor events carefully. We will be paying especially close attention to defence counsel's view of proceedings.

Iraq

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from Iraqi opposition groups concerning sanctions against Iraq. [118944]

Mr. Hain: During my regular meetings with representatives of the Iraqi opposition, I receive strong support for the Government's policy on Iraq and sanctions. The Iraqi National Congress, perhaps the most significant opposition grouping outside Iraq, has made quite clear that, like us, it holds the Iraqi regime responsible for the suffering of the people, and wishes to ensure that Saddam Hussein can never again attack his own people or his neighbours with weapons of mass destruction.

Peru

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the issue of alleged electoral fraud in Peru with the Peruvian Government. [118945]

Mr. Battle: The UK has played a leading role in calling for higher standards in the electoral process in Peru. We have financed two reports this year which have highlighted the deficiencies, and copies of these reports have been sent to the Peruvian Government as well as being circulated widely internationally. We were instrumental in organising a critical EU statement on 7 April in advance of the vote. On 12 April, after the vote, I issued a statement which was delivered through our Embassy in Lima to the Peruvian President, Prime Minister and Foreign Minister. In it I suggested a second round was both desirable and sensible in the light of widespread concerns, including that of the two British observers, my right hon. Friend the Member for Coatbridge and Chryston (Mr. Clarke) and the hon. Member for East Londonderry (Mr. Ross).

Since the declaration of a second round, I have issued a further statement (on 13 April) expressing the hope that the next round will be held in conditions that are free, fair and transparent. We shall be working with our EU colleagues to impress on the Peruvian authorities the need for them to conform to international standards.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of reports of alleged malpractice during the first-round ballot of the Peruvian Presidential election; and if he will make a statement. [119428]

Mr. Battle: Further to the answer I gave above to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) (UIN 118945), I remain concerned at allegations of irregularities during the Peruvian election campaign and on polling day itself on 9 April. I issued a statement on 13 April calling for the second round of voting to be held under conditions that were democratic, transparent and free from the irregularities of the first round. We shall be working with our EU colleagues to impress on the Peruvian authorities the need for them to conform to international standards in their electoral process.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the number of pensioners with incomes below the minimum income guarantee who are not entitled to the minimum income guarantee because of savings in excess of the upper capital limit. [108451]

Mr. Bayley [holding answer 4 February 2000]: The last take-up estimates, covering 1997–98, were published in September 1999. Estimates of numbers of pensioners with incomes below the minimum income guarantee who are excluded for reasons of excess capital are not yet available.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much higher the income of (a) a single pensioner and (b) a pensioner couple not receiving income support would be in the year 2000–01 if the basic retirement pension had been uprated in (i) 1998, (ii) 1999 and (iii) 2000 in line with average earnings. [117589]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

While our priority is to target help to those pensioners in greatest need through the Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG), we have provided significant help to all pensioners. During this Parliament, we will have spent nearly £1.9 billion more on Winter Fuel Payments and the MIG than on earnings uprating the basic State Pension. Clearly, given constraints on resources, if we had uprated the basic pension in line with earnings, we would not have been able to provide the level of help we have, particularly to the poorest pensioners. Also earnings uprating the basic State Pension does not help them as the increase would be offset by a pound-for-pound reduction in the MIG they received. All these aspects need to be taken into account when using figures in the table.

£.p.

Pensioner status	Year	(a) Actual rate payable	(b) Rate payable if uprated in line with average earnings	((a)-(b)) Weekly difference
Single pensioner	1998	64.70	65.00	0.30
	1999	66.75	68.20	1.45
	2000	67.50	71.25	3.75
Pensioner Couple	1998	103.40	103.90	0.50
	1999	106.70	109.00	2.30
	2000	107.90	113.90	6.00

Notes:
1. Average Earnings Index Whole Economy (Non-seasonally adjusted), as published by the Office for National Statistics.
2. Figures have been rounded to the nearest 5 pence at each uprating.

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in Dartford will benefit from the recent increase in the minimum income guarantee. [118824]

Mr. Bayley: Around 2,000 pensioners in the parliamentary constituency of Dartford are receiving their minimum income guarantee paid through Income Support, and have benefited from the recent increase in benefit rates.

SERPS

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of (a) 5 to 10 per cent., (b) 10 to 15 per cent., (c) 15 to 20 per cent., (d) 20 to 25 per cent., (e) 25 to 30 per cent., (f) 30 to 35 per cent., (g) 35 to 40 per cent., (h) 40 to 45 per cent., (i) 45 to 50 per cent., (j) 50 to 55 per cent., (k) 55 to 60 per cent. and (l) 60 to 65 per cent. of those currently in SERPS producing satisfactory evidence that they have been misled over surviving spouses' entitlement. [117538]

Mr. Rooker: The cost of any given percentage of people currently in SERPS producing satisfactory evidence that they have been misled over surviving spouses entitlement will depend on which individuals are included and how much SERPS they have accrued.

Fraud (Brentwood)

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the procedures of the Borough of Brentwood District Council in preventing and detecting fraud. [118601]

Angela Eagle: We are aware that Brentwood Borough Council is operating the Royal Mail "do not redirect" scheme, is using the Housing Benefit Matching Service and has a Remote Access Terminal installed. It has also applied to this Department for Electronic Transfer of Data which will be installed during the summer.

The authority exceeded its weekly benefit savings threshold by 82 per cent. in 1998–99 resulting in additional subsidy of around £16,000.

However, the Borough has expressed no interest in implementing the Verification Framework and we have no record that they prosecuted or referred any cases of fraud for prosecution between April 1996 and April 1999.

Housing Benefit (Brentwood)

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on the level of co-operation between the Borough of Brentwood District Council and the Benefits Agency in relation to housing benefit; [118600]

(2) how many complaints in the last 12 months the Benefits Agency has made to the Borough of Brentwood District Council about lack of co-operation on housing benefit. [118602]

Angela Eagle: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Eric Pickles, dated 14 April 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking, if he will make a statement on the level of co-operation between the Borough of Brentwood District Council and the Benefits Agency (BA), in relation to housing benefit, and how many complaints in the last 12 months the BA has made to the Borough of Brentwood District Council about lack of co-operation on housing benefit.

The BA and Brentwood Borough Council have a joint Service Level Agreement which covers the service and performance requirements expected of both parties in connection with Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. Standards are measured and reviewed as necessary.

We have quarterly benefit liaison meetings to discuss any initiatives and issues that arise. Both the Local Authority and BA are satisfied with the level of co-operation.

In the last 12 months there have not been any direct complaints from the BA to Brentwood Council with regard to lack of co-operation on housing benefit.

I hope this is helpful.

Benefits (Crosby)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people under the age of 65 received an Attendance Allowance in Crosby constituency in each of the years from 1994 to 1999. [118680]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 11 April 2000]: The administration of Attendance Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Claire Curtis-Thomas, dated 14 April 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking, how many people under the age of 65 received an Attendance Allowance (AA) in Crosby constituency in each of the years from 1994 to 1999.

Since the introduction of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) on 1st April 1992, persons under the age of 65 have not been able to claim AA. Customers who were under the age of 65 and in receipt of AA had their benefit converted to DLA.

Details of DLA for 1998 and 1999 are set out in the table below. Prior to 1998 figures were based on a 5% sample and the numbers for Crosby constituency are too small to be statistically reliable. Since 1998 the figures are based on a 100% sample.

Year	DLA recipients
1998	2,172
1999	2,158

I hope this is helpful.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 28 February 2000, Official Report, column 173W, how many CT scans Medical Services has commissioned in the case of asbestos-related diseases in the past three years. [119005]

Mr. Bayley: Medical Services have commissioned no CT scans in the past three years in the case of claims for an Industrial Injuries Scheme Benefit for an asbestos-related disease.

Benefit Review Interviews

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Department or its Agencies record whether claimants refuse to be interviewed for area benefit review interviews. [119211]

Mr. Rooker: There are no formal records for the information requested. However, the records that are available show that only a very small number of people refuse to be interviewed.

Benefit Payments

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements he will put in place to allow benefit recipients without bank accounts to be paid in cash over the counter at post offices once automated credit transfer is introduced. [119707]

Mr. Rooker: The vast majority of benefit recipients, over 80 per cent., already have access to a bank account.

The Post Office is working with banks and the Department to make a range of bank and other simple accounts available to everyone, and to make sure that getting cash from these accounts will be available to customers from local post offices.

However, we recognise that there will be some people who we will be unable to pay by automated credit transfer, and some urgent payments that cannot be made this way. For these, we are considering what alternative simple electronic money transmission system, which could also be accessed at post offices, may be commercially available.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of paying all relevant pensions, currently paid via automated credit transfer four weeks in arrears, on a weekly basis in the year the transition was made. [119422]

Mr. Rooker: There would be no overall increase in benefit expenditure in moving to weekly payments.

However, there could be a one-off cash flow effect, with expenditure up to the value of £555 million[1] being brought forward to an earlier tax year because of more frequent payments.

The Department would also incur some small additional banking costs as a result of more frequent payments.

[1] This figure assumes that all pensioners and widows, whose pensions are currently paid into a UK bank account, take up the option and that the transition was made in a single year; neither of which may necessarily be the case.

Pensioners

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of his Department's expenditure was on people of retirement age and above; and what proportion of GDP this represented, in each year from 1992 to 2000. [118920]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 14 April 2000]: The information is in the table.

Expenditure on people over 60 as a percentage of all Social Security benefit expenditure and as a percentage of GDP

Year	Expenditure (cash £ million)	Expenditure as a percentage of: All expenditure	GDP
1991–92	31,772	47.85	5.39
1992–93	34,145	45.34	5.57
1993–94	36,443	44.21	5.63
1994–95	37,269	43.92	5.43
1995–96	38,681	43.61	5.36
1996–97	40,808	44.25	5.33

Expenditure on people over 60 as a percentage of all Social Security benefit expenditure and as a percentage of GDP

Year	Expenditure (cash £ million)	Expenditure as a percentage of: All expenditure	GDP
1997–98	42,577	45.61	5.23
1998–99	44,502	46.56	5.19
1999–2000	47,640	47.97	5.29
2000–01	49,962	49.27	5.28

Notes:

1. Expenditure figures are consistent with Table 3 of the 2000 Departmental Report (Cm4614) and earlier equivalents.

2. Social Security benefit expenditure includes non-DSS funded expenditure on Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of the recent research and pilot projects carried out to ascertain the reasons for pensioners not claiming Income Support and the most effective ways of promoting take-up. [118884]

Mr. Bayley: The Department carried out an extensive programme of research including surveys and qualitative work.

The cost of the research to ascertain the reasons for pensioners not claiming Income Support, and to identify possible ways to increase take-up was £325,000.

The costs of running the pilots both at District Office level and centrally were absorbed within existing work loads and no separate costs for this activity have been identified. The evaluation of the pilots, which included analysis of administrative data and a follow-up survey cost £278,063.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department spent (i) directly and (ii) indirectly on asylum seekers in (a) 1995, (b) 1996, (c) 1997, (d) 1998 and (e) 1999; and what estimate has been made of expenditure in the year 2000. [119489]

Mr. Bayley: The Home Office will be responding to this question on behalf of Government as a whole.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of extending the entitlement for new claims to Disability Living Allowance to all those aged below 70 years. [119246]

Mr. Bayley: The estimated programme cost would be £300 million in 2001–02, rising to £350 million in 2002–03 and £400 million in 2003–04.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to conclude his review of Invalid Care Allowance. [119480]

Mr. Bayley: We are committed to keeping financial support for carers under review and we are continuing to do this. This issue is being considered in the context of the follow-up work to the National Carers' Strategy, and our response to The Royal Commission on Long Term Care, and the nature and timing of any conclusions will depend on progress on these wider activities.

Inter-Ministerial Group for Older People

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the members of the Inter-Ministerial Group for Older People; when it was established; how often it has met and when; what its terms of reference are; what subjects have been considered by it; what reports it has produced; what third parties it has consulted; and what the outcome was of those discussions. [119533]

Mr. Rooker: The Inter-Ministerial Group for Older People, established in June 1998, has met eight times on the following dates:

2 July 1998

24 March 1999

14 July 1999

27 October 1999

7 December 1999

26 January 2000

8 March 2000

11 April 2000.

The Group's terms of reference are:

to ensure that Government strategy and policy affecting older people is effectively co-ordinated, avoids duplication, and takes account of the needs of older people;

to develop a better understanding of the lives and aspirations of older people and how they are affected by Government policy; and to co-ordinate the presentation and promotion of Government policy affecting older people.

The Group has considered a wide range of subjects including active aging, care issues, consultation and involvement, transport, volunteering and improving services for older people. A consultation document, "Building a Better Britain for Older People", was published in November 1998. The Group has also sponsored research into attitudes and aspirations of older people which was published last year[1].

The Group has consulted widely with organisations representing older people and has undertaken a significant programme of consultation with older people themselves. Members of the Group attended a series of listening to older people events across the UK during 1999, which provided older people with a further opportunity to discuss issues that are important to them. The programme will conclude with a National Listening Event on 17 May in London. This will build on and respond to the consultation that has taken place over the past year.

This extensive programme of consultation has proved valuable in helping the Inter Ministerial Group plan its work programme.

The current membership of the Group is as follows:

The Inter-Ministerial Group for Older People

Right hon. Jeff Rooker MP (Chair): Minister of State, Department of Social Security

Right hon. Paul Boateng MP: Minister of State, Home Office

David Hanson MP: Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Welsh Office

Keith Hill MP: Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions

Margaret Hodge MP: Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department for Education and Employment

Alan Howarth MP: Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department for Culture, Media and Sport

George Howarth MP: Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Northern Ireland Office

Dr. Kim Howells MP: Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Trade and Industry

John Hutton MP: Minister of State, Department of Health

Right hon. Baroness Jay of Paddington: Minister for Women

Melanie Johnson MP: Economic Secretary, Her Majesty's Treasury

Jane Kennedy MP: Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department

Lewis Moonie MP: Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Defence

Right hon. Ian McCartney MP: Minister of State, Cabinet Office

Nick Raynsford MP: Minister of State, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions

Brian Wilson MP: Minister of State, Scotland Office

The Welsh Assembly and the Scottish Executive also have responsibilities for policies that affect older people. The Inter-Ministerial group is therefore working closely with Jane Hutt and Iain Gray, both of whom have attended meetings.

Note:

1. Attitudes and Aspirations of Older People—a review of the literature by Annette Boaz, Carol Hayden and Miriam Bernard, was published on 18 October 1999 in the Department of Social Security's Research Report Series (Report No. 101, ISBN 1 84123 144 4).

Attitudes and Aspirations of Older People—a qualitative study by Carol Hayden, Annette Boaz and Francesca Taylor was published on 18 October 1999 in the Department of Social Security's Research Report Series (Report No. 102, ISBN 1 84123 158 4).

ONE Pilot Areas

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what period of time has been devoted to training start-up officers and personal advisers in the ONE pilot areas to enable them to identify entitlement to income support, housing benefit, disability living allowance and incapacity benefit; and what period of time has been devoted to training to enable them to identify entitlement to working families tax credit and disabled persons' tax credit; [119338]

(2) what training advisers in the ONE pilot areas have received in understanding and applying the principle of good cause. [119343]

Angela Eagle: ONE training for all advisers is individually tailored through the use of the learning assessment framework which matches training provision to training need. A copy of this framework can be found in the Library.

There is extensive benefits training available to advisers on the entitlement to ONE benefits. Advisers receive a three-week benefit entitlement training course, which includes Income Support, Housing Benefit, Disability Living Allowance, Incapacity Benefit, Working Families Tax Credit and Disabled Persons Tax Credit.

Advisers also receive training in relation to good cause. However, it should be noted that most already understand and know how to apply the principles of good cause. Good cause provisions exist elsewhere in the benefit system and were, for example, included in the training for the New Decision Making and Appeals procedures which were implemented in the Autumn of 1999.

CABINET OFFICE

Regulatory Reform Bill

Kali Mountford: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress has been made with the proposed Regulatory Reform Bill. [119824]

Mr. Stringer: The Regulatory Reform Bill has today been published in draft, in order to allow the two Parliamentary Deregulation Committees to report on it prior to its formal introduction to Parliament. The House of Commons Deregulation Committee and its counterpart in the House of Lords have great expertise on the existing deregulation order-making power under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. Their views on the proposed extension of this power will clearly be of great interest to the House when it comes to consider the Bill. 'Publication of the draft Regulatory Reform Bill' (Cm 4713) contains the draft Bill, Explanatory Notes and other supporting material, and I have placed copies in the Libraries of the House, the Vote Office and the Printed Paper Office.

In addition to the changes to the deregulation order-making power, the draft Bill includes provisions to replace section 5 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994, which deals with enforcement of regulations. This policy was the subject of a public consultation exercise in Autumn 1999. The majority of those responding to the consultation document were supportive of the Government's proposals. I am today placing copies of the Government's response to that consultation exercise in the Libraries of the House, the Vote Office and the Printed Paper Office. Copies of the Government's response to the earlier consultation exercise on the proposed changes to the deregulation order-making power, published in September 1999, are already in the Libraries.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what (a) number and (b) percentage of properties in her charge are empty; and what steps are being taken by her Department to reduce the number of such properties. [116909]

Mr. Stringer: The Cabinet Office had 168 properties in its charge on 1 April 1999, of which 30.4 per cent. were empty on 1 April 2000. The majority of the empty properties were office buildings held by the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate (PACE), a key responsibility of which has been to dispose of surplus occupied and empty office accommodation on the Government Estate. In many cases tenants have been found for previously empty properties to reduce the burden on the Exchequer and to make them more attractive for disposal to investors. The principal determinant for disposal is value for money to the Exchequer. PACE and another two of the Cabinet Office's agencies transferred to HM Treasury on 1 April 2000. The figures include three office buildings on the Cabinet Office estate undergoing refurbishment.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gibraltar

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the result of the Government's latest discussions with the Spanish Government on the subject of Gibraltar. [117396]

Mr. Vaz: Discussions between Spain and the United Kingdom, in consultation with the Government of Gibraltar, to overcome difficulties which have arisen on a number of issues within the European Union concerning Gibraltar have been continuing for several months. I hope that it will be possible to bring them to a successful conclusion.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to consult the Gibraltar Government before making decisions on matters affecting the people of Gibraltar. [119610]

Mr. Vaz: We regularly consult the Government of Gibraltar on a wide range of matters affecting the people of Gibraltar. We do this routinely via the office of the Governor of Gibraltar and through meetings with Ministers and officials when the Chief Minister is in London.

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117481]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister for the Arts, 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 392–93W.

Most of the works of art on display in our missions abroad are on loan from the Government Art Collection. Some are purchased, as part of large capital projects, such as new Embassies. A comprehensive breakdown of expenditure on artwork purchased could be provided only at disproportionate cost as it has been recorded only as part of the overall capital project cost.

We have no readily available information on the years prior to 1994. The best figures we have for the years 1994–95 to 1998–99 indicate that under £1 million was spent on artwork over that period, less than 0.5 per cent. of the overall programme of capital expenditure on the estate of £215.7 million for the same period.

Upkeep costs are low, and not separately recorded. Expenditure on artworks will be separately identified in future under Resource Accounting and Budgeting.

General Affairs Council, Luxembourg

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the outcome was of the General Affairs Council held in Luxembourg on 10 and 11 April; and if he will make a statement. [118898]

Mr. Vaz: The information is as follows:

1. The General Affairs Council (GAC) in Luxembourg on 10 April adopted the A points listed in document No. 7592/00 and noted the resolutions, decisions and opinions adopted by the European Parliament in its session of 13–17 March in Strasbourg listed in document No. 6496/00. Copies of these documents will be placed in the House Libraries as soon as they become available.

Council Formations

2. The GAC reached agreement on a reduction in the number of Council Formations to 16 (General Affairs; Agriculture; Economic and Financial Affairs; Environment; Transport and Telecommunications; Employment and Social Policy; Fisheries; Industry and Energy; Justice, Home Affairs and Civil Protection; Internal Market, Consumer Affairs and Tourism; Research; Budget; Culture; Development; Education and Youth Affairs; and Health); and agreed to review this decision in 2002.

Lisbon Follow-up

3. The GAC heard a report from the President of the European Commission on the planned extensive follow-up to the Lisbon Special Council. The Presidency noted that it would also issue plans for follow-up. The GAC agreed that the Feira Council should adopt an e-Europe action plan, a small business charter, and plans for benchmarking the performance of EU economies.

Conflict in Africa

4. EU presidency Representative Senator Serri briefed the GAC on the negotiations in the Eritrea/Ethiopia Peace Process. The GAC expressed its deep concern at the humanitarian situation in the region and reaffirmed its strong support for the efforts of the OAU Presidency to end the conflict. It expressed concern at the level of arms sales to the region.

5. The Commission briefed the GAC on the EU response to requests for humanitarian assistance. The GAC emphasised the need for a co-ordinated approach with the UN to ensure the efficient and speedy delivery of international aid. The GAC called on Ethiopia and Eritrea to facilitate such deliveries and to ensure the security of food and humanitarian assistance.

Zimbabwe

6. The GAC discussed the situation in Zimbabwe. Member states underlined their concern at the farm invasions and appealed to the Government of Zimbabwe to enforce law and order. The GAC also urged the Government of Zimbabwe to create the conditions for the holding of free and fair elections. Under such conditions, the Council agreed that the EU would be willing to support and monitor the elections provided a request for such support was made by the Government of Zimbabwe.

China/WTO

7. The GAC gave its full support to Commissioner Lamy's approach to the latest round of bilateral negotiations on China's accession to the WTO. The GAC noted that the EU had already shown flexibility in its few remaining requests, and that a similar attitude from China would pave the way for an agreement.

IGC

8. Foreign Ministers reviewed progress to date in the Government Representatives group and considered prospects for the second half of the Portuguese Presidency. Discussion focused on a Presidency paper on the extension of qualified majority voting.

Burma

9. In renewing its Common Position on Burma for another six months, the GAC agreed to the most substantial strengthening of the measures against the Burmese regime since the Common Position was first adopted in 1996. It will now incorporate a published list of those regime members and supporters subject to visa restrictions; a freeze on their funds held abroad; and a ban on the supply of equipment which could be used for internal repression or terrorism.

10. The Council also agreed to send a second Troika mission to Rangoon to promote the EU's policy towards Burma; to consider the possibilities for increased humanitarian aid; to resume EU-ASEAN ministerial dialogue, in Asia, later in the year.

Turkey

11. The GAC agreed a Common Position for the following day's EC/Turkey Association Council and three-year funding regulation for Turkey worth 15 meuro.

12. The Association Council agreed to start negotiations on the liberalisation of services and mutual opening of procurement markets. It also agreed to set up eight sectoral sub-committees of the Association Committee to promote harmonisation of Turkey's legislation with the EU acquis.

Russia

13. The GAC again deplored the suffering of the civilian population in Chechnya. It noted the recent decision by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe to suspend the voting rights of the Russian Delegation and its recommendation to the Council of Ministers to move towards suspension of Russia's membership of the Council of Europe. The GAC observed that this reflected the deep concern of European public opinion about the continuing conflict in Chechnya. The GAC expressed its support for the Council of Europe's continuing co-operation with, and assistance to, Russia, provided Russia abides by its commitments. At the same time, the GAC acknowledged Russian co-operation in establishing a Council of Europe presence in the region and in agreeing to make public a report on Chechnya prepared by the Council of European Committee for the Prevention of Torture.

14. The GAC supported the call by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights for Russia to establish, according to international standards, a national broad-based and independent commission of inquiry into allegations of human rights violations.

UNCHR/China

15. The GAC discussed its approach to China at the current session of the UN Commission on Human Rights. It decided that EU member states would not co-sponsor the US resolution in China, but would oppose any "no-action motion" tabled by China.

Western Balkans

16. The GAC welcomed the intention of Secretary General/High Representative Solana and Commissioner Patten to visit the Balkans more frequently, following the mandate from the Lisbon European Council. It welcomed their intention to advance the dialogue with Serbian civil society and to make further proposals on trade and assistance, notably for Montenegro.

17. The GAC heard a presentation by the EU Special Representative for the Stability Pact on the successful outcome of the regional funding conference.

18. The GAC noted the holding of municipal elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina on 8 April. The GAC urged the relevant authorities to implement the election results speedily as a contribution to the full implementation of the Dayton and Paris Agreements and the New York Declaration.

19. The GAC welcomed the decision by the Serb National Council to appoint representatives to the Interim Administrative Council and the Transitional Council of Kosovo.

20. The GAC underlined the importance it attached to a strong coherent effort by the EU, the US and the Russian Federation on the Western Balkans.

AOB: IRELA (Europe/Latin America Institute)

21. The GAC discussed the funding of IRELA. Ministers urged the Commission to resolve its problems over the financial management of IRELA. The Commission indicated that results of an audit of IRELA's finances for 1997 had led to the recovery of 1 million euro and an audit for 1998 would be available in the autumn.

Job Losses

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 407W, on employment in Grimsby, if he will set out the methodology used in the calculation of aggregate job losses for all constituencies in the United Kingdom. [118867]

Mr. Vaz: Britain in Europe commissioned this survey from South Bank University. My hon. Friend should approach the organisations concerned for details of their research methodology.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the percentage change compared to 1990–91 in his Department's energy efficiency in each year since 1990–91; and if he will make a statement. [118988]

Mr. Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the then Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale), to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, South-East (Dr. Iddon) on 22 July 1999, Official Report, columns 580–84W, which reported progress for all central Government Departments by 31 March 1998. We hope that results for the period up to March 1999 will be published shortly.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's energy efficiency performance target, expressed as a percentage change in comparison to 1990–91, for each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [118989]

Mr. Hain: The FCO's energy efficiency performance target from April 2000 is the target set across the Government estate of an annual 1 per cent. reduction in greenhouse gas emissions against 1999–2000 levels.

Middle East

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of the construction of the planned bypass roads in the West Bank on the future economic viability of a Palestinian state. [118949]

Mr. Hain: Territory, and other issues which may have an impact on the viability of any future Palestinian state, should be determined in negotiation between the two parties, rather than predetermined by the unilateral acts of either.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government in response to their announcement of the re-activation of the building programme of bypass roads in the West Bank. [118985]

Mr. Hain: We consider all settlement activity in the West Bank to be illegal and unhelpful to the peace process. We frequently make this view clear to the Israeli Government, and will continue to do so.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what safeguards are included in the second phase of the European Union's assistance programme to the Palestinian Authority in support of counter-terrorism to ensure that human rights are protected. [118968]

Mr. Battle: EU member states recognise the importance of human rights in their Counter-Terrorism Assistance Programme with the Palestinian Authority. Under Phase I of the programme, there was a dedicated human rights project run by the Wallenberg Institute of Sweden. This will continue under Phase II, although the EU member state(s) has/have not yet been chosen.

The UK, along with all EU member states, regards human rights as an important and integral part of the programme and takes every opportunity to convey this message to the Palestinian Authority. Human rights aspects of all projects under the programme are carefully monitored.

Geneva Conventions 1949

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have accepted the competence, without special agreement, of the International Fact-Finding Commission authorised under Article 90 of Additional Protocol I of 1977 to the Geneva Conventions of 1949. [119476]

Mr. Hain: The following countries have accepted the competence of the International Fact-Finding Commission in accordance with the provisions of Article 90 of Additional Protocol I:

Algeria
Argentina
Australia
Austria
Belgium
Bolivia
Bosnia-Herzegovina
Brazil
Bulgaria
Belarus
Canada
Cape Verde

Ukraine
United Arab Emirates
United Kingdom; and Uruguay.

Ministerial Visits (Turkey and Malta)

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) Turkish and (b) Maltese Ministers are scheduled to visit the UK during the next 12 months; when the visits will take place; and if he will make a statement. [119290]

Mr. Vaz: We expect our close relations with both Turkey and Malta to be supplemented by visits to the UK from Turkish and Maltese Ministers over the next 12 months. However, at present, no dates have been fixed for any visits.

A number of senior Turkish Ministers have recently visited the UK. The Turkish Foreign Minister, Defence Minister, Minister for Agriculture and Minister for Privatisation visited in 1999; the Labour and Social Security Minister and the Interior Minister have already visited this year.

Both the Maltese Foreign Minister and Finance Minister visited the UK in 1999.

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what ministerial visits are being planned to Turkey and Malta over the next 12 months; for what purposes; and if he will make a statement. [119291]

Mr. Vaz: We expect our close relations with both Turkey and Malta to be supplemented by visits from UK Ministers over the next 12 months. I hope to visit both countries during the next 12 months.

A number of British Ministers have recently visited Turkey. My hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson), formerly the Minister for Trade, my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson), formerly the Minister for the Armed Forces, and my right hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin), formerly Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, visited in 1999.

In the same capacity, my right hon. Friend also visited Malta in 1999.

Entry Waiting Times (Sub-continent)

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the waiting times in each queue for entry to the United Kingdom in (a) Bombay, (b) New Delhi, (c) Islamabad and (d) Dhaka; and by how much each has (a) increased and (b) decreased in the last 12 months. [119243]

Mr. Vaz: The statistics requested are as follows:

	Days	Weeks
	Tier 3	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4
Bombay
31 March 2000	0	0	6	6	6
31 March 1999	0	0	8	8	8
Islamabad
31 March 2000	6	9	26.5	35.5	42
31 March 1999	17	12	33	36	40

Q4: Re-applicants

Chechnya

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 267W, if he will ensure that United Kingdom and Russian efforts to work together to combat terrorism do not include assistance for the activities of the Russian security forces in Chechnya. [119591]

Mr. Vaz: Yes.

Terrorism

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received concerning the proposed (a) International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism and (b) International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings; what plans he has to seek the views of the Northern Ireland Commission on Human Rights; and what plans he has made to open the consultation process concerning the conventions to non-governmental organisations. [118974]

Mr. Battle: We have received no recent representations concerning these Conventions, both of which the UK signed on the day they were opened for signature in January 2000 and January 1998 respectively.

The Government have no plans to seek the views of the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission or re-open a consultation process to non-governmental organisations (NGOs) at this stage. The Terrorism Bill, which provides the vehicle for the implementation of both these conventions in UK domestic law, was subject to a long and comprehensive consultation process which included the views of the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission and all interested NGOs. The Government have stated their intention to ratify both these Conventions. If organisations would like to comment on any aspect of the ratification process they are welcome to do so.

European Court of Human Rights

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those cases against the United Kingdom that have been lodged and are awaiting consideration by the European Court of Human Rights, indicating (a) which Articles of the Convention are cited as having been breached in the application and (b) those cases which have been ruled admissible. [118975]

Mr. Hain: In 1999, 429 applications involving the United Kingdom were registered before the European Court of Human Rights. Of these, 32 have been declared admissible. To list the situation regarding each of these cases would be too detailed for the Official Report. I shall write to my hon. Friend with further details and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long it took to process each stage in each case brought against the United Kingdom in the last four years before the European Court of Human Rights; and what estimate he has made of when it will be possible to form an assessment of the impact of structural changes to the European Court mechanisms upon the length of proceedings. [118976]

Mr. Hain: Several hundred cases involving the United Kingdom have been brought before the European Court of Human Rights in the last four years. It would not be feasible to list how long each stage of the proceedings took in each of these cases. The procedure for each case is determined individually by the Court taking into account the particular facts and circumstances of the case. A proper assessment of the impact of the new procedures in Strasbourg will not be possible until a sufficient number of cases have been determined exclusively by the new Court. The European Commission on Human Rights ceased to consider cases only on 31 October 1999. It is still too early, therefore, to attempt such an assessment.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal (Disabled People)

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people on Incapacity Benefit have, under the personal adviser section of the New Deal for the Disabled, (a) been contacted by a Personal Adviser, (b) attended an initial interview, (c) had a complete employability assessment, (d) had an agreed individual action plan, (e) found part-time employment as a result of the programme and (f) found full-time employment as a result of the programme. [118611]

Ms Hodge: We have been piloting the New Deal for Disabled People since autumn 1998. The latest available figures are those for the period up to 25 February 2000 covering the 12 personal adviser pilot areas.

10,070 people have contacted and met a Personal Adviser to discuss their employment prospects. Some 6,650 people have developed an employment-focused action plan following a full assessment of their employment prospects.

Our experience shows that for many in the client group the journey back to work will be lengthy. I am pleased therefore to be able to say that some 1,843 people had found work, representing 56 per cent. of those who had completed their action plans. Of these 1,081 were in full-time work and 551 in part-time work. A further 211 had become self-employed, entered supported employment or had been helped to retain their current jobs.

In addition, 607 people had started work as a result of participating in innovative schemes.

Value-added League Tables

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to publish the research by Professor Jenson of York University into value-added league tables. [119253]

Jacqui Smith: The publication of research is a matter for the author.

Special Schools

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will list those LEAs which make specific provision for special schools for voice output communication aids for children with speech problems; how many aids are supplied in each LEA (a) at present and (b) in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement; [119225]

(2) if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the provision of voice output communication aids in special schools for children with learning disabilities and lack of verbal communication skills; and what his policy is in respect of allowing the use of such aids at home. [119229]

Jacqui Smith: Information on specific provision that local education authorities (LEAs) make to special schools in relation to communication aids is not collected centrally.

The Education Act 1996, associated regulations, and guidance in the 'Code of Practice on the identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs' places a statutory duty on LEAs to identify and assess children with special educational needs (SEN) for whom they are responsible. Where this leads to the issuing of a statement of SEN, the LEA has to ensure the child receives the special educational provision identified in the statement and the support required to ensure this provision fully meets the needs of the child. In cases where provision includes the use of communication aids many LEAs allow children to take such equipment home where it is appropriate, and we fully support that course of action.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what steps his Department is taking to evaluate and analyse the benefits of voice output communication aids for children with communication difficulties in special schools; and if he will make a statement; [119226]

(2) what steps his Department is taking to help special schools and LEAs to improve the provision of communication aids for children with speech and communication problems. [119228]

Jacqui Smith: The Department is not, at present, undertaking any evaluation or analysis of the benefits of voice output communication aids for children with communication difficulties in special schools.

Local education authorities (LEAs) are responsible for identifying and making a statutory assessment of children with special educational needs (SEN) for whom they are responsible. Where this leads to the issuing of a statement of SEN, the LEA has a duty to ensure the child receives the special educational provision identified in the statement and the support required to ensure this provision fully meets the needs of the child. This includes support required by children with communication difficulties. We would expect LEAs to monitor and evaluate locally the provision and support they make available to meet fully children's SEN.

The Department supports, through the British Educational Communications and Technology Agency (Becta), two national assessment centres for pupils with communication difficulties.

These centres provide specialist assessments to identify where technology, in particular communication aids and computers with assistive technology, (such as speech output, switch and keyboard alternatives), can provide access to the curriculum. They provide a focus of information and experience that can be accessed by anyone who has an involvement with children who have communication difficulties, including special schools.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from local education authorities requesting central government ring-fenced financing for voice output communication aids, in special schools for pupils with communication difficulties; and if he will make a statement. [119227]

Jacqui Smith: There have been no representations from local education authorities (LEAs) requesting central government ring-fenced financing for voice output communication aids for pupils in special schools with communication difficulties.

Recycling

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his policy on the recycling of materials produced by his Department. [107858]

Mr. Wills: The Department's policy is in line with the Government-wide waste minimisation strategy which promotes reduction, re-use and recovery through recycling. All of the Department's buildings have recycling schemes in place for paper, toner cartridges and fluorescent tubes. We also recycle computer equipment to schools.

Capital Modernisation Fund

Mr. Benton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what further plans he has for using Capital Modernisation Fund allocations in schools. [119722]

Jacqui Smith: We are pleased to announce that £60 million is being allocated from the Capital Modernisation Fund to tackle deficiencies in secondary school science over the next two years. The initiative will do this by funding the construction of imaginative and effective 21st century laboratories at those schools most in need.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce further appointments to the Commission for Racial Equality. [119912]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am pleased to announce that I have appointed Beverley Bernard as Deputy Chair for the Commission for Racial Equality. The appointment is initially for three years on a part-time basis.

Community Safety and Partnership Report

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the report by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary on Community Safety and Partnership. [119913]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Yes. I have today placed in the Library a note of the recommendations from the report, together with the Commissioner's responses and the police authority responses, which take into account the advice that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I have received from the Metropolitan Police Committee.

Motorcycle Theft

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what motorcycle theft reduction targets he has recently set. [119602]

Mr. Charles Clarke: No targets have been set specifically for the reduction of motorcycle theft. Motorcycle theft, which is estimated to account for about 6 per cent. of all thefts of vehicles, is included within the national target to reduce vehicle crime by 30 per cent. by 2004.

Terrorism

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to seek external legal advice on the definitions of terrorism and terrorist act in proposed (a) domestic legislation and (b) the International Convention on the Suppression of Terrorism. [118977]

Mr. Straw: In developing proposals for the definition of terrorism and a terrorist act in the Terrorism Bill, the Government took account of the responses to its consultation paper "Legislation Against Terrorism", including those which provided legal advice. Since the introduction of the Terrorism Bill, the Government have received a number of submissions from bodies on the definition, including some which specifically provided legal advice on the matter. These have been carefully considered.

The Government have no plans to seek further legal advice on the terms of the International Convention on the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism or the International Convention on the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings.

European Committee for the Prevention of Torture

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which organisations he has consulted concerning his proposed response to the 29 March 1998 communication from the President of the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture; if he will place a copy of the response in the Library; and what is the reason for the delay in responding to this communication. [118978]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Outside Government, we have consulted the Metropolitan police, the Crown Prosecution Service, and the Government of the Isle of Man.

The Government responded to the communication to which the Question refers on 16 October 1998. Delays in publication of the report are largely due to what appears to be a bureaucratic oversight by the Committee and then to its initial unwillingness to remove passages subject to legal professional privilege. It was published on 13 January 2000.

We hope to send the Government's response to the Committee on 19 April, and that the Committee will publish it within two or three weeks. This delay has enabled us to respond more fully to the Committee's recommendations in the context of the Government's consideration of an independent police complaints system. I will place a copy of the response in the Library when it has been published.

Fires

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths from fire there were in (a) residential and (b) non-residential property where a sprinkler system was fitted in each of the last 10 years. [119110]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information is given in the table.

Number of deaths from fire in dwellings [1] and non-residential properties where a sprinkler system [2] was fitted, 1988–98, United Kingdom

Year	Dwellings	Non-residential properties
1989	—	3
1990	—	—
1991	—	—
1992	—	2
1993	—	—
1994	—	2
1995	—	—
1996	—	—
1997	—	—
1998[3]	—	—

[1] Includes caravans, boats and other non-building structures used solely as a permanent dwelling

[2] Includes drencher systems from 1988 to 1993

[3] Provisional

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths from fire in residential property there were where a freestanding smoke detector was (a) fitted and working and (b) fitted but not working in each of the last 10 years. [119111]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information for 1994 to 1998 only is given in the table. Figures for smoke alarm operation were not collected nationally for years prior to 1994. The table has been split to show both numbers of deaths from fire where a smoke alarm was present, operated and raised the alarm, and deaths where smoke alarms were present, operated, but did not raise the alarm (ie although the alarm sounded the fire brigade was not called).

Number of deaths from fire in dwellings [1] by presence and operation of smoke detectors, United Kingdom, 1994 [2]–98 [4]

	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998 [4]
Smoke alarm presence and operation:

Total	488	559	564	562	[5]506(496)

[1] Includes caravans, boats and other non-building structures used solely as a permanent dwelling.
[2] Prior to 1994 data was not collected.
[3] Category includes instances where alarm was raised by people before smoke alarm operated; no-one was in earshot; alarm incorrectly installed etc.
[4] Figures for 1998 are provisional.
[5] Figures for 1998 are estimated to take account of revisions as later information is received.

Police Vehicle Accidents

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent arrangements he has made to ensure that emergency services adopt safe driving procedures. [119207]

Mr. Charles Clarke: This is an operational matter for the police service, the ambulance service and the fire service. The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) reviewed training arrangements in their Police Pursuit Driving Training report of September 1998. The report has been accepted in principle by all of the 43 police forces in England and Wales and its recommendations are being taken forward on a national basis.

Under the Fire Services Act 1947, it is the duty of each fire authority to provide the efficient training of the members of the fire brigade taking account of Home Office guidance and local circumstances.

I understand that drivers of emergency ambulances are required to undertake a two-week practical and theoretical training course. This arrangement has been in place since the 1970s and driving standards are assessed by specially trained driving instructors.

Female Circumcision

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training is given to (a) police officers and (b) other law enforcement groups for the policing of the Prohibition of Female Circumcision Act 1985. [119187]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The training of police officers is ultimately the responsibility of individual chief constables who have discretion to provide training on any subject for which there is a local need.

We are not aware of any other law enforcement groups which might be involved in policing the Act.

Sentencing

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures the Government will put in place to respond to the findings of the Sentencing Advisory Panel on fairness and consistency in sentencing for environmental offences. [119209]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The role of the Sentencing Advisory Panel is to provide views to the Court of Appeal on particular offences or categories of offence to assist the Court in framing or revising guidelines. The Court of Appeal has discretion as to how it chooses to use those views. It would not be appropriate for the Government to interfere in this.

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action the Government will take to implement the Sentencing Advisory Panel's recommendations that a higher level of compensation than £5,000 for environmental offences should be allowed in magistrates courts. [119191]

Mr. Charles Clarke: On 21 January 2000, the Chairman of the Sentencing Advisory Panel wrote to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary suggesting an increase in the level of compensation available in magistrates courts for environmental offences. The Government are currently considering how to respond.

Online Services

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the services which (a) his Department and (b) the executive agencies responsible to his Department (i) provide online and (ii) expect to be deliverable online by 2002. [119439]

Mr. Straw: The Cabinet Office will shortly be publishing the spring 2000 report summarising progress towards the delivery of all Government services electronically by 2005. We are currently collecting data to contribute to that report. This will include our progress towards delivering 25 per cent. of Government services electronically by 2002. We currently provide a range of services electronically which include the following:

a 24 hour, seven day a week call centre within the United Kingdom Passport Agency, established in January this year, which is able to give members of the public responses to a wide range of inquiries, including progress of their passport applications;

the online provision of Home Office research and statistical publications. This includes the Digest of Criminal Justice Statistics, enabling criminal justice practitioners, academics and other members of the public to carry out their own analysis of criminal justice statistics; and a comprehensive online information service, provided by the Home Office website, for all aspects of my Department's work.

Extradition Powers

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers he has to seek the extradition of persons suspected of murdering British citizens abroad. [119289]

Mr. Straw: I have no powers to seek the return of persons suspected of murdering British subjects abroad unless the suspect is also a British subject. Under section 9 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861, the extraterritorial jurisdiction of courts in England and Wales extends only to cases where a British subject is accused of committing murder or manslaughter abroad and not to those where the victim is a British subject.

Dr. Harold Shipman

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if inquests will be held into the deaths of the 23 further alleged victims of Dr. Harold Shipman in connection with which the Director of Public Prosecutions has decided he should not be charged. [119723]

Mr. Straw: I understand that the relevant coroner is considering whether inquests ought to be held. Since the bodies have all been cremated in these cases, the coroner cannot proceed without my authority. If such consent is sought, I will consider very carefully whether inquests are desirable and whether to direct the coroner accordingly.

Fire Service

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the recommendations of the inquiry into the machinery for determining firefighters' conditions of service. [119127]

Mr. Straw [pursuant to his reply, 12 April 2000, c. 226W]: The word "employees" was inadvertently substituted for the word "employers" in the first paragraph. The final sentence of the first paragraph should, therefore, have read:

These include proposals which would involve the acceptance by the employers and the union of conciliation and arbitration, in the event of disputes, a clarification of procedures, a streamlining of the negotiation arrangements, and an independent Chair for the National Joint Council.

PRIME MINISTER

Synchrotron

Mr. Field: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the dates on which meetings were held between Her Majesty's Government and the French Government on the Synchrotron project; and if he will make a statement on the nature of the French Government's representations on the siting of the Synchrotron. [117103]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 3 April 2000]: I am advised that officials from the UK Government and the French Government met on 15 September 1999, 4 November 1999 and 13 December 1999 to discuss the new synchrotron project. On 14 October 1999 my noble Friend the Minister for Science had a private discussion with the French Minister for Research and Education who stated that it would be more acceptable for the French if the synchrotron were to be located at the Rutherford Laboratory. My noble Friend had a further conversation with the French Minister on 9 March 2000, during which the French Minister said they would withdraw their support from the synchrotron project if the Wellcome Trust withdrew.

Both partners expressed the view that the favoured the Rutherford site. The French Education Ministry state publicly that

This site was strongly supported by the French partners in the project and we are delighted with this choice.

The Wellcome Trust stated that they would withdraw from the partnership if the decision was taken to locate the project at Daresbury.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Field: To ask the Prime Minister when he will reply to the question tabled on 28 March by the right hon. Member for Birkenhead on Government meetings in connection with the relocation of the synchrotron (reference 117103). [119693]

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

Personal Envoys

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to ensure that all persons carrying out duties abroad on his behalf can be questioned in Parliament. [118425]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 April 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) to the right hon. Member for Horsham (Mr. Maude) on 12 April 2000, Official Report, column 180W.

Pig Farmers

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from pig farmers on the compensation sought for the BSE-equivalent costs. [119448]

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations. But, as has been made clear by Agriculture Commissioner Fischler, payment of aid to pig producers linked to BSE is not possible under EU state aid rules. Helping the industry to meet the challenges it faces is the way forward and this is the prime objective of the Pig Industry Aid Scheme I announced at my meeting with industry leaders on 30 March 2000.

Correspondence

Mr. Norman: To ask the Prime Minister if he will reply to the letters of 5 and 13 April from the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells. [119682]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 390W.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Accumulated Service Medals

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what procedure was followed by the Honours and Distinction Committee to ascertain the eligibility of members of the Royal Irish Regiment claiming accumulated service medals, but for whom the necessary records were not available. [119344]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 17 April 2000]: I have been asked to reply.

The Royal Warrant for the Accumulated Campaign Service Medal specifies that the award to Royal Irish Regiment personnel is dependent upon completion of 1,080 operational duties for full-time members, and 1,000 operational duties for part-time members. In the absence of contemporary local records, the Ministry of Defence has introduced a protocol to assist applicants in providing evidence of their operational service. Dedicated teams have been established to help applicants with their cases and each applicant is allocated his/her own case officer. As the qualifying criteria for the medal remain unchanged, there has been no need for my Department to consult the Committee on the Grant of Honours, Decorations and Medals (known as the HD Committee).

Action 2000

51. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the President of the Council what assessment she has made of the work of Action 2000 and the Government's Year 2000 programme. [118177]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government's year 2000 programme has been an outstanding success, with the UK almost untouched by the Bug. This is due to the hard work of many across the public and private sectors who worked in partnership with Government and Action 2000.

The work done has also delivered far-reaching benefits. These are drawn out in a Command Paper entitled "Modernising Government in Action: Realising the Benefits of Y2K" that I am publishing today. The Paper explains how the lessons and benefits of tackling the Bug are being captured across government.

56. Mr. White: To ask the President of the Council what assessment she has made of the work of Action 2000 in tackling the year 2000 problem. [118182]

Mrs. Beckett: Action 2000's contribution in helping to tackle the Millennium Bug has been significant. The National Infrastructure Forum (NIF) alone was a remarkable achievement. The links which were forged in the NIF, and the work done to map the key processes of the national infrastructure, will be of lasting benefit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Modernisation

50. Kali Mountford: To ask the President of the Council how many recommendations have been made by the Select Committee on Modernisation of the House of Commons; and how many have been implemented. [118176]

Mrs. Beckett: The Modernisation Committee reported at the beginning of this Session that of the 56 recommendations we have made, 47 have been approved by the House and implemented either in whole or in part. Since then, another one has been implemented by the use of a second Reading Committee for the Royal Parks (Trading) Bill.

53. Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Council if she will bring forward proposals to the Select Committee on Modernisation of the House of Commons to increase the amount of time available for oral questions. [118179]

Mr. Tipping: No. But any Member of the House may put proposals to the Modernisation Committee.

Parliamentary Adjournments and Recesses

52. Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Council if she will make it her policy that hon. Members should be able (a) to have written questions answered and (b) to table and have published early-day motions during parliamentary adjournments; and if she will make a statement. [118178]

Mr. Tipping: The Modernisation Committee is currently looking at questions in the recess; until now, no Member has raised the matter of EDMs.

58. Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on the factors that she takes into account in determining parliamentary recesses. [118185]

Mr. Tipping: My right hon. Friend takes many factors into account in determining Parliamentary recesses, including the progress of business, Members' needs to have time for constituency business, and the desirability of arrangements which allow Members and staff to spend time with their families.

Visitor Facilities

54. Angela Smith: To ask the President of the Council to ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what recent discussions the Commission has had on the provision of refreshment facilities for visitors to the House. [118180]

Mr. Kirkwood: This is primarily a matter for the Catering Committee, as my hon. Friend knows. In my reply to her on 26 July 1999, Official Report, columns 17–18, I indicated that provision of the Visitor Centre depended upon acquisition and conversion of Westminster Hall cafeteria once Portcullis House was functioning. Work towards establishing the Visitor Centre is accordingly expected to begin in 2001.

Human Rights Committee

55. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has to propose the establishment of a human rights committee. [118181]

Mr. Tipping: Draft Standing Orders for a Joint Committee on Human Rights are in preparation. The Government propose that the Committee should have a wide remit to study human rights in the United Kingdom. It remains the expectation that the Joint Committee will start its work before implementation of the Human Rights Act.

Electronic Voting

57. Ms Coffey: To ask the President of the Council what representations she has received on electronic voting. [118183]

Mr. Tipping: I have received no written representations.

Portcullis House

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee when Portcullis House will be opened. [118820]

Sir Sydney Chapman: Hon. Members and their staff will start to be moved into the building in September.

DEFENCE

Crossmaglen Gaelic Athletic Association

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what amount of public funds was paid as compensation to Crossmaglen Gaelic Athletic Association for use of a portion of their playing fields; and if he will make a statement. [119019]

Mr. Ingram: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the matter in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. Denis Stanley. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Denis Stanley to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 18 April 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me, as Chief Executive of the Compensation Agency in Northern Ireland, to reply to your recent Question about compensation paid to Crossmaglen Gaelic Athletic Association in respect of use of part of their land by the security forces.

Land belonging to the Association was first requisitioned by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under the Emergency Provisions Act in 1974. In 1985 a sum of £150,000 was paid by way of compensation in respect of the period 1974 to February 1985. This compensation was a composite amount and covered both physical damage to the property and the requisitioning of land. For the period subsequent to February 1985 the amount of compensation payable in respect of requisitioned land has been the subject of an appeal to the County Court which is still on-going.

I hope this explains the position.

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 April 2000, Official Report, columns 486–87W, on AWE Aldermaston, against what criteria the parent companies were judged to ensure that they achieved full compliance on safety performance. [118561]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 10 April 2000]: The assessments of the competing consortiums' bids were made on the basis of a safety criterion with 28 components of which 20 were classed as critical. Compliance was required against each of the critical components in order for the bid to be processed further. The components are as shown—(C=Critical; NC=Non-critical):

Policy, Strategy and General

To maintain, and where appropriate improve, an effective policy and strategy for ensuring high health safety and environmental performance (C).

Achievement of applicable standards and maintenance of company standards (C).

Track Record (C).

Co-operation with Authority's safety bodies (C).

Safety QA and documentation (C).

Provision of safety services (C).

Measuring Safety Performance

An effective safety performance measurement system to cover all significant and appropriate Environment Safety and Health matters on and off site (C).

Effective accident and incident investigation, analysis and reporting (C).

Planning, Implementing and Maintaining Safety

Five year plan (C).

Maintenance and improvement of an effective safety management system and improvement of performance as appropriate (C).

Provision of management prospectus (C).

Maintenance of site as safe place to be, safe working, justification of operations and facilities, peer review (C).

Control of hazardous materials, including criticality safety and explosives, and control of all wastes (C).

Nuclear weapon safety (C).

Provision of emergency response (C).

Restriction of access to designated premises (C).

Effective planning and implementation (NC).

Organisation for implementing Policy

Senior personnel (C).

The maintenance of effective communications on safety matters and provision of information (C).

Competence (C).

Safety culture (NC).

Management Control (NC).

Employee involvement (in Environment Safety and Health activity) (NC).

Regulatory interface (NC).

Audit, Review, Action tracking, Verification and Essential Services

Effective corrective action including planning and verification of close out (C).

An effective audit system with benchmarking (NC).

Collective review of safety performance information and analysis for trends and causes (NC).

Measures to maintain essential services (NC).

Munitions

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress with long-range precision munitions; and if he will make a statement. [117487]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The Strategic Defence Review identified precision weapons as an increasingly important military capability. The value of long-range all-weather precision weapons was confirmed during Kosovo and they are a key capability in the NATO Defence Capabilities Initiative. Long-range weapons allow the UK armed forces to strike with less risk to UK personnel and equipment, and precision guidance reduces the risk of civilian casualties.

Our current long-range precision strike capability is provided by the submarine-launched Tomahawk Land Attack Missile (TLAM) which entered service in 1998 and proved effective during Kosovo. From 2002 this capability will be complemented by the introduction of the air-launched Storm Shadow missile.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Royal Ordnance sites from which Ministry of Defence Police cover will be withdrawn; on what date this will take effect; and if he will make a statement. [117665]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 5 April 2000]: Ministry of Defence Police are currently deployed at the Royal Ordnance sites in Bridgwater, Chorley, Glascoed, Nottingham and Radway Green. Royal Ordnance has requested that they be withdrawn as a cost saving measure and replaced by alternative arrangements. We have concluded that there is not sufficient reason to insist on their retention and are commencing consultation on the withdrawal of MDP from the sites in question subject to certain physical security enhancements required by the licensing authorities.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence Police will be deployed to Kosovo in support of the UN International Police Force; what will be the length of their tour; what training they will receive; and if he will make a statement. [117667]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 5 April 2000]: Up to 60 Ministry of Defence Police officers are to be deployed to Kosovo in support of the UN International Police for a 12-month tour of duty. All officers are currently undergoing a four-week training course including advanced firearms tactics, explosives and weapon searches, conflict resolution, personal safety and conditions in Kosovo.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will bring forward legislation to extend the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Defence Police to give them the same constabulary powers as Home Office police; and if he will make a statement. [117669]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 5 April 2000]: The Ministry of Defence Police already have constabulary powers in the places defined in Section 2 of the Ministry of Defence Police Act 1987. The adequacy of these powers is currently being reviewed.

Procurement Projects

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the procurement projects worth £300 million or more for which, since 1996, (a) delivery dates, (b) stage payment dates and (c) in-service dates have been varied from those specified in the original contracts. [118264]

Dr. Moonie: The information requested is not readily available; however, I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Helsinki European Council

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence following the decisions made at the Helsinki European Council relating to a Common Defence and Security capability of the European Union, which tasks within the remit of armed forces acting on the authority of the Council are additional to those capable of being conducted by agreement of all members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation; and who is responsible for liaison between the Political and Military Committee of the European Council and the decision-making authority of NATO. [118866]

Mr. Hoon: At Helsinki, EU member states made a commitment to be able, by 2003, to deploy rapidly and sustain up to 60,000 troops capable of undertaking the full range of Petersberg tasks. The Petersberg tasks are defined as humanitarian intervention, rescue operations, peacekeeping, and crisis management (including peacemaking). NATO is capable of conducting all of these tasks.

The mechanisms for liaison between the EU Political and Security Committee and the NATO North Atlantic Council are being developed in accordance with the conclusions of the Helsinki European Council and the NATO Washington Summit.

Balkans (Equipment)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost to his Department of equipment lost, damaged, and no longer available for MOD use in (a) Bosnia and (b) Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [119167]

Mr. Spellar: The estimated total cost of stock written off to date, in relation to operations in the Balkans, is:

(a) Bosnia: £11.0 million (including £1.303 million for one Hercules aircraft)

(b) Kosovo: £1.4 million.

Northern Ireland Regiments

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines govern the involvement of part-time and serving members of the armed forces in political activities; if members of the (a) Ulster Defence Regiment and (b) Royal Irish Regiment are subject to separate guidelines for Northern Ireland; and how many soldiers have been dismissed for political activities in each year since the UDR was created. [118980]

Mr. Spellar: Guidelines on political activity for members of the armed forces, including full-time and part-time members of the Royal Irish Regiment, are contained in Queens Regulations for each service.

The Ulster Defence Regiment (UDR) used to have a separate set of Regulations with guidelines on political activities, and these clearly stated that Queens Regulations also applied to UDR personnel.

We have no records of the number of soldiers dismissed for engaging in political activities.

Meteorological Stations

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the social and economic impact on remote and island communities of the automation of meteorological stations; and if he will make a statement. [118969]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 14 April 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Ewins to Mrs. Ray Michie, dated 18 April 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the social and economic impact on remote and island communities of the automation of meteorological stations. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of The Met Office.

The Met Office is looking to improve efficiency and reduce costs in the delivery of weather services. The automation of meteorological stations is not a new initiative but an important part of this strategy.

Trials are to commence shortly to assess the feasibility of extending the automation process into areas where, up to now, manual observations have been seen as necessary for our operations. Assuming a satisfactory outcome from the trials, we plan to automate the observing functions at several locations around the United Kingdom, including Tiree Airport.

We recognise that the withdrawal of Met Office observers from Tiree, should this be the outcome, could have an adverse impact on the local community, and this I would very much regret. In particular, the services delivered by the Highlands and Islands Airport Ltd are likely to be affected. We are, therefore, discussing options with them to examine how they could continue to provide the Aerodrome Meteorological reports which are necessary for airport operations, in the absence of our observers.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Offices

Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has defined what is a reasonable distance when determining access to a post office. [119757]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Decisions on access criteria will be made in the light of the Performance and Innovation Unit's report on the post office network and subsequent consultations with interested parties.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what agreement he has with the Post Office about the (a) number and (b) percentage of existing Crown post offices that should be maintained. [119002]

Mr. Alan Johnson: As set out in the White Paper "Post Office Reform: A World Class Service for the 21st Century", the Government agreed a strategy, reflecting proposals put by the Post Office to the trade unions, of retaining a core of directly owned and managed Crown offices. For the foreseeable future, the Post Office intends that at least 15 per cent. of the total business transacted by the counters' network is done at Crown offices.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if changes have taken place since May 1997 in the restrictions on the activities of Crown post offices. [119003]

Mr. Alan Johnson: No.

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he will promote to maximise the income of sub-postmasters from (a) benefit transactions and (b) other transactions following the introduction of automated credit transfers in post offices. [119205]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government have given a commitment that all benefit recipients who wish to access their benefits in cash at post offices will continue to be able to do so, both before and after the migration of benefit payments to automated credit transfer from 2003. By equipping the whole of the post office network with Horizon, a modern, automated IT platform towards the capital costs of which the Government are contributing £480 million, from spring 2001 the Post office will be able to improve its services to existing clients and take advantage of new business opportunities. In particular, Horizon offers the potential to move into automated network banking on an agency basis and to use the post office network as a delivery channel for electronic Government services.

Companies House

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what targets he has set Companies House for 2000–01. [119987]

Mr. Byers: I have set Companies House the following targets for the year 2000–01.

Operational Targets

To process 99 per cent. of statutory documents within five days of receipt at Companies House.

To achieve, on average, a monthly compliance rate for accounts submitted of 95 per cent.

To ensure that there is a minimum of 98 per cent. error-free work in current processing.

To ensure that 96 per cent. of all forms submitted to Companies House are captured error-free.

To answer 90 per cent. of all incoming telephone calls within 20 seconds.

Questions delegated to the Chief Executive

The Chief Executive to reply within 10 days to all letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply.

Complaints Handling

To clear up 90 per cent. of complaints within five days.

Financial Targets

To maintain a unit cost reduction of 3 per cent. in real terms on document registration.

To achieve, taking one year with another, a 6 per cent. average rate of return based on the operating surplus expressed as a percentage of average net assets.

To pay bills due within 30 days, or other agreed credit terms, on receipt of goods or services or a valid invoice, whichever is later.

I have placed copies of the Corporate Plan in the Libraries of the House.

Council for Science and Technology

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if new appointments have been made to the Council for Science and Technology. [119985]

Mr. Byers: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has recently decided to increase the number of independent members to 16 and to appoint the following as new members:

Mr. Javaid Aziz, CEO, Aspective

Mr. Euan Baird, Chairman, Schlumberger Ltd.

Professor Vicki Bruce, Deputy Principal of Research, University of Stirling

Professor Sir Paul Nurse, Director General, Imperial Cancer Research Fund

Professor Peter Schuddeboom, Vice President, Nortel Networks

Professor David VandeLinde, Vice-Chancellor, University of Bath

Mr. John Weston, Chief Executive, BAE Systems.

These new members replace five previous members, namely:

Dame Bridget Ogilvie, Chairman, COPUS

Sir Robin Nicholson, Chairman, Rolls Royce plc

Professor Sir Stewart Sutherland, Principal and Vice-Chancellor, University of Edinburgh

Mr. J. Martin Taylor, Chairman, W. H. Smith Group

Professor Sir Keith O'Nions, Chief Scientific Adviser to the Ministry of Defence (from January 2000).

The Prime Minister also decided to re-appoint:

Sir Richard Sykes, Chairman, Glaxo Wellcome plc (until March 2003)

Professor Sir Aaron Klug, President of the Royal Society (until the end of his Presidency of the Royal Society later this year)

Professor Kumar Bhattacharyya, Director, Warwick Manufacturing Group, University of Warwick (until March 2003).

I am most grateful for the support and advice we have received from Council members so far and very much look forward to working with the new Council.

Collum Report

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he plans to take on the Collum report on BNFL; and if he will make a statement. [118798]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 14 April 2000]: I have now received an outline of the proposed changes from the BNFL Chairman and Chief Executive, following their initial review of BNFL management. It will be for the company to implement the proposed changes, which will be achieved over a period of time. Where relevant, these will need to be fully consistent with the company's site licence obligations and agreed by the Government as shareholder. More detailed announcements related to the Review will be made in due course.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the Collum report on BNFL. [118790]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 12 April 2000]: I understand that Hugh Collum, the BNFL Chairman, intends shortly to make an announcement about the conclusions of his review.

Online Services

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the services which (a) his Department and (b) the executive agencies responsible to his Department (i) provide online and (ii) expect to be deliverable online by 2002. [119435]

Ms Hewitt: So that the Cabinet Office can publish the Spring 2000 report monitoring progress towards delivery of all Government services electronically by 2005, we are currently collecting data which will include our progress on delivering 25 per cent. of Government services electronically by 2002. I do not wish to pre-empt that report but I can say that we currently provide a range of services electronically which includes information and advice to small and medium enterprises via the Small Business Service Internet 'gateway', and other websites covering science and technology, information on 1.4 million companies (and facilities to register changes to company status), plus the award winning consumer gateway. By 2002, we shall be providing and contributing to more services in these areas and others such as trade promotion, company formations, oil well consents and applications for research grants.

Enterprise Fund

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he sought clearance from the EU Commission for the Enterprise Fund; and when he expects to reach agreement with the EU Commission on it. [119311]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 17 April 2000]: The Enterprise Fund consists of a number of elements.

The existing Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme element of the Enterprise Fund continues to operate under "de minimis" arrangements, apart from in the agriculture and fisheries/aquaculture sectors, which have been separately notified and cleared. The "de minimis" arrangements allow for schemes that contain aid falling below a minimum threshold level to be accepted without State Aid notification.

With regard to the venture capital elements of the fund, my Department's officials are working with Commission officials to assist them in their development of a framework for dealing with venture capital schemes on a community-wide basis. We expect this framework to be in place by summer 2000.

We expect the full amounts previously announced to be committed within this spending round.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he announced the establishment of the Enterprise Fund; and when the first payments will be made from it. [119310]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 17 April 2000]: The Enterprise Fund was announced in the December 1998 Competitiveness White Paper (Cm 4176). Payments are already being made under the fund.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes the EU has asked for to his Department's scheme for an Enterprise Fund. [119312]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 17 April 2000]: The EU has not asked for any changes to be made to my Department's scheme for the Enterprise Fund.

KONVER

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 16 March 2000, Official Report, column 274W, on KONVER, for what reason the KONVER Programme II Initiative was not renewed. [119051]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 17 April 2000]: The European Commission proposed to reduce the number of Community Initiative programmes from 13 to three as part of the Agenda 2000 package. There is no proposal to continue with the KONVER initiative.

Although Community Initiatives provided benefits in many areas of the country it was often the case that effort involved by all concerned in implementing their relatively small programmes was out of all proportion to the amount of money involved.

Mobile Phone Networks

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to include the recommendations of the Stewart report in the contract requirements for the new mobile phone network contracts. [119689]

Ms Hewitt: The Government regulate mobile phone networks via licences granted under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1998 and the Telecommunications Act 1984.

The Report of the Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones chaired by Sir William Stewart is expected to be published in May. It would not be appropriate for the Government to comment on it until that time.

Longbridge Task Force

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the names and occupations are of the members of the Longbridge Task Force. [119016]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The members of the Rover Task Force have been drawn from a wide range of organisations and between them represent the regional key partners in the West Midlands region.

The original membership has expanded to 20 under the chairmanship of Alex Stephenson, who also chairs the Regional Development Agency, Advantage West Midlands.

The current members and their occupations are:

Member	Occupation
Alex Stephenson	Task Force Chair and Chairman of Advantage West Midlands
Sue Battle	Chief Executive Officer of Birmingham Chamber of Commerce
Colin Beardwood	Councillor, Worcestershire County Council and Chair of the Regional Chamber of the Local Government Association
Kumar Bhattacharyya	Director, Warwick Manufacturing Group, Warwick University
Albert Bore	Leader of Birmingham City Council and university lecturer
Gerard Coyne	TGWU Regional Industrial Organiser and Birmingham City councillor
David Cragg	Chief Executive of Birmingham and Solihull TEC
Tom Watson	Policy Adviser to the AEEU
Nick Paul	Chair of CBI and also Deputy Chief Executive of IMI PLC
Mike Wright	Vice Chancellor of Aston University
David Ritchie	Regional Director, Government Office for the West Midlands
Rosemary Thew	Regional Director, West Midlands Employment Service
Mr. Graham Broome	Chief Executive Officer, Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders
Richard Burden MP	MP, Northfield constituency in Birmingham
Rt. Revd Mark Santer	Bishop of Birmingham
David Botterill	Chief Executive, Engineering Employers Federation
Ian Pearson MP	MP, Dudley South constituency
Sir Norman Fowler MP	MP, Sutton Coldfield constituency
Bill Holmes	Midlands Secretary of Manufacturing, Science and Finance Trades Union and regional Chair of the TUC
David Nicholas	Managing Director, Unipart
Keith Hirst	Chief Executive of Metsec PLC and Chair of Black Country Consortium

Nuclear Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received a copy of the report by ERM Ltd. for the European Commission on the prospective future demand for nuclear energy and the commitment by the member states of the European Union to the Kyoto Climate Change agreement. [119137]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 13 April 2000]: The Department has not yet received a copy of this report.

Hawk Exports (Zimbabwe)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his written answer of 17 February 2000, Official Report, column 629W, if Zimbabwe has repaid the full cost of the Hawk aircraft. [118633]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 11 April 2000]: Yes.

Patent Office

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what targets he has set the Patent Office for 2000–01. [119986]

Mr. Byers: I have set the Patent Office the following targets for 2000–01.

Patents

1. To issue 14,500 patent search reports or combined search and examination reports on average within three months from the date of request, with 90 per cent. of those within four months from the date of request.
2. To grant 8,500 valid patents on average within two years from the date of filing of the request for substantive examination, with 90 per cent. of those within three years from the date of request.

Designs

3. To register 7,700 designs on average within five months from the date of filing of the application, with 90 per cent. of those within 12 months.

Trade Marks

4. To process 70,000 trade mark class applications with a target to register within nine months, 90 per cent. of those to which no substantive objections are raised or oppositions filed.

Finance

5. To pay 100 per cent. of bills within 30 days of receipt of goods or services or a valid invoice, whichever is the later.

Questions designated to the Chief Executive

6. The Chief Executive will reply within 10 working days to all letters from Members of Parliament delegated to her for reply.

Efficiency Targets

7. To increase output in relation to current expenditure by an average of at least 2 per cent. per annum over the period 1998–99 to 2002–03.
8. I have placed copies of the Corporate Plan in the Libraries of the House.

TREASURY

Tax Law Rewrite Project

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been achieved by the Tax Law Rewrite project in the last year; and what plans it has for the coming year. [119823]

Dawn Primarolo: I am pleased to announce that the Tax Law Rewrite project is making excellent progress and continues to enjoy wide support. The Inland Revenue have today published a report which reviews the recent progress of the project and outlines its work programmes for 2000–01.

The rewritten legislation produced by the project has been very well received by the main users in the tax community and they are enthusiastic that the project should continue. I am very pleased to tell the House that the project plans to have its first rewrite Bill ready for introduction in Parliament later this year.

Budget Calculations

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when it became his policy to base increases in fuel duty on a forecast of the likely rate of inflation in the following September. [118747]

Mr. Timms: The increase in fuel duties has been based on a forecast of inflation since July 1997. The methodology for calculating the inflation indexed basis for changes in excise duties was set out in that Budget and in all subsequent Budgets.

Insurance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has (a) to review the regulatory and core structure of low contribution home service endowment insurance policies and (b) to propose amendments to the Industrial Assurance Act 1923. [119215]

Mr. Timms: The Government announced plans in June 1999 to amend the Industrial Assurance Acts 1923 and 1948. There has been useful recent consultation with the Association of British Insurers and the Association of Friendly Societies on the extent of the amendments. Following the amendments the FSA will regulate all home service business using its powers under the Financial Services and Markets Bill.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in the UK (a) received their pension every four weeks, (b) received 12 pension payments and (c) received 13 pension payments in 1999–2000. [118834]

Mr. Rooker: The administration of retirement pension is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Jackie Ballard, dated 17 April 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many pensioners in the UK (a) received their pension every four weeks, (b) received 12 pension payments and (c) received 13 pension payments in 1999–2000.

At March 2000, a total of 3,873,606 pensioners were receiving their retirement pension by four weekly payments. The payments were made four weeks in arrears and paid by Automated Credit Transfer (ACT) direct into the pensioners bank or building society accounts. All customers who were paid retirement pension by four weekly payments throughout the year would receive 13 four weekly pension payments.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what percentage the basic retirement pension could be increased in April without reducing the expected balance of the National Insurance Fund at the end of the year 2001–02 below the minimum level recommended by the Government Actuary. [117588]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

The basic pension and linked benefits could be increased by 11.8 per cent. in April 2000 without reducing the National Insurance Fund below the minimum level recommended by the Government Actuary in 2001–02. However, funding this level of increase even in that year only and with a return to uprating in line with prices thereafter would lead to a large shortfall in the next year and in subsequent years. This would lead to an increase in rates of National Insurance Contributions. Thus it can be seen that allocation of a surplus to an immediate increase has consequences for future years by wiping out this surplus.

Effects on national insurance fund if basic retirement pension and linked benefits are increased by 11.8 per cent. above April 2000 rate

£ billion

	NI fund balance at end of year	Minimum recommended	Excess/ shortfall
1999–2000	13.8	7.7	6.1
2000–01	12.1	8.6	3.5
2001–02	9.0	9.0	0.0
2002–03	4.6	9.4	–4.8
2003–04	–1.3	9.8	–11.1

Minimum Income Guarantee

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners will benefit from the minimum income guarantee in the (a) Cleethorpes, (b) Great Grimsby, (c) Scunthorpe and (d) Brigg and Goole constituencies. [118653]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

Minimum income guarantee recipients by parliamentary constituency

Constituencies	Number of pensioners
Cleethorpes	2,800
Great Grimsby	3,300
Scunthorpe	2,200
Brigg and Goole	2,500

Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, November 1999

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in (a) Warrington and (b) Warrington, North constituency are in receipt of the minimum income guarantee. [118851]

Mr. Bayley: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Helen Jones, dated 17 April 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many pensioners in (a) Warrington and (b) Warrington North Constituency are in receipt of the minimum income guarantee.

The minimum income guarantee relates to Income Support pensioners aged 60 and over. The information is given in the table.

Thousand

Area	Minimum income guarantee recipients
Warrington North parliamentary constituency	2.3
Warrington local authority	4.7

These figures are from the Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry of November 1999. Please note the sample size of 5% and therefore, subject to sampling error. They have been rounded to the nearest hundred.

I hope this reply is helpful.

SEMA Medical Services

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the recent survey conducted by his Department into SEMA Medical Services' doctors, concerning the following of scrutiny guidelines by doctors, how many doctors (a) were subject to the survey and (b) have been identified as needing any remedial training. [119140]

Mr. Bayley: Medical Policy Group audited 200 scrutiny decisions of 23 doctors from one medical centre. Twelve doctors were found to have given advice below the standard required by the Medical Services Scrutiny Guidelines and appropriate remedial training will be given.

It is important to recognise that this survey was not based on a representative sample and we shall therefore be carrying out further audit of the scrutiny process to check whether or not a wider problem exists.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the survey conducted by his Department into SEMA Medical Services' doctors, concerning incorrect awards of Incapacity Benefit, how many awards have been (a) disallowed and (b) increased. [119141]

Mr. Bayley: The Department's Medical Policy Group recently conducted a survey of a sample of 200 claims for Incapacity Benefit which had been subjected to scrutiny by SEMA Medical Services' doctors to determine whether medical examination of claimants should be undertaken. The survey revealed that some Medical Services doctors had not followed the new scrutiny guidelines introduced in February 1999. Had the guidelines been followed claimants in the sample who may have continued in receipt of Incapacity Benefit would have been further assessed by medical examination. It is not possible to predict the outcome of the Benefits Agency's decision-maker's determination of eligibility for Incapacity Benefit in an individual case if evidence provided in the form of an examining doctor's report had been made available.

A report of a medical examination by a Medical Services doctor is but one piece of evidence alongside other information provided by the claimant and from other sources, which may include other medical evidence from the claimant's General Practitioner, that the decision-maker will consider in determining eligibility for an award of benefit.

As part of normal claims processing, those claimants in the sample upon whom advice was given by Medical Services' doctors to award benefit without medical examination will have their claims reassessed by strict adherence to the scrutiny guidelines and, where applicable, further evidence will be gathered.

No award from the survey sample was disallowed, although some may have been approved on insufficient evidence.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the recent survey by his Department into SEMA Medical Services' doctors, if he will list the principal failures in relation to doctors who were found not to be following scrutiny guidelines. [119138]

Mr. Bayley: The Department's Medical Policy Group's audit of the 200 Incapacity Benefit cases subjected to scrutiny by SEMA Medical Services' doctors highlighted three areas where Medical Services' doctors had not followed scrutiny guidance:

Acceptance of the claimed level of disability with insufficient medical evidence.

Inappropriate requests for further medical evidence when the case is re-referred.

Inappropriate advice given on the period in time following which the claim should be reassessed.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will deposit in the Library a copy of the letter from the Benefits Agency to SEMA Group's Director of Medical Services instructing Medical Services to ensure compliance with the medical quality standards specified by his Department. [119102]

Mr. Bayley: A copy of the letter from the Benefits Agency to Sema Group's Director of Medical Services will not be deposited in the Library in accordance with paragraph 7 of "The Code of Practice on Access to Government Information". However, I am able to tell the hon. Member that the letter sought assurances that Medical Services would ensure compliance with the medical quality standards in the contract and take corrective action where appropriate.

Benefits (Mortgage Rate)

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the mortgage rate for benefit payments is calculated. [119743]

Mr. Bayley: Mortgage payments for benefit claimants are based on a Standard Interest Rate, which is calculated by the Building Societies Commission and is based on the weighted average of basic rates charged by the main building societies.

Child Support (Mortgages)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what his policy is on the termination of pre-existing endowment mortgages in order to establish a right to include payments towards the purchase of a new home in assessments of child support. [119321]

Angela Eagle: Housing costs, including those from repayment and endowment mortgages, are currently taken into account in the calculation of child support maintenance liability. However, if they are considered to be excessive, the amount allowed in the assessment may be restricted. Where a non-resident parent moves house, his new housing costs will be taken into account, although the existing assessment will be changed only if the effect of the new housing costs is to increase or reduce the liability by more than a fixed minimum amount.

Pensioners (Benefit Entitlement)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara) of 13 January 2000, Official Report, column 232W, what change there has been to the estimate that between 530,000 and 870,000 pensioner benefit units are entitled to but not receiving Income Support; and what are the reasons for the change. [118883]

Mr. Bayley [holding answer 17 April 2000]: The take-up statistics are published annually; the last edition, covering the period 1997–98, was published on 24 September 1999 and showed that there were between 530,000 and 870,000 pensioner entitled non-recipients (ENRs) of Income Support. The statistics are drawn from around 8,500 pensioner benefit units interviewed in the annual Family Resources Survey (FRS), which collects information on incomes and benefit receipt, and details of all income and savings.

As part of the programme of poorer pensioner research a sample of pensioners who appeared to be ENRs in the FRS were visited with a view to asking about barriers to claiming Income Support and about ways of encouraging them to claim. Respondents were first asked about changes in their financial circumstances since their original FRS interview. This suggests that the allowance for misreporting, made by the Department's statisticians when producing take-up statistics, merits review. Statisticians are reviewing this evidence and will incorporate it in the next set of statistics on take-up of income related benefits which are due to be published in the summer.

Industrial Injury Benefit (Asbestosis)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people receive industrial injury benefit as a result of having contracted asbestosis. [119244]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the tables. It should be noted that prescribed disease D1 is referred to as pneumoconiosis, but that this term covers a range of lung diseases caused by dust, including coal-workers' pneumoconiosis and silicosis, as well as asbestosis.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Rail Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the amount of money earmarked for refurbishment of the (a) Holyhead-Chester-Crewe and (b) Wrexham to Bidston rail routes; and if he will make a statement. [118192]

Mr. Hill: The Department understands from Railtrack that:

(a) around £3 million is committed for renewals on the Holyhead-Chester-Crewe rail route, principally to increase the line speed from 75mph to 90mph where practical and install Train Protection and Warning System (TPWS). Additionally, it is expected that around half of the £62m of new rolling stock being delivered to First North Western Trains over the next few months will be running in and around this area.

(b) around £1 million is committed for renewals on the Wrexham to Bidston rail route, principally to install TPWS and improve stations and track.

Species Legislation

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee on species legislation; and if he will make a statement. [118426]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 10 April 2000]: In autumn 1998, my Department requested the Joint Nature Conservation Committee (JNCC) to review the effectiveness of the species protection Schedules to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The JNCC has recently concluded its review and advises that the Schedules have been generally effective in deterring persecution of the species listed, that they should be retained to give legal protection to appropriate animals and plants, and also makes a number of recommendations.

I am already actively considering all of the issues raised in the JNCC's recommendations. Some, like the recommendation concerning enforcement of wildlife legislation, are already being addressed through the Countryside and Rights of Way Bill. With other aspects, I recognise that improvements to protection for threatened species in the wider countryside beyond the provisions of this Bill may be warranted and am considering what might be appropriate. Some measures may not necessarily require primary legislation, including JNCC's recommendation concerning the Quinquennial Review of the Schedules. I look forward to receiving JNCC's advice at the next Quinquennial Review in due course.

I also agree the problem caused by invasive alien species does need to be addressed and we plan to review the effectiveness of policy concerning non-native species which can present an ecological threat to the United Kingdom's indigenous wildlife.

Departmental Inquiries

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 311W, on departmental inquiries, what was the cost of each of his Department's commissioned reviews listed in his answer; what reports have been published to date; and what subsequent recommendations have been acted on. [118754]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 11 April 2000]: Information for reports and recommendations from the reviews listed in the Answer of 3 April have been placed in the Libraries of the House. Information on the cost of each review is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

UK/USA Meetings

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what meetings have been held between United States Government officials and his Department in (a) the USA and (b) the UK in the last 12 months, indicating the dates and locations of the meetings and the subjects discussed. [118626]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 11 April 2000]: Ministers and officials of the Department are in regular contact with officials of the United States Government and discuss a wide range of subjects. In addition to bilateral contracts, we often meet them in the margins of other international meetings.

Detailed information of meetings is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Greater London Authority

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the staffing structure of the units established to prepare for the establishment of the Greater London Authority. [118836]

Mr. Hill: The Government announced on 31 March 1999 the appointment of a Head of Transition for the Greater London Authority (GLA) and on 27 July 1999, the issuing of a consultation paper—"The Shape of Things to Come"—on the initial organisation of the GLA. Following the consultation period, I announced, in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Poplar and Canning Town (Mr. Fitzpatrick) on 7 December 1999, Official Report, column 482W, the publication of a response document to the consultation—"Shaping up for the Mayor and Assembly". This highlighted some minor changes to the organisational structure originally proposed. Copies of both documents were placed in the House Library.

Work has since proceeded to put in place an initial staffing structure, along the broad lines set out in the consultation paper. The future structure of the GLA, including permanent appointments for senior posts, will, of course, be a matter for the GLA itself, once it is established.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the staff posts which have been created to prepare for the establishment of the Greater London Authority, indicating the salaries of those posts and the length of their contracts; [118837]

(2) how many staff have been (a) appointed and (b) seconded by the Government to prepare for the establishment of the Greater London Authority. [118838]

Mr. Hill: The Government announced in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford) on 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 76W, the setting up of a Transition Team to make the arrangements for the establishment of the Greater London Authority (GLA) and to enable the Mayor and Assembly to operate effectively from 8 May 2000. The Transition Team currently comprises 52 temporary staff, of whom 17 are on secondment from local government, the Civil Service and other organisations, 15 have been appointed on short-term contracts and 20 are agency staff.

To date, 55 new permanent GLA staff have been appointed. These comprise secretarial, administrative, receptionist, human resources, legal, financial and best value staff, on salaries ranging from £18,800 to £49,000. In addition, 135 staff from the former London Research Centre, London Ecology Committee and London Planning Advisory Committee are reporting to the Secretary of State from 1 April and will transfer to the GLA on 8 May 2000 (or, in the case of a small group of London Research Centre staff, to Transport for London on 8 July 2000).

As well as the Transition Team, some 50 civil servants in the Government Office for London are currently working on aspects of the establishment of the GLA and its functional bodies, including the drafting of secondary legislation and transfer orders and schemes, support to the Greater London Returning Officer, and arrangements for the payment of grant.

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he intends to issue to the Greater London Authority on ethical standards under section 66 of the Greater London Authority Act 1999. [119825]

Mr. Hill: I have today placed copies of the Secretary of State guidance to the Greater London Authority on ethical standards in the Library of the House.

Lorry Weights

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 427W, on 44 tonne lorries, what studies he has (a) carried out and (b) commissioned on the effect on (i) rail freight and (ii) the environment of allowing the use of 44 tonne lorries; if he will publish data on the expected level of direct transfers between road and rail freight following the introduction of such lorries; and if he will list the measures the shadow Strategic Rail Authority is planning to support rail freight. [118841]

Mr. Hill: In its interim report "Permitting 44 tonne lorries for general use in the UK", the Commission for Integrated Transport considered carefully the impact of 44 tonne lorries on the rail freight market.

The Government accept the Commission's view that the overall environmental advantage lies in allowing 44 tonne lorries to operate generally. Not only will the efficiency savings result in a substantial reduction in lorry mileage but the use of 6-axle lorries, with a lower drive axle weight, will cause less wear to roads and bridges than existing 40 tonne, 5-axle vehicles already on our roads. This is based on research carried out by the US Highways Research Board, and confirmed by the UK Transport Research Laboratory and by work carried out in Germany.

The Commission concluded that further work to estimate the precise effect on rail freight's market share would be unlikely to produce reliable results in the light of the Rail Regulator's forthcoming review of track access charges and other factors.

The Government set up the shadow Strategic Rail Authority (sSRA) with a remit to develop detailed recommendations on measures to promote the growth of rail freight. That work will help inform our 10-year plan for transport, due to be published in the summer, and the Commission's final report on 44 tonne lorries, expected in the autumn.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Commission for Integrated Transport will make its final report on the case for allowing 44 tonne vehicles on to UK roads; and what assessment his Department has made of the impact of permitting 44 tonne lorries on the carriage of goods by rail. [119157]

Mr. Hill: I understand that the Commission for Integrated Transport (CfIT) hope to produce their final report on 44 tonne lorries and the development of rail freight in late autumn this year. I also understand that the report will concentrate on options for rail freight and will not revisit the case for 44 tonne lorries.

My Department relied on CfIT's very thorough analysis of the effects on rail freight of the introduction of 44 tonne lorries, and has not carried out separate studies.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department's announcement on raising the maximum general lorry weight limit to 44 tonnes was made to the House. [119279]

Mr. Hill: My noble Friend the Minister for Transport wrote to my hon. Friend on 11 April explaining that this announcement was included in the Budget Red Book.

Airport Slots

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 427–28W, concerning airport slots, which airports other than Heathrow are within the jurisdiction of ACL Ltd; to whom ACL is accountable for its operation of the EC Regulation; who pays the company; and if details of (a) ACL's contract and (b) the fees paid are available for public inspection. [118868]

Mr. Mullin: In addition to Heathrow, ACL has been appointed as co-ordinator under the EC Regulation for Gatwick, Stansted and Manchester airports. The company also acts on a non-statutory basis for Aberdeen, Birmingham, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Jersey, London City, London Luton, and Newcastle airports.

ACL's contract is with the airport operators; it is therefore in the first instance accountable to the airport. At the four fully co-ordinated airports, grievances could also be taken to the airport co-ordination committee, on which the airport operators, air carriers and air traffic control providers are represented. In addition, the Airport Slots Allocation Regulations 1993 place a statutory duty on airport co-ordinators to operate in accordance with the EC Regulation; their actions are challengeable in court. The Secretary of State has the power to withdraw his approval of the appointment of a co-ordinator if satisfied that the co-ordinator has acted other than in an independent manner.

75 per cent. of ACL's income comes from the fees that it charges to the airports where it acts as co-ordinator. About 21 per cent. comes from the 11 UK airlines that own the company, and the remainder from data sales, training and consultancy, and similar activity.

ACL's contracts are commercially sensitive and not available for public inspection. Its Annual Report and Accounts are available for inspection at Companies House.

London Underground

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will conduct the test involving the public sector comparator for London Underground funding in public; [119020]

(2) if he will (a) place the report by his financial advisers on the funding of London Underground in the Library and (b) ensure that the public sector comparator is published before any contracts are signed. [119021]

Mr. Hill: I refer to the answers given to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Pound) on 21 December 1999, Official Report, columns 525–26W, and to the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Brake) on 20 December 1999, Official Report, column 337W.

We have already placed in the Library of the House a detailed note describing the methodology London Transport has used to construct the public sector comparator against which bids for infrastructure improvement and maintenance contracts under the Public Private Partnership (PPP) will be tested. This methodology has been reviewed by KPMG as London Underground's independent, external auditors. They have confirmed that it accords with the relevant Treasury guidance and is appropriate to the circumstances of the PPP.

We will release the actual values produced by the comparator only once negotiations with bidders have been completed. To publish these any earlier would expose the taxpayer's negotiating position, and thus jeopardise our chances of securing best value.

Similarly, when Pricewaterhouse submitted their report on the options for London Underground, we produced a summary of the facts and analysis that underpinned the decision to proceed with the PPP. This was published and placed in the Library of the House in March 1998. To release the Pricewaterhouse report in full would have compromised our negotiating position.

Rail Freight

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what extra grants he plans to offer to rail freight companies to enable them to increase the carriage of goods by rail. [119184]

Mr. Hill: This financial year we have set a Freight Grants budget of £50 million for companies who choose to move goods by rail rather than road.

Under the Transport Bill, administration of the grants will pass to the Strategic Rail Authority. The shadow SRA is looking at whether the existing schemes fit its objectives and strategies. It will be able to develop the existing schemes and to introduce new ones.

Budget (Transport Schemes)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the breakdown is of the £280 million for transport schemes announced in the press notices from his Department after the Budget; and how many of those schemes are for (a) road and (b) rail improvements. [119014]

Mr. Hill: Details of the allocation of £250 million additional resources for transport in England were set out in a reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall) on 24 March 2000, Official Report, columns 702–03W.

Ribble Estuary

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect on wildfowl in the Ribble Estuary, Lancashire of global warming. [119100]

Mr. Mullin: My Department supports the UK Climate Impacts Programme at the University of Oxford to help organisations assess vulnerability to climate change. Three national projects concerning climate change impacts on biodiversity are currently in progress within the Programme, two of which are supported by my Department and MAFF. The first study is a general review of implications of climate change for nature conservation policies in the UK. The second is a project involving integrated assessments in two regions, NW England and East Anglia. The third is a modelling assessment of impacts on species and habitats in Britain and Ireland, including wildfowl in river estuaries. All three projects are in progress and the results have not yet been assessed. This is wider than, and would be applicable to, the Ribble Estuary, but no specific assessment has been made in the Ribble Estuary.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans his Department has to increase monitoring of wildfowl in the Ribble Estuary, Lancashire. [119099]

Mr. Mullin: The Ribble Estuary has been monitored since 1970 through the Wetland Bird Survey (WeBS). The WeBS is a joint scheme of the British Trust for Ornithology (BTO), the Wildfowl and Wetlands Trust (WWT), the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds (RSPB) and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee (JNCC) to monitor the non-breeding birds in the United Kingdom. Counts are made annually at around 2,000 wetland sites in the United Kingdom; estuaries and large still waters predominate. The Department believes the current monitoring of the Ribble Estuary to be sufficient.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice his Department has received from the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and other wildlife organisations concerning the Ribble Estuary and global warming. [119098]

Mr. Mullin: Research contractors working for the Department, MAFF and the UK Water Industry have held consultations with a large number of stakeholders in NW England in connection with an on-going study of climate change impacts in NW England. However, the Department is not aware of any specific concerns raised about the Ribble Estuary.

Biosafety Protocol

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the United Kingdom plans to ratify the Biosafety Protocol agreed in Montreal. [118939]

Mr. Meacher: The United Kingdom intends to sign and ratify the Biosafety Protocol to the Convention on Biological Diversity at the earliest opportunity consistent with our European Community obligations. The Protocol will be open for signature at the United Nations Office at Nairobi, Kenya, by states and regional economic integration organisations from 15–26 May, and at the United Nations Headquarters in New York from 5 June 2000 to 4 June 2001. The implications of the Protocol on the overall EU legislative framework must be fully assessed before ratification can be completed. As made clear in the Environment Council conclusions agreed on 30 March, we will be working with our European partners to ensure ratification as early as possible to ensure entry into force of the Protocol at an early stage.

Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what resources are available to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee to commission independent scientific, technical and other support studies from institutes and academic establishments; and what powers the Chairman of the Committee has to second relevant experts to assist the committee or its sub-committees. [119135]

Mr. Meacher: The Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee generally spends very little on supporting studies for its work. When it has, the sums involved have typically been of the order of £10,000 to £20,000 per annum. Under the Committee's agreed operational arrangements, the Chairman can, as appropriate, co-opt members with expertise relevant to particular work items.

Waste Dumping

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what action he is taking to ensure that waste is not illegally dumped; and what assessment he has made of the impact of the landfill tax on the illegal dumping of waste; [119242]

(2) what recent assessment he has made of the danger to the public posed by illegally dumped waste. [119241]

Mr. Meacher: The Government have put strict controls in place to ensure that waste is disposed of without danger to the public. The Environment Agency is responsible for their enforcement. It is a criminal offence to contravene these controls and there are severe penalties for anyone convicted of doing so. We have asked the Environment Agency to continue a vigorous policy of prosecuting, where it has the evidence, anyone who illegally disposes of waste on sites which have neither a waste management licence nor a licensing exemption registered with the Agency.

We have also commissioned research into the effects of the landfill tax and a copy of the research report "Effects Of Landfill Tax—Reduced Disposal Of Inert Waste To Landfill" has been placed in the Library of the House. One of the aims of the research was to establish whether there is evidence of illegal waste disposal by abuse of licensing exemptions. The allegations of abuse centre on two of the current licensing exemptions and we are reviewing these exemptions in the light of the report's findings.

Land and Property Budget

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received concerning the Land and Property Budget from regional development agencies in England. [119025]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 14 April 2000]: None.

Electric Goods

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the UK's EU partners about altering the potentially misleading energy use measurement for domestic refrigerators. [119292]

Mr. Meacher: The European Commission and member states have held discussions with manufacturers' representatives about methods for more consistent reporting of the efficiency performance of several product types covered by the EU energy label regime, including domestic refrigerators, and this has resulted in a protocol applied by the industry since the end of 1998. In the particular case of domestic refrigerators, a further important development has been the introduction of minimum standards requiring the removal of less efficient appliances (with an energy label rating of "D" or below) from the EU market from September last year.

Road Safety

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the measures which he is taking to reduce the number of road accidents; what is his evaluation of the impact of these measures; if it is his policy to increase the maximum penalties for drivers who cause death and injury to others; and what further measures he proposes to take to promote road safety. [119695]

Mr. Hill: The new road safety strategy "Tomorrow's roads—safer for everyone" sets out the measures the Government are taking to improve road safety. The strategy was published on 1 March 2000 and copies are available in the House Library.

In terms of the expected impact of the strategy, new casualty reduction targets have been set. By 2010, we are aiming to reduce the overall number of people killed or seriously injured in road accidents by 40 per cent; to reduce the number of children killed or seriously injured by 50 per cent. and to reduce the rate of slight injuries by 10 per cent, compared with the average for 1994–98.

As the strategy document explains, the Government are undertaking an urgent review, led by the Home Office, of penalties for a wide range of road traffic offences, including those involving the death and injury of other road users. In the light of this review, we will decide whether penalties need to be changed to provide a greater deterrent against bad driving.

Hedges

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will report on responses to the consultation paper on high hedges; and if he will make a statement. [119708]

Mr. Mullin: We are currently analysing the responses to this consultation. We hope to make a statement, setting out our decisions on the way forward on this issue and the reasons for them, by the summer.

EU Structural Fund

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made with programme agreement for those areas that have lost Objective 2 status but have entitlement to transitional funding; and if he will make a statement. [119560]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Following the formal approval of the UK Objective 2 map on 30 March, the UK can now submit draft Objective 2 programmes to the European Commission. We formally lodged with the Commission on 14 April the Objective 2 programme documents for Yorkshire and the Humber; North East; West Midlands; East Midlands; North West; London; East of England and South East. (The programme for the South West will be lodged at a slightly later date.) This should ensure that these programmes will be eligible for funding to be backdated to 1 January 2000, and will help in meeting financial commitments in the first year of the programme.

These programmes documents include details of plans for transitional areas in each region. We fully anticipate that, subject to negotiations with the European Commission, all the English Objective 2 programmes will be approved before the end of the year.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the maximum amount of commission which can be claimed by the site owner on the sale of mobile homes; and if he will make a statement. [119659]

Mr. Mullin: The maximum amount of commission payable to the site owner on the sale of a mobile home is currently 10 per cent. of the sale price. I expect to receive shortly a report by the Park Homes Working Party covering the statutory framework of controls over the park homes industry.

Deprivation (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications he has received for funding from London borough councils to tackle local deprivation within their borough in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [119588]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The following applications have been received from the London boroughs for funding from the Single Regeneration Budget, which tackles local deprivation, in the last 12 months.

Single Regeneration Budget Round 5–18 local authority-led final bids received in April 1999.

Single Regeneration Budget Round 6–18 local authority-led Expressions of Interest received in March 2000.

Other bids may have contained local authorities as partners in the schemes, but not formally leading those bids.

Zoo Licensing Act 1981

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to exempt farm attractions from the provisions of the Zoo Licensing Act 1981. [119699]

Mr. Mullin: The Zoo Licensing Act 1981 requires any establishment where wild animals are kept for exhibition (other than a circus or pet shop) to which members of the public have access, with or without charge for admission, on more than seven days in any period of 12 consecutive months, to be licensed.

Farm attractions which keep wild animals would qualify as zoos under the Act. There are no plans to exempt them from its provisions.

Health and Safety

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what initiatives are being taken by the Health and Safety Executive and his Department to increase health and safety awareness among young workers. [119596]

Mr. Meacher: My Department fully supports the current programme of the Health and Safety Commission and the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) to make young people aware of health and safety risks in preparation for work from an early age. HSE is collaborating with the Department for Education and Employment in embedding health and safety throughout the education system and has recently published guidance for organisers of work experience. Research is planned into the particular problems of young people new to work and the most effective means of communicating with them. HSE continues to work with organisations such as the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents and the TUC in initiatives to get messages across to young people at, or about to start, work.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people under the age of 25 years have been killed or seriously injured at work in the last year for which figures are available. [119595]

Mr. Meacher: Provisional data for 1998–99[1] as reported to all enforcing authorities are set out in the table. This excludes 86 fatalities and 5,329 major injuries where the age of the injured person was not recorded.

	Fatal injuries	Non-fatal or major injuries[2]
Employees	20	3,845
Self employed	1	42
Members of the public[3]	80	13,067
Total	101	16,954

[1] Data are for 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999

[2] As defined by the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995, according to the employment status of the injured person

[3] Included suicides and trespassers on railways

Cornish

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to complete his Department's assessment of the status of the Cornish language before ratification of the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages in November this year. [119348]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We will consider carefully the Government's position on Cornish, taking account of the findings of an independent academic study commissioned by the Government Office for the South West and in consultation with other Departments. The Government expect to be in a position to ratify the Charter later this year. The timing of ratification does not depend on the outcome of our consideration of the issue of Cornish.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to publish the recently completed study report into the status and usage of the Cornish language in Cornwall. [119347]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Copies of the report of the independent academic study on Cornish, commissioned by the Government Office for the South West, will be published shortly and copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The report will be available on the Government Office's website www.gosw.gov.uk and on request.

Ministerial Statements

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his Department's letter of 5 April to the right hon. Member for Fylde, signed by the Private Secretary to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, if it is the policy of his Department not to provide explanations of ministerial statements if the source for the facts contained therein is party political briefings. [119594]

Mr. Hill: I understand that this question arises from an exchange during oral questions on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 13. I assume that my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) was making reference to Sir Horace Cutler's internal report for the Tory Group on the GLC, which found that the only way the Tube could be privatised would be to reduce off-peak services to no more than two trains an hour.

Motorcycles

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the benefits of reducing vehicle excise duty to zero for motorcycles under 125cc. [119598]

Mr. Hill: In November 1998, the Government consulted on a range of options for the environmental reform of Vehicle Excise Duty, including the creation of a new low VED band for motorcycles with engines up to 125cc. The benefits of motorcycle use are currently being examined in support of the work of the DETR's Advisory Group on Motorcycles. The outcome of those considerations will inform future decisions on Vehicle Excise Duty, which are a matter for the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to encourage more commuters to travel into London by motorcycle. [119597]

Mr. Hill: As London is shortly to have a Mayor, this issue will be for his or her consideration in drawing up an integrated transport strategy. Section 142 of the Greater London Authority Act 1999 makes it clear that the Mayor's integrated transport strategy should encompass all forms of transport.

The Government's policy on transport was set in the White Paper "A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone" which, among other things, included a commitment to establish an advisory group on motorcycling. My noble Friend the Minister of State set up this group in May 1999.

The Government have also published guidance, which encourages local authorities to take account of motorcyclists when preparing their local transport plans.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance to local authorities on developing their own motorcycle strategy. [119600]

Mr. Hill: Local authorities are due to submit five-year local transport plans (LTPs) to Government by 31 July 2000. LTPs will give local authorities the discretion to devise integrated transport strategies at the local level in partnership with the local community. Last month my Department issued local authorities with guidance on producing LTPs. This encouraged local authorities to take account of the contribution that powered two-wheelers can make in delivering integrated transport—for example their use in congested traffic conditions or as an alternative to the car in remote areas—and the needs of motorcyclists, including parking, interchange facilities and appropriate road maintenance. A copy of the guidance—"Guidance on Full Local Transport Plans"—has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many road accidents (a) involving motorcyclists and (b) in total were caused by spilled diesel fuel in each of the last three years; and if he will revise construction and use Regulations for goods vehicles and PSVs to ensure that spillage from diesel fuel tanks is prevented by tamper-proof physical measures within the tank itself. [119599]

Mr. Hill: In 1999 information on the presence of oil or diesel on the road surface at the site of road accidents was collected for the first time and the data are not yet available. However, early indications are that accidents involving oil or diesel are 0.2 per cent. of all accidents; of which, 30 per cent. involved motorcycles (less than 1 per cent. of motorcycle accidents). Vehicle construction standards are agreed at a European level. A recently agreed amendment to the European fuel tank Directive includes measures to minimise fuel spillage due to missing or insecure fuel caps. We will be implementing all the mandatory provisions of the Directive, and will be considering whether the optional provisions are likely to strengthen our current construction and use requirements.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will encourage local authorities to exempt motorcycles from road user and workplace levy charging schemes. [119601]

Mr. Hill: Our response to our consultation paper, "Breaking the Logjam", which we published on 22 February, set out our policy on exemptions for motorcycles from road user charges and the workplace parking levy.

We intend to leave decisions on exemptions from road user charges to local discretion. Including motorcycles in a road user charging scheme would require practical difficulties to be overcome. We will explore these further with those local authorities that are actively considering a charging scheme as part of our Charging Development Partnership.

As to workplace parking levies, we propose that motorcycles should generally be exempt from counting towards a workplace parking licence total, but we will consider proposals from local authorities on their merits.

North Wales Main Line

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the reliability of the private commercial study produced by Virgin trains on the electrification of the North Wales main line; [119612]

(2) if he will commission an independent public study on the viability of the electrification of the North Wales main line. [119611]

Mr. Hill: There are no plans to commission an independent public study as the former Office of Passenger Rail Franchising, now the shadow Strategic Rail Authority, had no reason to doubt the reliability of the study produced by Virgin Trains in March 1999.

Road Schemes

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the (a) deferred road schemes by authority featured in the Local Transport Settlement for 2000–01 and (b) road schemes contained in the provisional local transport plans for 2001–02 to 2004–05; [119716]

(2) if he will ensure that road schemes costing more than £5 million contained in full local transport plans will not be accepted by the Government unless there is clear evidence that alternative solutions to traffic problems have been considered first, along with a statement of why such solutions have been rejected. [119717]

Mr. Hill: A decision to defer consideration of the following major road schemes until the Full Local Transport Plans are received this year was announced last December in the Provisional Local Transport Settlement for 2000–01:

Area	Scheme
Barnsley	Cudworth Bypass
Birmingham	Northfield Regeneration
Birmingham	Selly Oak Access Road
Bristol	A4 Bath Road to Callington Road Link
Cheshire	A34 Alderley Edge Environmental Bypass
Cumbria	Carlisle Northern Development Route
Darlington	Darlington Cross Town Route Eastern Section
Derby	Derby Spur Extension
Derbyshire	Markham Employment Growth Zone
Devon	Barnstaple Western Bypass
Dorset	Weymouth Transportation and Regeneration Project
East Sussex	Newhaven Port Access Road
Kent	East Kent Access (Phase 1)
Kent	East Kent Access (Phase 2)
Leeds	East Leeds Link Road
Leeds	Leeds Inner Ring Road (Stage 7)
Lincolnshire	Future Major Economic Regeneration Scheme
Liverpool	Hall Lane Area Improvement
Medway	A228 Chattenden to Ropers Lane
Middlesbrough	East Middlesbrough Transport Corridor
North East Lincolnshire	South Humber Bank Link Road (Stage 2)
Rotherham	West Bawtry Road Improvement
Rutland	Oakham/(Langham) Bypass
Sandwell	Cradley Heath Town Centre Strategy (A4100)
Sheffield	Inner Relief Road—Stages II and III
Staffordshire	Biddulph Bypass
Staffordshire	Rugeley Eastern Bypass Stage 2
Stoke-on-Trent	Hanley Bentilee Link
Suffolk	South Lowestoft Relief Road
Surrey	A244 Cross Thames Transport Corridor
Wiltshire	Western Wiltshire Regeneration Corridor
Wirral	Birkenhead Town Link Division
Worcestershire	Wyre Piddle Bypass

The following decisions were reached on the remaining major road schemes contained in the Provisional Local Transport Plans:

Area	Scheme
Accepted:
Essex	A131 Great Leighs Bypass
Leicestershire	Ashby Bypass Stage 2
Norfolk	Broome and Ellingham Bypass
Nottingham (G.N.)	A6002/A6007 Coventry Lane Improvement
Shropshire	A53 Hodnet Bypass
Somerset	Bridgewater Northern Distributor
Staffordshire	Burntwood Bypass
Stockton-on-Tees	South Stockton Link

The "Guidance on Full Local Transport Plans" which was published in March of this year makes it clear that before major road schemes can be accepted for funding if bid for in the Full Local Transport Plans, local authorities will need to demonstrate that there is a problem that needs addressing and that they have looked for alternative solutions, in accordance with the principles of New Approach to Appraisal.

Shadow Strategic Rail Authority

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the shadow Strategic Rail Authority to reach a decision on the plans sent to them by Railtrack. [118691]

Mr. Hill: The shadow Strategic Rail Authority is consulted frequently about Railtrack's plans. Regulation of Railtrack is, however, the responsibility of the Rail Regulator.

Climate Change Levy

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the European Commission to approve the UK's state aid notification in respect of proposed reductions to the climate change levy for companies which agree with energy efficiency arrangements. [119156]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

Officials have had helpful discussions with the Commission about the UK's state aids notification. We expect further useful progress to be made over the summer.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the proposed climate change levy rebates and exclusions for a 10-year period with the latest draft of the European Commission's guidelines on state aid. [119154]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

The UK regards the revised draft Community guidelines on state aid for environmental protection as a helpful step forward. However, the UK and other member states have made suggestions for improvement. As such, any assessment of their application in particular instances would be premature.

HEALTH

Dental Services

Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children (a) under five and (b) under 10 years old have been treated for dental decay in the NHS in each of the last 10 years. [117946]

Mr. Hutton: Information is available for the number of fillings and extractions for which General Dental Service dentists make a payment claim. This is shown in the table for the age groups 0 to four years and five to nine years for England and Wales in 1998–99.

Data on the number of children receiving treatment for fillings and extractions are not available. Some children may have more than one treatment within the year.

Thousand

	Aged 0–4 years	Aged 5–9 years
Fillings	104	1,059
Extractions	27	225

Comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the relative cost of the use in dentistry of (a) mercury-based amalgams and (b) non-metal-based amalgams; and if he will make a statement. [118403]

Mr. Hutton: The table provides the number and cost of general dental services treatments using different restorative materials in England in 1998–99. Dental amalgam is more durable and easier to insert than the other materials.

Treatment	Number (Million)	Cost (£ million)
Amalgam fillings	8.3	91.6
Composite resin fillings	4.9	52.2
Glass ionomer fillings	1.9	20.0
Total	15.0	163.8

Modernisation Action Teams

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many members of the NHS Modernisation Action Teams are (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants, (c) representatives of professional or staff bodies, (d) front-line NHS staff and (e) representatives of patients' organisations. [118694]

Mr. Hutton: We set out full membership details in press notice 2000/208 on 4 April. This indicated that the National Health Service Modernisation Action teams have 134 members. The membership was chosen to ensure wide representation from interested parties and individuals have been selected from a variety of backgrounds. There are five Ministers; 19 civil servants; 15 representatives of professional or staff bodies; thirty nine front-line NHS staff; and 16 representatives of patients' organisations. Additionally there are 40 members who, while not fitting into these precise categories, include leading commentators and senior managers.

Vulnerable Adults

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to institute police checks on employees in the National Health Service working with vulnerable adults. [118740]

Mr. Hutton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the Minister of State, Home Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Clarke) on 17 April 2000, Official Report, column 377W, and his response in relation to police checks.

The Care Standards Bill will establish a new scheme to identify health and care workers who have harmed vulnerable adults and ban them from such work in the future.

Under the Protection of Vulnerable Adults scheme, providers of prescribed services within the National Health Service and in independent healthcare settings will be required to refer individuals for inclusion in the list. There will be a duty of providers of these services to check that prospective employees are not on the list and to refuse employment in that field to any person found to be on the list.

Initially the list will be operated by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. Once the Criminal Records Bureau is established, the Bureau will be able to supply an individual with a criminal record certificate or enhanced criminal record certificate which would indicate whether they were included in the Protection of Vulnerable Adults list.

While police checks can identify individuals who have come to the attention of the police, clearly there is no substitute for employers undertaking thorough checks into the background and employment history of applicants for all vacancies.

Treatment Out of Area

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage of treatments carried out in hospitals in (a) health authority areas and (b) health regions other than that in which the patient was resident in each year from 1980 to date. [118829]

Ms Stuart: The information requested is shown in the table for the years 1990–91 to 1998–99. Data for previous years are unavailable centrally.

Percentage of treatments carried out in National Health Service hospitals in health areas other than that in which the patient was resident, by health authority and region, England 1990–91 to 1998–99 [1]

	Health authority	NHS region
1990–91	25.4	9.0
1991–92	24.7	7.9
1992–93	23.3	7.4
1993–94	22.1	7.7
1994–95	21.5	7.1
1995–96	21.6	7.4
1996–97	22.7	6.4
1997–98	24.7	8.9
1998–99	22.6	6.8

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's energy efficiency performance target, expressed as a percentage change in comparison to 1990–91, for each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [118995]

Ms Stuart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 22 March 2000, Official Report, columns 548–49W. It was explained then that a new target had been set across the Government estate to apply from 2000–01, of a 1 per cent. per annum reduction in greenhouse gas emissions.

The Department will aim to meet this target which represents a change against the previous cross-Government target to 31 March 2000, which was expressed in terms of reductions in energy expenditure. Measurement in greenhouse gas emissions provides a much better fit with the current climate change programme and the United Kingdom's Kyoto targets. The base year will be 1999–2000 as it was the final year to which the previous target applied. Figures will be released when they are available on performance in 1999–2000 against the target to 31 March 2000 with 1990–91 as the base year.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the percentage change compared to 1990–91 in his Department's energy efficiency in each year since 1990–91; and if he will make a statement. [118994]

Ms Stuart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 582W, which reported progress for all central government departments by 31 March 1988. It is hoped that results for the period up to March 1999 will be published shortly.

Patient Records

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to phase out the use of Lloyd George envelopes and promote the use of A4 folders as the standard means of storing patient records; [118954]

(2) what steps he is taking to harmonise paper-based records within the National Health Service; and if he will instigate a review of current systems. [118953]

Ms Stuart: National Health Service paper record-keeping systems have previously been submitted to extensive review, and there are no current plans to instigate further examinations. The replacement of Lloyd George envelopes with A4 folders as the standard means of holding paper records is not under consideration.

Future developments in record-keeping will be driven by the information strategy "Information for Health", which is committed to the vision of electronic record-keeping, as befits the modern NHS.

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many different computer-based records systems are in use by general practitioners; and if they are compatible. [118952]

Ms Stuart: There are 18 companies with clinical computer systems in use by general practitioners. In general there is little direct compatibility between the products of these companies. However, current policy, which is supported by the system suppliers, is to migrate these products to industry standard software which will create open and inter-operable systems which in turn will facilitate more automated sharing of information.

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure the compatibility of computer systems used in hospitals with those used by general practitioners. [118951]

Ms Stuart: The information strategy for the Modern National Health Service 1998–2005 "Information for Health" is aimed at focusing the development of information technology systems to facilitate the delivery of integrated care. A number of specific initiatives are taking place to ensure compatibility of computer systems used in hospitals with those used by general practitioners:

The establishment of a national clinical information standards board with responsibility to deliver agreed standards for communicating clinical information between clinicians in primary and secondary care;

The development of an agreed framework for helping to structure the thousands of clinical communications which are sent and received every day. A multi-professional group of clinicians have developed a draft framework of headings and accompanying definitions that are being evaluated for this purpose;

The Electronic Record Development and Implementation Programme is currently agreeing a comprehensive programme of work which will address the national requirement for standards to ensure the compatibility of clinical computer systems used in hospitals and primary care;

Work over the next 12 months to support the development of clinical messages to support GP to GP record transfer, referral and discharge.

Insomnia

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) specialist sleep clinics and (b) specialist consultants in sleep deprivation there are in the NHS; and what is their geographical distribution. [119031]

Mr. Hutton: Specialist sleep clinics may fall under the remit of several different specialties including General Medicine, Chest/Respiratory Medicine and Otolaryngology. Information is not collected centrally on either the number of specialist sleep clinics nor those clinicians who sub-specialise in sleep problems.

Genetic Data

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to protect anonymous genetic data obtained in confidence from being exploited by commercial companies without the consent of the patient; and if he will make a statement concerning the Source Informatics judgment. [119524]

Ms Stuart: Genetic data provided in confidence should not normally be disclosed to third parties without the consent of the individual to whom they relate. However, the Court of Appeal ruled in December 1999—the Source Informatics judgment—that once data have been effectively anonymised they are no longer confidential. Although we have no plans to introduce legislation in this area at the present time, the Department is considering whether patient interests and the broader public interest are adequately protected.

We remain concerned about the use of anonymised health data for commercial purposes that may not be in the public interest and have directed the Department to seek leave from the House of Lords to appeal against the Court of Appeal judgment.

Social Services Departments

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many social services departments remain under special monitoring by the Social Services Inspectorate. [119282]

Mr. Hutton: There are 12 councils with social services responsibilities subject to special measures by the Social Services Inspectorate.

Bed Availability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 April 2000, Official Report, column 12W, on bed availabilities, how soon after 15 May he will announce targets; and if the base line will be set at 1998–99. [119302]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 17 April 2000]: We shall issue planning guidance for the National Health Service when we publish our response to the National Beds Inquiry consultation. This is likely to be during the summer. The consultation continues until 15 May. No decision has yet been taken about whether to set specific targets for beds as part of the planning guidance.

Prescribed Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of children aged (a) under 10 and (b) under 16 years who have been prescribed (i) Ritalin and (ii) Prozac in the past 12 months. [118891]

Ms Stuart: Information on the number of children prescribed Ritalin and Prozac is not collected. Ritalin should be used only in cases where there is a clear diagnosis of Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder following comprehensive assessment by a specialist in childhood behavioural disorders. Given some concern over the clinical evidence and current levels of prescribing, the National Institute for Clinical Excellence is to consider Ritalin later this year and will issue authoritative advice on its use in routine practice.

Prozac is not licensed for use in children as the safety and efficacy has not been established. Doctors may prescribe medicines outside their licensed indications if they consider that this is in the patient's best interests.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to report on Ritalin; and if his Department has given evidence to its inquiry into Ritalin. [118921]

Ms Stuart: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE), a Special Health Authority independent of the Department of Health, is expected to disseminate its guidance on Ritalin to the NHS in October 2000. The Department has not submitted evidence to inform NICE's appraisal, although in accordance with usual practice it has commissioned an independent systematic review of the research evidence on behalf of NICE. The Department of Health will be consulted along with other stakeholders on NICE's draft recommendations.

GM Salmon

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent reports he has received on the safety of genetically modified salmon; and what his policy is on the sale of genetically modified salmon in the UK; [119420]

(2) what information has been received concerning genetically modified salmon bred by A/F Protein Inc.; what European marketing consent exists for such salmon; and what his policy is on licensing the import of genetically modified salmon eggs to the UK. [119421]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 17 April 2000]: No information has been received concerning genetically modified salmon bred by A/F Protein Inc. nor has any application been made to import these salmon or their eggs.

Neither the salmon or their eggs could be imported into the European Community without approval having first been given under either the EC contained use Directive (90/219), the EC deliberate release Directive (90/220) or the EC novel food regulation (258/97).

Cleft Lip and Palate Patients

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions he has made for the integration into the reorganised treatment facilities of current cleft lip and palate patients. [119318]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 17 April 2000]: Changes in the delivery of services for cleft lip and/or palate patients will need to take place in a managed way. All surgery will be carried out in the new designated centres when they are established and staff have been appointed. A number of existing units may become "spokes" or "outreach" centres and continue to provide some cleft services in discussion with designated centres.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service; and if he will make a statement. [117724]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 13 April 2000]: The Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) transferred from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to become a next steps agency of the Food Standards Agency (FSA) when the FSA was established on 1 April. I have not met the chief executive and have no current plans to do so. I am advised by the FSA however, that the MHS Chief Executive has regular meetings with the Chairman of the FSA (Sir John Krebs).

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if the people of St. Helena will be consulted in the decision-making process on the viability of an airstrip on St. Helena. [119607]

Mr. Foulkes: The St. Helena Government, Councillors, civil society organisations and other stakeholders on the island will be consulted during the comparative study of air and sea access that is expected to start in the middle of this year. The study will identify the most cost-efficient permanent solution to the island's international passenger and cargo transportation needs.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the cost will be of the airstrip feasibility study on St. Helena; who will undertake it; and how long it will take to complete. [119608]

Mr. Foulkes: The comparative study of air and sea access, which will identify the most cost-efficient permanent solution to the island's international passenger and cargo transportation needs, is expected to cost some £150,000. Consultants to undertake the study will be appointed following a competitive tendering exercise. Completion of the study is expected to take an elapsed time of some 14 weeks following mobilisation of the consultants.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when a decision will be reached on the viability of an airstrip on St. Helena. [119609]

Mr. Foulkes: Discussions with the St. Helena Government on the findings of the comparative study of air and sea access will begin once a final report has been produced. Draft Terms of Reference for the study are currently being considered by the St. Helena Government and it is expected that the study, which will have an elapsed time of some 14 weeks, will start in July or August.

Asbestos

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will encourage UK firms engaged in overseas construction projects to prohibit the use of asbestos or materials containing it in their current and future schemes. [119606]

Mr. Foulkes: The prohibition of dangerous substances such as asbestos is a matter for Governments rather than private firms. We are committed to working with our partner countries in their efforts to improve standards of environmental regulation and reverse trends in environmental degradation. This may include advice on the prohibition, use and handling of asbestos.

We also support a proposal from the EC to bring asbestos fibres within the scope of the Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade. At present only blue asbestos is covered by the Convention.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will take steps to ensure that no asbestos or materials containing it are used in (a) current and (b) future projects funded by her Department; and if she will make a statement. [119605]

Mr. Foulkes: Construction standards for buildings built with the Department's assistance in developing countries do not permit the use of asbestos. Occasionally we have assisted with projects involving the modification of buildings which are found to contain asbestos. One such case occurred with the Zimbabwe Department of Civil Aviation (DCA) in the upgrading of air traffic control systems. We introduced specialist technical assistance for DCA staff and contractors to deal with this problem in the short term and be aware of it for the future.

We have also funded research to develop alternatives to asbestos sheets as roofing materials.

Ethiopia

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent estimate she has made of the length of time it takes for food aid from Britain to reach those in need in Ethiopia. [118812]

Mr. Foulkes: Food aid for Britain is provided through NGOs and the World Food Programme. The length of time between purchase and delivery depends considerably on where the food is sourced (much is purchased locally and some comes from the in-country Food Security Reserve) and the accessibility of those in need. The advantages of local produce are mostly in the speed of delivery and the low transport costs.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has received from the United Nations concerning the drought in Ethiopia. [118819]

Mr. Foulkes: The United Nations launched an appeal on 28 January 2000 for US$190 million, requesting relief assistance for some 8 million Ethiopians and 250,000 refugees. This included the provision of approximately 250,000 metric tonnes of food aid to assist 2.3 million beneficiaries. Catherine Bertini, the UN Secretary-General's Special Envoy on Drought in the Horn of Africa, is visiting Ethiopia from 11–19 April. We await her report.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid agencies operating in Ethiopia are funded by her Department. [118817]

Mr. Foulkes: The following table shows DFID Emergency Funded Interventions through Non Governmental Organisations and international organisations since April 1999.

Period	Agency	Area	Food (MT)	Non-food	Total cost (£)
June 1999-June 2000 (Extension for capacity building and rubbhall erection)	SCF-UK	Belg producing areas of North and South Wollo, Amhara region	6,000 cereal, 486 famix	6 rubbhalls (mobile storage), 4 nutritional monitoring teams, training	1,498,482

Ethiopia and Mozambique (Aid)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what factors underlay her decision to reduce aid for (a) Ethiopia and (b) Mozambique. [118815]

Mr. Foulkes: Ethiopia's military expenditure has steadily increased since war broke out with Eritrea in May 1998. This has led to macro-economic strains and a breakdown in relations with the IFIs. In common with other donors, we are meeting existing commitments under our bilateral development programme, but not taking on any new activities, with the exception of food security. Humanitarian assistance is not affected.

We have not decided to reduce aid to Mozambique. This year's Departmental Report estimates spending on the country programme at £21.41 million in 1999–2000. This does not include £15 million provided to help Mozambique to reach Heavily Indebted Poor Countries completion point, or humanitarian aid in response to the floods, for which £20 million has been committed. We expect to increase our spending on the country programme in the current financial year.

Background

Ethiopia

Britain's bilateral development programme is currently running at about £4 million-£5 million a year. We are supporting activities in food security; the roads sector; revenue-raising; preparation of the interim PRSP; and the police. Before the war with Eritrea, we had been ready to deepen our development partnership with the Government of Ethiopia because of their commitment to poverty eradication. Our aim was to provide direct budgetary support to the Government to implement their own plans in the social sectors. We intended to start this with a new contribution of £25 million to help the improvement and extension of primary education throughout the country.

However, since May 1998 when the hostilities broke out and military expenditure increased we have, in common with other donors, not taken on any new activities, with the exception of work on food security. Our planning figures have been adjusted to reflect this: £6 million in each of 2000–01 and 2001–02. Actual expenditure will vary in line with Ethiopia's capacity to end the war and return to the reform agenda it has pursued so strongly in the past. Humanitarian assistance is not affected by this decision. It is provided in response to need and reflects the opportunity to reach those in need and to monitor interventions.

Natural Disasters

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what procedures have been put in place after 1 March to improve the British Government's response to natural disasters abroad. [118814]

Mr. Foulkes: We already have well established and effective procedures to deal with disasters overseas. These are kept under review. We do not consider that any changes are necessary at present.

Online Services

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the services which (a) her Department and (b) the executive agencies responsible to her Department (i) provide online and (ii) expect to be deliverable online by 2002. [119438]

Mr. Foulkes: We are collecting data which will include our progress on delivering 25 per cent. of Government services electronically by 2002. We currently provide a range of services electronically that include: a website containing information on Departmental publications, research data, contract opportunities and vacancies; a Public Inquiry Point staffed by a dedicated team able to provide a direct response or route the inquiry to the most appropriate respondent; all press releases and speeches, publications and publicly available research data issued by the Department which may be ordered electronically or downloaded directly from the website; guidelines and application forms for several DFID funding programmes.

In the public arena we use electronic means to support payment of pensions to ex-colonial pensioners and dependants. Future plans include the introduction of electronic invoices and e-tendering, subject to a successful trial by the Office of Government Commerce. These initiatives are planned to be introduced by 2002 and progress will be monitored as part of the Department's Public Service Agreement. We do not have responsibility for any external agencies.

AIDS 2000 Conference, Durban

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if members of her Department will be attending the AIDS 2000 conference in Durban in July. [119048]

Mr. Foulkes: We attach great importance to the first World AIDS conference to be held in Africa. Officials from the Health and Population Department and advisers based in our Southern Africa office will be attending the conference.

Multilateral Debt Relief

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the countries she expects to qualify for multilateral debt relief at the end of April, indicating the amount of bilateral debt they each owe to the Exchequer. [118098]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

The countries that have already qualified for relief under the enhanced HIPC initiative are: Bolivia, who owes approximately £17.5 million to the UK's Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD); Mauritania, (who owes approximately £7 million to ECGD); Mozambique, (who owes approximately £91 million to ECGD); Tanzania, (who owes approximately £115 million to ECGD); and Uganda (who owes approximately £5.5 million to ECGD).

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

European Court of Human Rights

36. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the implications of recent judgments in the European Court of Human Rights for the role of the Lord Chancellor. [118162]

Mr. Lock: The position of the Lord Chancellor is unaffected by the McGonnell judgment. It is confined to the special position of the bailiff of Guernsey and to his role in that particular case. The Lord Chancellor has always maintained that the question in every case is whether Article 6 is complied with on the facts. The European Court confirmed this saying:

> The question is whether, in a given case, the requirements of the Convention are met.

Also, the court accepted the Government's submission that neither Article 6 nor any other provision of the Convention required > states to comply with any theoretical concepts as such.

Safe Cells

37. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many safe cells were installed in courts in the last financial year; and how many will be installed in the current financial year. [118163]

Jane Kennedy: Custody areas in courts are not designed for holding individuals overnight. They do not reflect, therefore, the design requirements of HM Prison Service's improved standard cell. No cells to the improved standard cell design were installed in courts in 1999–2000 or are planned to be installed in 2000–01.

Public Trust Office

38. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received concerning the investments made on behalf of individuals by the Public Trust Office. [118164]

Jane Kennedy: My officials have consulted widely on all aspects of potential change in the Public Trust Office, including the changes to be made to the investment function. Representations have been received from the Public Trust Office's major stakeholders, the Law Society, the judiciary, members of the public, the trade unions and staff. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor made a statement on the future of the Public Trust Office on 11 April.

Magistrates

39. Angela Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to ensure that magistrates are drawn from all social and economic classes. [118165]

Jane Kennedy: My hon. Friend will know from previous answers I have given her that the local Advisory Committees are requested by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor actively to encourage applications from people from all backgrounds, and his officials to monitor with care their success in doing so. A considerable amount of effort in particular is directed towards encouraging people from those sections of the community who historically have not applied. My noble and learned Friend is resolved to ensure that local benches reflect the communities they serve.

Judges

40. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions since May 1997 the Lord Chancellor has had cause to reprimand members of the judiciary for inappropriate comments made in court. [118166]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor, as Head of the Judiciary, is responsible for dealing with all matters of judicial conduct. He takes a firm line with any Judge whose behaviour falls short of what both he and the public expects. Since May 1997 there have been five instances where he has had cause to reprimand a Judge for comments made in court.

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans the Government have to institute a complaints procedure against Judges. [119192]

Jane Kennedy: Procedures for investigating complaints about the personal conduct of Judges are well established. The Lord Chancellor will ask the Judge to comment on the complaint and will study those comments very carefully before sending a full reply. He may also obtain the tape recording or transcript of proceedings or seek the views of others who were present. The Lord Chancellor expects all Judges to uphold the standards of courtesy and consideration which generally exist in British public life. He therefore takes the handling of complaints very seriously.

Given the independence of the judiciary the Lord Chancellor cannot investigate complaints about judicial decisions. If a litigant is dissatisfied with the outcome of a hearing, the remedy is to take legal advice and appeal to a superior court if so advised.

Social Security Commissioners

41. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress has been made in publishing decisions of the social security commissioners. [118167]

Jane Kennedy: A meeting between representatives from the DSS, Appeals Service and the Court Service Agency took place on 28 March 2000. At the meeting it was agreed that the DSS publications team in Leeds would arrange for publication and distribution of decisions in loose-leaf format with storage binders. Thereafter all decisions will be published and distributed as a package on a quarterly basis with an updated table of contents.

Community Legal Service

42. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on progress with the establishment of the Community Legal Service. [118168]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor officially launched the Community Legal Service (CLS) on 3 April, and it marked:

> the unveiling of the CLS Quality Mark, which is the public symbol of quality assured legal service providers, and has already been awarded to over 6,000 providers;
> the publication of the CLS Directory of legal services, which provides details of 15,000 service providers;
> the launch of the new CLS website "Just Ask", which carries the CLS Directory of legal services, and has links to several hundred advice sites;

the start of the CLS telephone helpline for those seeking details of local providers;

the announcement that there are now 70 CLS Partnerships covering a third of the population of England and Wales;

the publication of the "Guidance for CLS Partnerships" in draft form for consultation the publication of the consultation paper "Performance Indicators for CLS partnerships"; and the announcement that a further £46 million will be spent on legal help, including £23 million of new funding. The extra funds will mean that the Legal Services Commission will expand contracting to enable providers to help more clients.

Criminal Trials

43. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the use of the dock in criminal trials. [118169]

Jane Kennedy: Docks provide security for those in the courtroom as well as adding a degree of formality to the hearing. They provide a practical system that has worked over the years. There are no plans to make any changes to the existing arrangements for adult cases. In the youth court a more informal style may be appropriate such as that in the Inner London Youth Courts where there is no dock. The defendant normally sits with his parent or youth justice worker and lawyer. All parties are at the same level. This can help communication and engage the defendant in the proceedings. That is why my Department and the Home Office have sponsored the youth demonstration projects in Leicestershire with Rutland and in Rotherham. They are independently evaluated programmes that investigate ways in which young offenders, and those responsible for them—parents and family—can be engaged more effectively in the court process. The programmes are also exploring the potential benefits of greater transparency in the youth justice process, physical and environmental changes, and more feedback to justices on the effect of their sentencing. The projects are being evaluated by Sheffield University, and the findings will be used to inform good practice advice for all youth courts later this year.

Trial by Jury

44. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the impact of proposed reforms of trial by jury on the operation of magistrates courts. [118170]

Jane Kennedy: We estimate that there will be an additional 12,000 cases to be handled in the magistrates courts as a result of the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) No. 2 Bill.

SCOTLAND

Drug Deaths

7. Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action his Department is taking in relation to the increase in the number of drug deaths in Scotland. [118132]

13. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures his Department is undertaking to combat the increase in drug deaths in Scotland. [118138]

Mr. Wilson: Responsibility for action to prevent drug-related deaths lies with the Scottish Executive, working within the common UK-wide statutory framework.

Reduction of drug-related deaths is a key objective of Scotland's drug strategy.

Shipbuilding (Apprenticeships)

8. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of apprenticeships in the shipbuilding industry (a) currently, (b) in April 1990 and (c) in April 1980. [118133]

Dr. Reid: Information from the Engineering and Marine Training Authority indicates that there are currently 134 Modern Apprentices training in the shipbuilding industry in Scotland compared with approximately 200 in 1990 and a similar number in 1980.

Responsibility for the development of training programmes in Scotland, including the Modern Apprenticeship scheme, is a matter for the Scottish Executive.

Minimum Wage

9. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many enforcement actions have been taken in Scotland to ensure that employers pay the national minimum wage. [118134]

Dr. Reid: Since the introduction of the national minimum wage on 1 April 1999, National Minimum Wage inspectors in Scotland have received 279 complaints and issued 12 enforcement notices.

12. Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the enforcement of the minimum wage. [118137]

Dr. Reid: Enforcement of the national minimum wage has been a success. Since the introduction of the national minimum wage on 1 April last year, minimum wage inspectors in Scotland have received 279 complaints and issued 12 enforcement notices. The Inland Revenue's national minimum wage inspectors have recovered some £1.25 million of underpayments for low-paid workers across the UK. The message is getting across that inspectors will use their powers to pursue non-complying employers. However, I am pleased that the majority of employers have responded well to the introduction of the minimum wage which benefits some 100,000 workers in Scotland.

Employment

10. Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on employment levels in Scotland. [118135]

Dr. Reid: Latest data show that employment in Scotland stood at 2,324,000 as at November 1999 to January 2000, around its highest level since 1966.

18. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the prospects for employment in Scotland. [118143]

25. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the prospects for employment in Scotland. [118150]

Dr. Reid: The prospects for employment in Scotland are good. The three main independent forecasters (Fraser of Allander Institute, Business Strategies Ltd. and Cambridge Econometrics) expect employment in Scotland, which is currently at around its highest level since 1966, to rise in each year between 2000 and 2002.

Asylum Seekers

11. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for the Home Department regarding the dispersal of refugees and asylum seekers throughout the United Kingdom. [118136]

Dr. Reid: I have regular discussions with my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary to discuss various matters.

21. Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current number of asylum seekers and refugees placed in Scotland. [118146]

Dr. Reid: As at 28 January 2000, the most recent date for which figures are available, 610 asylum seekers were being supported by local authorities in Scotland.

In addition, about 250 of the refugees from Kosovo who came to Scotland in 1999 under the Kosovo Humanitarian Evacuation Programme currently remain in Scotland.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many asylum seekers have registered with each local authority in Scotland at the most recent date for which figures are available. [117658]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 4 April 2000]: As at 28 January 2000, the most recent date for which figures are available (from claim forms submitted by local authorities), the number of asylum seekers being supported by local authorities in Scotland were as follows:

Local authority	Number of asylum seekers
Aberdeen City	18
Aberdeenshire	2
Argyll and Bute	1
Dumfries and Galloway	2
Dundee City	8
East Renfrewshire	6
Edinburgh, City of	308
Fife	11
Glasgow City	225
Midlothian	2
North Lanarkshire	15
Renfrewshire	3
South Ayrshire	1
South Lanarkshire	2
Stirling	4
West Dunbartonshire	1
West Lothian	1

East Ayrshire, East Dunbartonshire, Falkirk and Highland also assisted asylum seekers during the year, but were not doing so at 28 January.

Student Finances

14. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received about student finances and tuition fees. [118139]

Mr. Wilson: I have received representations on a wide range of issues including student finance and tuition fees.

Winter Fuel Payments

15. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish pensioners will benefit from the new rates for winter fuel payments. [118140]

Dr. Reid: Over 900,000 Scottish pensioners will benefit from the increase in the Winter Fuel Payment from £100 to £150. In addition the age of eligibility for payments is being equalised at 60. We estimate that in Scotland up to an extra 150,000 people will be eligible for the payments from next winter.

Coalfields

16. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to regenerate coalfield communities in Scotland. [118141]

Dr. Reid: The Coalfields Regeneration Trust was established following the recommendations of the Coalfields Task Force Report, commissioned by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister.

Implementation of the Task Force's recommendations in Scotland is a matter for the Scottish Executive. The Scottish Executive Deputy Minister for Communities announced an allocation of £4.5 million funding over three years for Scotland last month.

Postal Services

17. Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are being taken to improve postal services in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [118142]

Mr. Wilson: This Government remain determined to ensure that the Post Office is better equipped to serve all its customers in every part of the country, as signalled in the Postal Services Bill.

The Government are also committed to helping the Post Office to meet the changing needs of its customers. All post offices, including those in Scotland, will benefit from the £480 million computerisation programme due to be completed by 2001.

Harris Tweed Industry

19. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his recent discussions with other Departments about assistance for the Harris Tweed industry. [118144]

Mr. Wilson: I am in regular discussion with the Scottish Executive and British Trade International about assisting the Harris Tweed industry in promoting and marketing its product, particularly overseas. We are also planning a major PR event for the industry to be held at Dover House later this year.

In the meantime, the consultants retained by Western Isles Enterprise on duty rates have spent the last few months lobbying influential US business organisations to enlist support for the Harris Tweed Authority's bid to amend their preferential tariff to encompass double-width cloth. They have encountered no objections to this move.

Student Support

20. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had with colleagues in England concerning student support following the publication of the Quigley report. [118145]

Mr. Wilson: I have regular contact with colleagues in other Departments about a wide range of issues.

Representation

22. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will bring forward plans to change the system of representation on the added members list. [118147]

Dr. Reid: We have no plans to change the system of representation on the added members list. The purpose of the additional members is to ensure that the number of seats won by each party in the Parliament more accurately reflect the votes cast for those parties. That can only be done when both constituency and regional votes are cast on the same day.

NHS Computer Records

23. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he has taken to ensure that computer records held by the NHS in Scotland are compatible with records held throughout the United Kingdom. [118148]

Dr. Reid: The administration of the NHS in Scotland is a devolved matter for the Scottish Executive. My role is to ensure that, where necessary, good and effective liaison takes place between the Executive and the Department of Health.

Economy

24. Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the trade unions and the business community to discuss the Scottish economy; and if he will make a statement. [118149]

Dr. Reid: I meet regularly with representatives of the trade unions and the business community to discuss a wide range of issues. I had the pleasure of attending and addressing the Annual Congress of the STUC in Edinburgh yesterday.

Forth Railway Bridge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list his Department's responsibilities in relation to the care and maintenance of the Forth railway bridge. [118131]

Mr. Wilson: Responsibility for care and maintenance of the Forth Railway Bridge rests with Railtrack. The Rail Regulator is responsible for ensuring that Railtrack complies with its obligations under the Railways (Safety Cases) Regulations 1994 and with other legal obligations in relation to the safety of the bridge and its operations.

ADVOCATE-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Devolution

28. Miss Begg: To ask the Advocate-General how many devolution-related issues have been raised with her in the last month; and what subjects they have been concerned with. [118153]

The Advocate-General for Scotland: During the month from 11 March to 11 April there were 102 devolution notices intimated to me. Broadly the notices can be divided into nine subjects—delays in trials, lack of access to a solicitor, legal aid questions, temporary sheriffs, cases under the Road Traffic Act, hearsay evidence, covert police operations, confiscation proceedings and civil cases.

European Convention on Human Rights

29. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Advocate-General what steps she is taking to inform UK Government Departments of Scottish experience in applying the European convention on human rights since devolution. [118154]

The Advocate-General for Scotland: I have already visited a number of Government Departments to discuss matters, including the Scottish experience of Convention rights, with their legal advisers; and intend to continue to do so. Lawyers in my Department also have frequent discussions at official level with their counterparts in UK Departments on these issues.

30. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Advocate-General if she will visit The Hague to discuss the operation of the European convention on human rights. [118155]

The Advocate-General for Scotland: At present I have no plans to do so.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

GM Materials

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent research his Department has carried out into the effects on the food chain of animals eating foods containing genetically modified materials. [119015]

Ms Stuart: I have been asked to reply.

I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that there is no evidence to suggest that animals digest feed containing modified genetic material any differently from animal feed containing non-modified genetic material. Relevant work has considered the effects of the processing of materials used in animal feed to determine the extent to which genetic material is disrupted. One such project is due to be reported to the Food Standards Agency in the next few weeks. We also understand that the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is considering a proposed project to establish the pathways of DNA from genetically modified material.

Pork (Labelling)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken since March

1999 to ensure that British pork is labelled so that it can be distinguished from imported pork packaged in the United Kingdom. [117397]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 3 April 2000]: I have been asked to reply.

On 1 February the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food issued tough new guidance to industry and enforcement authorities emphasising the need to ensure that country of origin markings on food labels are unambiguous. The guidelines make it clear that, under current legislation which protects consumers from misleading presentation of foods, imported pork packaged in Great Britain should not be labelled as "British".

Fishing

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what rules he has set Financial Fisheries Guidance grant and European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund applicants from Objective 1 regions. [119346]

Mr. Morley: The European Commission has yet to agree the Single Programming Document for the Cornwall and the Scilly Isles Objective 1 area, including the proposed priorities and measures funded through the European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund (Guidance). Rules for applicants will be finalised following Commission approval and consistently with the relevant European Regulations.

Personal Documentation

Mr. Caton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what purposes his Department and its executive agencies require a birth certificate to be furnished by (a) employees, (b) contractors, (c) those applying for employment or contracts and (b) other persons. [118773]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the right hon. Member for Ross, Skye and Inverness, West (Mr. Kennedy) on 8 June 1999, Official Report, columns 252–53W.

Organic Food

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the annual turnover of the organic food sector was in the last financial year for which figures are available and what percentage this represented of (a) the turnover of the agricultural sector and (b) GDP. [118567]

Mr. Morley: The farmgate value of organic food production in the UK in the period April 1998 to April 1999 is estimated to have been around £51 million. This represented 0.3 per cent. of the UK agricultural gross output and 0.003 per cent. of GDP.

DEFENCE

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received regarding co-operation between the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and the NXT. [117844]

Dr. Moonie: No representations regarding co-operation between the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) and NXT have been addressed to DERA and I am not aware that any representations have been received elsewhere in the Department.

Aircraft Carriers

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will estimate the sums to be spent each year on the new carriers until they enter service; [118265]

(2) if he will estimate the annual operating costs of each of the new carriers. [118268]

Mr. Hoon: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Robert Key, dated 19 April 2000:

I am replying to your questions to the Secretary of State for Defence asking for estimates of the sums to be spent each year on the new carriers until they enter service and their annual operating costs. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

Our estimates of annual procurement costs for the new carriers are projections of equipment costs for internal planning purposes and furthermore their disclosure could damage the competitive process. I am therefore withholding the information requested under exemptions 2 and 7a of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. As to operating costs, annual estimates for the support of the carriers have still to be established.

I am able to confirm, however, that the estimated total procurement cost of the future carriers is broadly £2Bn with operating and support costs of around £3.5Bn over the life of the programme. Both these figures are at 1999 prices.

Roll-on/Roll-off Ferries

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the basis was for his Department's statements concerning the inability of UK yards to design and build roll-on/roll-off ferries to meet his Department's known requirements. [118899]

Mr. Hoon: The statement in the press on 28 March attributed to an MOD spokesman was taken out of context. The Ministry of Defence press office issued a statement that day making it clear that it did not represent my view, nor that of the Ministry of Defence and that there was no reason why British shipyards should not be able to bid competitively for roll-on roll-off ferry work either in the UK or abroad.

The Government have encouraged consortiums bidding for the MOD sealift contract to look to UK shipyards. Bids are still being considered and we expect a decision to be taken in the late spring.

Western European Union

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with the President of the Western European Union; and what issues were discussed. [119589]

Mr. Hoon: The "Presidency" of the Western European Union is currently held by Portugal, who also currently hold the Presidency of the European Union. I have met my Portuguese counterpart in his EU capacity where we discussed future arrangements for European Defence—but we have not met in his WEU capacity.

The senior appointment in the WEU, that of the Secretary General, is held by Javier Solana, who is also currently the High Representative for the EU's Common Foreign and Security Policy. I have met with Snr. Solana in his EU capacity where we discussed future arrangements for European Defence—but have not met him in his purely WEU capacity.

I have not yet met the President of the Western European Union Assembly, Klaus Bühler.

Defence Analytical Services Agency

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Defence Analytical Services Agency for 2000–01. [120180]

Mr. Spellar: Key Targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the Defence Analytical Services Agency for the financial year 2000–01. The targets build on the progress already made by the Agency since it was formed in 1992 and are as follows:

Delivery of Customer Service

The majority of the Agency's business is covered by Service Level Agreements with customers, which set out the targets for timeliness and quality of work. For those parts of the business where Service Level Agreements are not appropriate, project agreements are in place. The Agency is committed to continuous improvement in the range and quality of the services it provides to customers. Key targets are:

a. To meet at least 95 per cent. of the timeliness and quality targets set in Service Level Agreements and project agreements.

b. To have at least 90 per cent. of customers saying they are at least satisfied with the timeliness, quality of work and helpfulness of staff in the annual Customer Satisfaction Survey.

c. To have at least 25 per cent. of customers who received DASA services in 1999–2000 and 2000–01 report an improvement in services provided in the annual Customer Satisfaction Survey.

Efficiency and Quality

The Agency plans to make efficiency savings in 2000–01 as well as continuing to meet the additional demands placed upon it by new Departmental studies and initiatives. DASA is part of the Government Statistical Service and will play its part in implementing "National Statistics"—the Government's policy on improving the integrity, quality and freedom from political interference of official statistics. Key targets are:

a. To make all of DASA's unclassified National Statistics publications available on the MOD Intranet and the DASA internet websites.

b. To conduct a review of the production and publication of armed forces and MOD civilian personnel statistics against National Statistics quality standards.

c. To deliver efficiency savings with a value of 2.2 per cent. of the initial running cost allocation.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EU Agriculture Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Luxembourg on 17 to 18 April; and if he will make a statement. [119918]

Ms Quin: I represented the UK at the Agriculture Council meeting in Luxembourg on 17 April.

The Council reached political agreement by qualified majority (only Denmark expressing dissent) on a Community wide system of rules for the compulsory labelling of beef. The first stage of the scheme—providing for most beef sold to consumers to show the member state where it was slaughtered and cut/deboned and the approval numbers of the relevant establishments—should come into effect on 1 September 2000. The second stage, coming into effect on 1 January 2002, will additionally require labelling by reference to country of origin. I welcomed this agreement which will ensure British consumers can look forward to clearer, more informative labelling on beef. The agreement will now be put to the European Parliament for its consideration with a view to adoption of a Regulation before 1 September.

Commissioner Franz Fischler reported the latest developments in the WTO agriculture negotiations in Geneva. Along with many other Ministers, I welcomed the start of negotiations and encouraged the Commission to continue its efforts to facilitate the launch of a new Round of comprehensive trade negotiations and to continue pursuing a constructive line in the agriculture negotiations in accordance with the Council mandate agreed last autumn.

Under Other Business, I raised concerns about the impact on British millers of the operation of a WTO concession permitting the import of maize from third countries into Spain and Portugal at reduced duty rates. Originally intended to cover maize for animal feed, an increasing proportion was being imported as flint maize which is used for processing into breakfast cereals. This was distorting the single market to the detriment of millers in the UK and other northern member states. Commissioner Fischler undertook to try to resolve this problem with the main exporting countries in time for the next marketing year.

Organic Food

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research assistance his Department gives to the (a) organic and (b) biotechnology sectors to help them establish the safety of their products. [118582]

Ms Stuart: I have been asked to reply, as responsibility for food safety and standards matters has now passed to the Food Standards Agency (FSA) which reports to Parliament through Health Ministers.

The FSA funds extensive independent research programmes to support and further its aim of protecting public health from risks which could arise from the consumption of food. The results of these are made widely available to all sectors of the food industry via scientific literature, and from the agency on request, to assist them in ensuring that the food that they are supplying does not pose an unacceptable risk to health. The availability of the results is also publicised in the Agency's Food Safety Information Bulletin when the work has been completed.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Factory Inspections

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many factory inspection visits on average (a) a principal inspector of health and safety and (b) a qualified inspector of health and safety, in a field office of the Field Operations Directorate of the Health and Safety Executive made in the last financial year. [118408]

Mr. Meacher: The information requested cannot be produced at this time, because full-year data on inspectors' work for the year ended 31 March 2000 are not yet available and HSE's recording system does not make any distinction between factory inspection visits and inspection visits to other types of premises by Field Operations Directorate Inspections.

In 1998–99 Field Operations Directorate inspectors carried out the number of inspection contacts shown in the following table.

The average number of inspection contacts completed, in 1998–99, by HSE Field Operations Directorate inspectors in operations groups

	Number
Principal inspector	33
Qualified inspector	160

Gas Safety Review

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Review of Gas Safety will be published. [118904]

Mr. Meacher: I anticipate receiving the findings and conclusions of the Health and Safety Commission on its review of gas safety in the summer. These findings will be publicised thereafter. Consequential legislative changes would be subject to the Commission's normal consultative process.

Canals

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which canal structures will be affected by British Waterways restoration plans. [119097]

Mr. Mullin: British Waterways have a number of restoration projects in hand, each of which may affect canal structures. The hon. Member may wish to write to my noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for Inland Waterways if there are specific plans of concern to him.

Trunk Road Network

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the 10 largest urban areas by population in England which are more than six miles distant from a trunk road. [119180]

Mr. Hill: The list is as follows (in descending order of population):

Southend-on-sea/Raleigh/Shoeburyness
Margate/Ramsgate/Broadstairs
Basildon
Torquay/Paignton
Harrogate
Weymouth
Clacton
Canvey Island
Braintree
Bridlington.

In the July 1998 paper, "A new deal for trunk roads in England", the Government announced their intention to transfer to local authorities responsibility for approximately 40 per cent. of the current trunk road network. When implemented, this will increase the number of urban areas more than six miles distant from a trunk road.

BNFL

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what information he provided to his Japanese counterpart in respect of British Nuclear Fuels during his meeting in Japan on 8 and 9 April; if he will place in the Library copies of the documentation given to Japanese authorities on MOX plutonium fuel in connection with the meeting; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting. [119136]

Mr. Prescott: I was in Japan to attend the G8 Environment Ministers meeting at Otsu from Friday 7 April to Sunday 9 April, and I am placing a copy of the communiqué issued at the end of the meeting in the House of Commons Library. There was no discussion of British Nuclear Fuels during this meeting.

After the G8 meeting, I travelled to Tokyo and met the new Japanese Prime Minister Mori on 10 April. I expressed the UK Government's regret at the problems recently caused by BNFL and assured him that the Government would give the highest priority to sorting these out.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the use his Department, its agencies and public bodies will make of the powers relating to the authorised obtaining of communications data in Part I, Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill once the Bill is enacted. [119506]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department at column 509W.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the data matching activities of (a) the Audit Commission and (b) local authorities in respect of benefit fraud with Article 8 of the Human Rights Act 1998; what representations he or the Commission have received on this subject; and if he will make a statement. [119526]

Ms Beverley Hughes: It is the responsibility of the independent Audit Commission and local authorities to ensure that their data-matching activities conform to Article 8 of the Human Rights Act 1998. The Commission's legal advice is that the data-matching techniques, which it uses with local authorities, do so conform, and it is continuing discussions on these techniques and their implications with the Information Commissioner.

We are not aware of any representations about the Human Rights Act and the data-matching activities of the Audit Commission or local authorities.

Sewage Treatment Facilities

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the operation of legislation to ensure that water companies do not save costs by switching off sewage treatment facilities at the risk of increasing pollution levels in coastal waters. [119580]

Mr. Mullin: Legislation provides powers for the Environment Agency to set conditions in consents for water company discharges so that necessary water quality standards are met. Where disinfection processes are in place, the Environment Agency requires disinfection over the whole year except where there are no clear benefits to ecological or human interests. The Environment Agency has powers to prosecute water companies in breach of consent conditions.

Old Vehicles

Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to restrict the use of vehicles over 10 years old on British roads. [119755]

Mr. Hill: The Department has no plans to restrict the use of vehicles over 10 years old.

Driving Test

Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to include motorway driving in the driving test. [119756]

Mr. Hill: We have no plans to include motorway driving in the driving test. We include high-speed dual carriageways in driving test routes wherever possible, which require similar driving skills to motorways, and we examine knowledge of motorway rules in the theory test.

The introduction of moving image hazard perception testing, in 2002, will offer us a further opportunity to test the skills needed to drive safely on motorways.

Road Noise

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he has set targets for the Highways Agency for noise reduction and the use of noise-reducing surfaces; and if he will make a statement; [119760]

(2) if he will make a statement on his policy on reducing noise from trunk roads and motorways. [119761]

Mr. Hill: The Government set out their policy towards dealing with the problems of traffic noise on roads managed by the Highways Agency in "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England". In addition to the increased use of quieter surfaces both for new roads and for roads needing maintenance, we proposed to set aside a budget for the Highways Agency to provide additional mitigation in the worst cases where no other action was being taken. The budget and qualifying criteria were announced on 22 March 1999 and a letter from the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency listing locations which would be subject to a detailed investigation of feasible measures was published in the 11 November 1999, Official Report, columns 681–83.

For 2000–01, the Government have set a target for the Highways Agency to treat 10 sites from this list. Targets for future years will be reviewed in the light of progress.

I have not set any target for the use of quieter road surfaces in general because the Highways Agency routinely considers their use in all cases where a trunk road needs to be re-surfaced. The Highways Agency currently uses quieter materials for approximately 80 per cent. of the total amount of resurfacing undertaken.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the compensation payments made to residents in the proximity of the M25 for excessive road noise. [119762]

Mr. Hill: Details of individual settlements between the Highways Agency and the claimants are confidential. However, the overall compensation paid since 1 January 1995 to date under Part 1 of the Land Compensation Act 1973 for noise and other factors is £24,213,027.

It is not possible to provide information on payments prior to this date as our records are not specific to schemes.

French Lorry Drivers' Dispute

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if all claims relating to the French lorry drivers' dispute in 1997 have been settled. [119740]

Mr. Hill: We are not aware of any claims in respect of disputes in 1997. We understand, however, that all claims in respect of the lengthy blockade in November 1996 have now been processed by the French authorities, and payment agreed in the case of all eligible claims. This has been achieved after sustained effort over many months by staff in the Department and in the British Embassy in Paris.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish the consultation paper on the management and disposal of nuclear waste referred to in the Government's response of October 1999 to the Lords Science and Technology Committee report on Management of Nuclear Waste (HL 41, 1998–99); and if he will make a statement. [119727]

Mr. Meacher: We aim to publish the consultation paper on the management of radioactive waste when it is ready.

The consultation paper will set out the procedures the Government intend to follow in order to choose and implement its radioactive waste management policy. It will not endorse deep disposal or any other management option.

Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Local Deprivation Index

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the representations he has received from local authorities which were in favour of the new proposals on the index of local deprivation were from (a) district councils, (b) county councils and (c) metropolitan authorities; and if he will make a statement. [120030]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The responses which were in favour of the new proposals were from the following: 24 district councils; 20 county councils; 12 metropolitan authorities outside London; five London boroughs; eight unitary authorities and 20 'others' including several development partnerships.

Road Accidents (Greater London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many road (a) fatalities and (b) personal injury accidents took place in Greater London during 1999. [119809]

Mr. Hill: The information requested on personal injury accidents is not available. However, provisional estimates of road casualties for the first nine months of 1999 are given in the table.

Casualties in road accidents in Greater London January-September 1999

Severity of casualty	Number (provisional)
Fatal	196
Seriously injured	4,224
Slightly injured	29,056
Total	33,476

Concessionary Travel Passes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to encourage the use of concessionary travel passes for retired people which can be used throughout the UK; and if he will make a statement. [119810]

Mr. Hill: Both the train operating companies and the National Express coach company already offer commercial discount cards for nation-wide travel by senior citizens. I would be interested in similar proposals from the bus industry.

The Transport Bill at present before Parliament contains provisions to guarantee that all elderly people will be entitled to at least half-price travel on local buses; the associated bus pass will be free of charge. These measures will bring benefit to many pensioners and will be particularly welcome in areas where at present the local authority offers a less generous concessionary fare scheme, or none at all.

At present schemes often cover only the area of the issuing local authority, but it will remain possible for local authorities to arrange travel outside their own area, as many do.

Leasehold Reform

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress with leasehold reform. [119805]

Mr. Mullin: As was announced in the Gracious Speech given on 17 November 1999, Official Report, columns 4–7, we intend to publish a draft Commonhold and Leasehold Reform Bill for consultation during this session. My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning announced the publication of a summary of the main leasehold measures we intend to include in the draft Bill on 20 December 1999, Official Report, column 345W. Copies were placed in the Library. Following consultation on the draft Bill, we intend to bring forward legislation as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that mobile phone companies and local authorities undertake adequate public consultation before the erection of mobile phone masts. [119463]

Ms Beverley Hughes: It is important that the public has an opportunity to comment on the proposed installation of telecommunications masts. Where it is proposed to erect a mast subject to a planning application, the statutory requirement for a local authority to publicise any planning application will apply. In respect of mast development carried out under the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 (GPDO), under the 42 day prior approval procedure, the operator is required to erect a site notice to publicise the development proposed, in order to provide the public with a clear opportunity to comment to the local planning authority on the siting and appearance of the proposed mast.

The Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones, set up at the instigation of the Government and chaired by Sir William Stewart FRS FRSE, is currently considering the possible health effects of the use of mobile phones, base stations and transmitters and is conducting a comprehensive assessment of existing research. The Group is expected to finalise its report shortly. The Government will consider the Group's recommendations and issue a response.

Rail Services

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of Railtrack's figure for the investment needed to improve rail services and safety in Britain. [119458]

Mr. Hill: The Government have made clear that substantial sums will have to be invested in railway infrastructure to deliver the increased rail capacity and quality needed for the future. We will be publishing in the summer our 10-year plan for transport, which will set out indicative plans for transport expenditure, building on the advice of the Shadow Strategic Rail Authority, and responses of the Rail Regulator and others to Railtrack's 2000 Network Management Statement.

The process of reviewing the 2000 Network Management Statement is carried out by the Rail Regulator. He announced on 30 March 2000 that he would be consulting with the Shadow Strategic Rail Authority, PTEs and train operators, to determine in particular whether the plans meet their needs and aspirations.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Railtrack regarding future levels of investment in railways, with particular reference to the West Coast Main Line and railways in the North-west. [119459]

Mr. Hill: A group consisting of officials from the shadow Strategic Rail Authority (sSRA), the Office of the Rail Regulator, Railtrack and the train operators involved in the West Coast Main Line, both passenger and freight, has been established and meets regularly. The sSRA reports to Ministers as necessary. Railtrack has confirmed that it is on course to meet its contractual commitments to Virgin in 2002 and 2005. The Rail Regulator has published a draft final order he proposes to make, which would require Railtrack to produce robust plans which demonstrate that it can in fact do so, and that it can meet the reasonable requirements of other train operators and funders including the sSRA. The sSRA has input into all development plans for the railways via consultation with Railtrack, both on a formal and, on an informal basis.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussion he has had with Railtrack since the Paddington disaster with regard to reducing the possibility of signals 109 Ladbroke Grove, S862 Swinton Manchester, MP503 Ordsall Lane Manchester, MP324 Ardwick Junction Manchester Piccadilly, MP332 Ardwick Junction, North Manchester and MP64 Lonsight Manchester being passed at danger; and what action has been taken. [119460]

Mr. Hill: After the accident at Ladbroke Grove, the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) issued one prohibition notice and two improvement notices to Railtrack requiring them to reduce the risk of the signals listed being passed at danger. Since then, the HSE has been in detailed discussion with Railtrack about these signals. As a result, Railtrack has been given until 22 May 2000 to implement an action plan for reducing the risk of these signals being passed at danger.

In addition, one of the measures agreed at the Deputy Prime Minister's Rail Safety Summit last November was a common standard for reporting and investigating signals passed at danger (SPADs) which has been in operation since December 1999. It was also announced that Railtrack will aim to complete the fitting of the train protection and warning system (TPWS) on its infrastructure (12,000 sites) by the end of 2002, a year earlier than planned, beginning with the highest risk locations. Train operators have committed to fit 33 per cent. of trains with TPWS by the end of 2001, 75 per cent. of trains by the end of 2002 and all trains by the end of 2003.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for jythe Environment, Transport and the Regions what his Department's policy is on (a) advertising and (b) acknowledging company sponsorship on the websites of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies; which companies (i) have placed advertisements and (ii) are acknowledged as sponsors on those websites; how much revenue has been received for each financial year since 1997 from such advertisements and sponsorship; and if that revenue has been retained within the budget of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies. [119546]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The DETR's policy for its main website complies with the Cabinet Office's framework policy and guidelines for the use, management and design of public sector websites. These form part of the e-government strategy (formerly known as the Government corporate IT strategy). Copies of this document are available from the Library of the House.

DETR's main website has not so far carried any advertising nor been sponsored by companies. Were we to accept sponsorship, it would be subject to the policy for other forms of publication, which is in line with the Cabinet Office note "Guidance for Departments on Sponsorship", May 1997. Copies of this document are also available from the Library of the House.

Above all, acknowledgement of any sponsorship would not imply any endorsement of the sponsor's goods or services, nor be open to misinterpretation as influencing policy making.

It will take longer to gather information requested in respect of the Department's Agencies and NDPBs. I will write to the hon. Member with this information and place a copy in the Library in due course.

Royal Train

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions since 1998 (a) the sleeping cars and (b) the rest of the Royal Train have been hired out to (i) Government departments and (ii) commercial undertakings; and if he will make a statement. [119852]

Mr. Hill: The Train has been used once for official Government business since 1998—for a function hosted by Mrs. Blair for the wives of the G8 Heads of Government on 16 May 1998. The Train, including sleeping cars, has not been hired out to any commercial undertakings during this period. The Train is available for use by Government departments and appropriate organisations, on a reimbursable basis.

Council Tax

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many properties in the Ribble Valley, Pendle, Blackburn with Darwen, Burnley, Rossendale and Hyndburn are in council tax bands (a) A and (b) H; and what percentage of the total number of properties in each council area this represents. [119849]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information requested is given in the table. The number of dwellings in bands A and H are as shown on the Valuation List for the authority on 15 October 1999.

	Band A		Band H
	Number	% of total	Number	% of total
Ribble Valley	3,022	13.2	181	0.8
Pendle	24,427	64.8	48	0.1
Blackburn with Darwen	36,692	62.8	63	0.1
Burnley	26,184	64.5	17	0.04
Rossendale	15,613	54.0	39	0.1
Hyndburn	21,624	61.3	12	0.03

Car Number Plates

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to enable the Union Flag to be printed on car number plates; and if he will make a statement. [119774]

Mr. Hill: I refer the hon. Member to the announcement made by my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 30 March, copies of which were placed in the Libraries of both Houses, on our proposed number plate regulations. These included the optional display of the GB national identifier on a blue background on the left edge of the plate, an option which dispenses with the need for "GB sticker" when travelling in Europe. We have no plans for other symbols to be included on number plates. People are free to decorate their vehicles with such flags, designs or messages they choose, providing they do not obscure their vision or the number plate.

Water Charges

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria water authorities may use when calculating water charges; and if he will make a statement. [119772]

Mr. Mullin: Except as provided otherwise, a water company, under section 142 of the Water Industry Act 1991, may fix charges by reference to such matters and may adopt such methods and principles for the calculation and imposition of the charges as appear to them to be appropriate. This discretion is governed by specific conditions set by the Director General of Water Services in companies' instruments of appointment, notably the price limits and a prohibition on undue discrimination and undue preference in charging.

Provisions of the Water Industry Act 1999 now in force introduce additional restrictions on water companies' powers to set charges. All household charges must now be set out in charges schemes approved by the Director General, who must have regard to guidance issued by the Secretary of State. The 1999 Act also introduced new rights of choice for household customers in their method of charging and regulations protecting vulnerable groups against high measured charges. The Secretary of State's guidance, the texts of regulations made under the 1999 Act and other background on water charging policy is set out in "Water Industry Act 1999—Delivering the Government's Objectives" published on 3 February, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Fuel (Transport)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with British Nuclear Fuels in respect of its plans to increase the maximum speed of transportation of spent nuclear fuels on the railways. [120043]

Mr. Hill: Discussions take place between my officials and representatives of BNFL on a regular basis. On several of these occasions over the past few years the issue of the maximum speed of transportation of spent nuclear fuels on the railways has been raised. To date there has been no change in the speed limit, and such a change would only be permitted after agreement by all the appropriate safety regulators.

Wind Farms

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consents are necessary from his and other Government Departments and agencies for the construction and operation of an (a) onshore and (b) offshore wind farm; and if he will make a statement. [119924]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The position is:

(a) An onshore wind farm needs planning permission under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990.

(b) An offshore wind farm requires either an Order made by the relevant Secretary of State under the Transport and Works Act 1992, or navigation consent under Section 34 of the Coast Protection Act 1949 and a licence from the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food under the Food and Environmental Protection Act 1985 for the placing of materials in the sea or on the sea-bed. Wind farms within UK waters also require a licence from the Crown Estate Commissioners as owners of the sea-bed. Wind-energy developments with a capacity greater than 50MW also require consent under Section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989.

Drinking Water Regulations

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is taking to revise drinking water regulations in England, following the requirement to implement the new EC Drinking Water Directive by December 2003. [120067]

Mr. Mullin: My Department has today issued a consultation paper setting out proposals to bring standards for drinking water supplied by English water companies into line with those set out in the new EC Drinking Water Directive. Responses are invited by 30 June 2000.

The quality of drinking water is a vital element of public health. Its overall quality in England and Wales is very high. Of the nearly three million tests carried out on drinking water in 1998, 99.78 per cent. met the required standard. The new regulations will revise and tighten standards to take account of the latest scientific and medical advice. The most important change proposed is a reduction from 50µg/l to 10µg/l by 2013 in the maximum permitted concentration of lead in drinking water. This change is in accordance with the latest World Health Organisation guidelines and is introduced primarily to protect unborn children and infants. Neuro toxic effects from exposure to excessive levels of lead are known to contribute to problems in learning and behaviour and to slightly lower IQs.

Executive Agency Targets

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what targets he has set for the Rent Service. [120068]

Mr. Mullin: Key targets have been agreed for the Agency. They are included in the Agency's Business Plan, which includes management objectives, performance indicators and key tasks. Copies of the Business Plan will be placed in the Library in due course.

The key targets for the Rent Service are:

to increase the number of cases determined per employee by a minimum of 5 per cent. per year while reducing the cost per case by a minimum of 5 per cent. per year in real terms, with no reduction in the quality of service provided;

to deliver Statutory performance targets in 95 per cent. of cases; to achieve the following customer service targets against Housing Benefit applications:

- process 80 per cent. of Determinations without an inspection within three working days,
- process 70 per cent. of Determinations with an inspection within 15 working days,
- process 80 per cent. of Pre-Tenancy Determinations within four working days,
- process 50 per cent. of Redeterminations within 15 working days;
- process 80 per cent. of Fair Rent Determinations within 40 working days;
- complete 99 per cent. of Housing Renovation Grant valuations within 40 working days.

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what performance targets he has set Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre Executive Agency for 2000–01. [120279]

Mr. Hill: The Agency's principal financial target for 2000–01 is to achieve a minimum contribution to the Exchequer of £1,450,000.

Operational targets have been set to increase occupancy of the three key conference areas as follows: Churchill Auditorium to 225 days; Fleming Room to 225 days; Mountbatten Room to 225 days.

The Agency is also being required to achieve eight new banqueting events, and has the following quality of service targets:

overall score for quality of staff 82 per cent.

overall score for customer satisfaction 85 per cent.

overall score for quality of venue 78 per cent.

overall score for value for money 70 per cent.

the number of complaints received to be less than two per 100 events an average response time when answering complaints of less than four working days.

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what targets he has set for the (a) Driving Standards Agency, (b) Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, (c) Vehicle Certification Agency and (d) the Vehicle Inspectorate. [120280]

Mr. Hill: Key targets have been set for the agencies. They are included in the agencies' business plans which also include management objectives, performance indicators and key tasks appropriate to the agencies' businesses. Copies of the business plans will be placed in the Library in due course.

The key targets for the Driving Standards Agency are to: contribute to the achievement of a 40 per cent. reduction in riders and drivers killed or seriously injured in road accidents, in the age group up to age 24 years, by 2010 (compared with an average for 1994–98) and to achieve the following customer service targets:

85 per cent. of all customers to be satisfied with the overall level of service received from the Agency.

95 per cent. of candidates to have obtained a theory test appointment at their preferred test centre within two weeks of their preferred date.

The national average practical car test waiting time will be no more than six weeks.

Keep 99.5 per cent. of all theory test appointments, and 99.5 per cent. of practical test appointments that are in place two days prior to the test appointment.

90 per cent. of calls to booking offices will be answered by a human voice in no more than 20 seconds (following routing by the call handling system).

Achieve a 2 per cent. return on capital employed (ROCE) on statutory activities in 2000–01; not increase fees for statutory activities (unless additional strategic responsibilities are placed on the Agency); use examiner resource efficiently by achieving an average examiner utilisation for car practical tests of 80 per cent.

The key targets for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency are to:

make an overall efficiency gain of 2.5 per cent.;

achieve a cost:yield ratio of at least 2.9 to 1 on enforcement (ie recoup £2.90 for every £1 spent);

achieve the following customer service standards;

98 per cent. of Driving Licences issued error-free,

98 per cent. of new Vehicle Registration Documents issued error-free,

97 per cent. of amended Vehicle Registration Documents issued error-free, ensure the following document turn-round times;

95 per cent. of Ordinary Driving Licences within 10 days,

95 per cent. of first Provisional Licences within nine days,

95 per cent. of Vocational Licences within eight days,

95 per cent. of new Vehicle Registration Documents within 12 days,

95 per cent. of amended Vehicle Registration Documents within 12 days, answer 94 per cent. of all telephone inquiries within 30 seconds; answer 96 per cent. of all written inquiries within eight days.

The key targets for the Vehicle Certification Agency are to:

achieve break-even or better on the commercial accounts while achieving at least a 6 per cent. rate of return on capital employed; have at least 98 per cent. of approval certificates issued error free;

achieve a score of at least 90 per cent. on the quality and service matrix targets shown in the Plan; ensure that the figure for debtor days is 65 or less;

ensure that invoices for Management System Certification work are issued within an average of 30 days after completion of the chargeable work; achieve Trading Fund status by 31 March 2001.

The key targets for the Vehicle Inspectorate are to:

meet the quality and general effectiveness levels as specified in the Business Plan measures set for 2000–01;

meet the requirements on levels and types of activity laid down in the Memorandum of Agreement on each Road Transport Enforcement Scheme as agreed with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions; continue to improve customer focus across VI through the implementation of initiatives in line with the Modernising Government agenda and with particular emphasis on increased advisory and educational services; achieve an Aggregated Cost Efficiency (ACE) index of +1 per cent.;

break even while achieving an average 6 per cent. real rate of return on capital, over the period 1 April 1998 to 31 March 2003; improve performance management across the business through delivery of the specified measures in the Business Plan 2000–01; secure the long-term development of the organisation through (a) progression of the MOT Computerisation project; (b) continued development of electronic services delivery; and, (c) a network review resulting in an updated network strategy.

Commercial Property Leases

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the outcome of his Department's review of the property industry's Code of Practice on Commercial Property Leases; and if he will make a statement. [120069]

Mr. Raynsford: Research which I am publishing today shows that small business tenants still have little knowledge of property matters. I consider it essential that they should be properly informed, to enable them to get the best deals in the market rather than the standard packages still too often on offer.

I urge the industry and professions to join Government in ensuring that small businesses, and particularly those starting in business for the first time, have access to information about property arrangements. We will be making a contribution through the new Small Business Service, but I look to the industry and the professions to play their part.

We need to consider how Government, industry and the professions can be more proactive. It is not just a matter of providing information: we need to prompt those setting up in business to ask the right questions at the outset, to help them make the right choices, thus ensuring that their form of property occupation assists rather than hinders their business development.

The research, on the impact of the Code of Practice on Commercial Property Leases since its introduction in 1995, was carried out by Reading University and was designed to see how far the Code of Practice had brought about more flexibility in the commercial property market.

The findings show that while the Code itself has had little impact, the market is now granting much shorter leases and has become more transparent.

I am concerned that upward-only rent reviews still predominate in longer leases, and while I welcome the report's evidence of greater flexibility, I am disappointed that the Code of Practice has not had a greater influence.

To see if we can avoid regulating lease terms, I invite the industry and property professions to consider:

the scope and contents of the Code of Practice;

the arrangements for disseminating the Code and other forms of advice for tenants; how the market could promote alternatives to upward-only rent review clauses, ensuring that they are presented attractively while bearing the appropriate price tag; and how to promote a better understanding of the workings of dispute mechanisms; in particular, to encourage wider take-up of the special disputes resolution scheme for small businesses which the RICS introduced last year.

I will be asking the industry and professions to consider these points, as they digest the Reading University report, and I will invite them to discuss them with me at a forthcoming meeting of my Department's Property Industry Forum.

Airports (Public Safety Zone Policy)

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the residual work of the Civil Aviation Authority in administering the Public Safety Zone policy will be transferred to his Department. [120070]

Mr. Mullin: Since 1 January 1982, the Civil Aviation Authority has, under a Memorandum of Understanding negotiated with the then Secretary of State for Trade, undertaken responsibility, on behalf of the Secretary of State, for advising local authorities on planning applications relating to sites within Public Safety Zones. The draft circular issued for consultation on 15 June 1999 contained guidance to local authorities to enable them to decide planning applications within Public Safety Zones without the need for advice from the Authority. In the light of the comments received on the draft circular, I am satisfied that I should meet the Authority's wish to discontinue its role in Public Safety Zone administration. The Authority will be terminating the Memorandum of Understanding with early effect. In the interim period before the new circular comes into effect, my Department will be willing to provide advice to local authorities in place of the Authority where this would be appropriate.

The announcement of 15 June 1999 also referred to the establishment of Public Safety Zones at other airports for which modelling work suggested that this would be justified. In the light of the modelling work so far completed, Public Safety Zones will be established for Biggin Hill, Exeter, Humberside, Inverness and Plymouth airports.

Newspapers (Recycled Content)

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made in his negotiations with newspaper publishers to develop a voluntary agreement for increases in the levels of recycled content in newspapers; and if he will make a statement. [120297]

Mr. Meacher: I am pleased to be able to announce today the successful conclusion of my negotiations with the newspaper publishers. Ten years ago, the publishers entered into a voluntary agreement with the Government to increase levels of recycled fibre in newspapers. Over the last decade this has led to increases in the recycled content of newspapers from 28 per cent. to 52.4 per cent.

Both I and the newspaper publishers acknowledge that to achieve further significant increases in recycled content will require a major addition to the recycled output from British newspaper mills. However, in anticipation that the new capacity will be forthcoming within the next two years UK publishers have agreed the following targets: 60 per cent. by the end of 2001; 65 per cent. by the end of 2003; 70 per cent. by the end of 2006.

The newspaper publishers have said that it is their firm intention to achieve these targets but the Government recognise that there may be factors beyond their control. Progress towards these targets will, therefore, be continually monitored by the Newspaper Recycling Working Group with formal in-depth reviews carried out at each target stage. At these reviews, the following factors will be taken into account:

the availability of additional reprocessing capacity, which is dependent on whether a decision to increase investment is reached this year; the growth in consumption of newsprint, which is currently about 2.5 per cent. per annum;

the quality of the recycled newsprint available and, in particular, whether this hindered the production process significantly and damaged the product; any uncompetitive pricing of recycled newsprint by newsprint suppliers.

The reviews will be on the basis of an understanding that the objective of the agreement is to achieve high and rising recycled content of UK newspapers; and the newspaper publishers have reaffirmed their commitment to continue to achieve the most stringent targets compatible with such newly-arising factors which may be beyond the control of industry.

Environmental Pollution

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the findings of the Financial Management and Policy Review of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution. [120298]

Mr. Meacher: The Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution advises Ministers on dangers to the environment, environmental issues and priorities, and ways of integrating environmental concerns and objectives with other, economic and social, objectives in order to achieve sustainable development. As a non-departmental public body, the Commission is subject to a financial management and policy review every five years and my Department appointed in-house consultants last January to undertake this work. The Review, which comprised two stages, is now complete. Stage 1 found that there is a continuing need for the Royal Commission to advise Government on environmental policy and sustainable development and that the Commission provided the most efficient and cost-effective means of delivering this.

The second stage of the Review considered the performance of the Commission in greater depth, making recommendations on the Commission's relationship with Government; its strategic planning arrangements, including processes for reviewing performance and auditing impact; internal organisation and working methods, financial management, staffing and the role of the secretariat; and membership arrangements, including appointments. The overall conclusion of the Review is very positive and, though a number of recommendations are intended to enhance effectiveness, the Review commends the Commission for action which it has already taken to update and improve its working methods.

We accept all the findings of the Review and are developing an implementation strategy for future action taking up its Recommendations. The Review is available on my Department's website www.detr.gov.uk and copies are being placed in the Library of the House. A detailed Implementation Strategy is being prepared, which will also be available on the DETR website.

London Luton Airport

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he plans to consider the application by EasyJet Airline Ltd. for an order under section 40 of the Airports Act 1986 designating London Luton Airport as an airport at which a cap would be imposed on the maximum amount to be levied by the airport operators by way of airport charges. [120340]

Mr. Mullin: As provided for in section 16 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982, I have asked the Civil Aviation Authority for assistance and advice in this matter. The Authority will take representations from EasyJet and London Luton Airport Operations Ltd., and seek views from other interested parties as it sees fit. I have asked the Authority to report to me, with a recommendation, by the end of July.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what policies are in place to cover the management of separated plutonium and plutonium contaminated wastes in the United Kingdom. [119133]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 13 April 2000]: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's policies on these materials are set out in United Kingdom Civil Nuclear Policy Including Plutonium, which was presented to the House in January 1998, and Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy Final Conclusions, Cm 2919 of July 1995, respectively.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Communications Reform White Paper

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on consultation on the Communications Reform White Paper. [120179]

Mr. Chris Smith: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I encourage anyone with ideas or thoughts on the substance of the White Paper to submit them to us, either in writing or via our e-mail address, consultation@communicationswhitepaper.gov.uk, by 23 June 2000.

Unless contributors make it clear that they do not want their contributions to be published, we intend to place most of the material submitted to us on our website. We hope that this will generate further comment and debate as we prepare the main messages of the White Paper.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what his Department's policy is on (a) advertising and (b) acknowledging company sponsorship on the websites of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies; which companies (i) have placed advertisements and (ii) are acknowledged as sponsors on those websites; how much revenue has been received for each financial year since 1997 from such advertisements and sponsorship; and if that revenue has been retained within the budget of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies. [119553]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department's policy on website advertising is in accordance with that set out in the Framework policy and guidelines for the use, management and design of public sector websites, which forms part of the e-government strategy.

My Department's policy on website sponsorship is the same as that which applies to any other form of Departmental publication.

No advertisements have appeared on the Departmental or agency websites in the period mentioned. Nor have any website sponsorship arrangements been entered into.

Information on the non-departmental public body sites could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iran

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the use made of the weekly Mojahed publication by (a) the terrorist group Mujaheddin Khalq Organisation of Iran and (b) the National Council of Resistance in Iran; if this publication is registered as a newspaper with the Post Office; and if he will make a statement on the contents of this publication. [119017]

Mr. Battle: This Government's position on both the Mujaheddin-e-Khalq Organisation (MKO) and the National Council for the Resistance of Iran (NCRI) is clear. We do not recognise the NCRI, of which the MKO is the dominant group. The British Government remain firmly opposed to the violence practised by the MKO.

We understand that the Mojahed publication is registered as a newspaper with the Post Office. As long as people do not break our laws, they are free to express views with which we might profoundly disagree.

BBC World Service

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many countries receive BBC World Service broadcasts. [119590]

Mr. Hain: The BBC World Service broadcasts to all countries in the world. The latest weekly global audience figure of 151 million is based on surveys of listeners in 122 countries. There are very few places where the World Service cannot be received. But in a number of places it is difficult or impossible to measure audiences.

India

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with his ministerial colleagues in the European Union concerning the appointment of a commission by the Indian Government relating to religious freedom in India; and if he will make a statement. [119561]

Mr. Hain: Officials in our High Commission in New Delhi regularly discuss human rights issues, including freedom of religion, with their EU counterparts. I also discussed rights of minorities, including religious minorities, with my Indian interlocutors during my visit there in November. We will continue to monitor the situation closely.

Gibraltar

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the current discussions about issues concerning Gibraltar in the European Union. [119997]

Mr. Robin Cook: I am pleased to announce that, following extensive consultation with the Government of Gibraltar and with their support, and with the encouragement of our EU partners, the United Kingdom has successfully concluded discussions with Spain to overcome difficulties which have arisen on a number of issues within the European Union concerning Gibraltar. As a result:

arrangements have been established whereby formal communications and notification of decisions between Gibraltar authorities and their counterparts in other member states under EU legislation will be conveyed through a Unit established in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in London. The arrangements will enable Gibraltar to derive immediate benefits in the development of its banking and insurance industries. They will unblock important measures for the development of the single market and in the Justice and Home Affairs field to the benefit of the UK and Gibraltar and prevent similar blockages in the future. The arrangements uphold the constitutional position of Gibraltar, while at the same time removing a major obstacle to the development of EU business. The arrangements are being notified to the Secretary General of the Council in Brussels together with an exchange of correspondence between the UK and Spanish Permanent Representatives to the EU. A copy of the exchange of correspondence and the arrangements will be placed in the Library of the House.

the identity card issued in Gibraltar will be recognised as a valid travel document throughout the EU, following some reformatting which is proposed by the Government of Gibraltar to associate the identity card with the UK as the member state responsible for Gibraltar. The UK Permanent Representative to the EU is writing to the Permanent Representatives of all other EU member states to inform them of the proposed reformatting. A copy of this letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

arrangements will be established under the Schengen Convention to enhance co-operation between the Royal Gibraltar Police and the Spanish police forces in the fight against transfrontier and other crimes in the region, as part of the Europe-wide fight against crime called for at the Tampere Special European Council last October and in keeping with Gibraltar's longstanding commitment in this respect. These arrangements have been initialled. The intention is that they will be signed by the Home Secretary and his Spanish counterpart, as required by the Schengen Convention, when the Council Decision on the UK Schengen application is adopted. A copy of the initialled text will be placed in the Library of the House.

a revised version of the draft Council Decision on the UK's Schengen application, including the relevant addition covering Gibraltar which has hitherto been left open, will be circulated by the Presidency shortly. It will provide for Gibraltar's participation in all the provisions in which the UK participates (except the Schengen Information System and cross border surveillance). It will be submitted to the scrutiny committee.

The Government welcome the outcome of these discussions. It represents a very good outcome for the UK, for Gibraltar and for all our EU partners. We hope that it will also help to improve the climate of dialogue and the spirit of co-operation with regard to Gibraltar between Spain, and the UK and Gibraltar.

Chechnya

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of (a) the appointment of the Presidential Special Representative for Human Rights in Chechnya and (b) whether Council of Europe representatives working with him will have operational freedom to investigate human rights abuses without hindrance from the Russian authorities. [119453]

Mr. Vaz: We accept that the appointment of Mr. Kalamanov is intended to demonstrate Russia's commitment to its human rights undertakings in Chechnya. We have supported the efforts of the Council of Europe's Secretary General to establish conditions for the attachment of CoE Representatives to Mr. Kalamanov's office which ensure that they will be able to examine and report cases of human rights violations which are brought to their attention.

South-Eastern Europe (Stability Pact)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions donor countries have had with the countries of South Eastern Europe with respect to their role as parties to the Stability Pact. [119455]

Mr. Vaz: Donor countries have had numerous discussions with countries of South Eastern Europe about the Stability Pact, both multilaterally and bilaterally. The most recent multilateral meeting was the Regional Funding Conference which I attended in Brussels on 29–30 March.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions are taking place between Albania, Bulgaria and Macedonia and Stability Pact donors about finance for Corridor 8. [119457]

Mr. Vaz: Albania, Bulgaria and Macedonia discussed the question of Corridor eight most recently at a meeting of their Foreign Ministers on 24 March. We know from the summary of basic infrastructure investments prepared by the European Investment Bank for the Regional Funding Conference for South-Eastern Europe that Albania has also had discussions with the European Investment Bank and Italy about its proposals for Corridor eight. Decisions on allocating funds to particular projects in the framework of the Stability Pact are expected soon.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resources have been committed by each significant donor to the Stability Pact for South Eastern Europe; which resources have already been disbursed; and for what purpose. [119454]

Mr. Vaz: The Office of the Special Co-ordinator of the Stability Pact has not yet produced details of donor commitments. The total commitment made at the recent Regional Funding Conference for South-Eastern Europe was over 2.4 billion euros. The Office of the Special Co-ordinator is arranging a meeting to discuss commitments to individual projects.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made on bilateral and multilateral initiatives with respect to (a) economic development, (b) trade and (c) organised crime and corruption in South Eastern Europe. [119456]

Mr. Vaz: Numerous initiatives concerning these issues have been submitted by individual countries and international financial institutions. A large number have been proposed under the Stability Pact for South Eastern Europe and were tabled at the Regional Funding Conference in Brussels 29–30 March (details are on www.stabilitypact.org). The Office of the Special Co-ordinator is arranging a meeting to discuss commitments to individual projects.

Russia

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent exchanges he has had with the Russian Foreign Minister on human rights. [119504]

Mr. Vaz: During my right hon. Friend's visit to Moscow in February human rights were high on the agenda for talks with Acting President Putin and Foreign Minister Ivanov, with the focus very much on Chechnya. The Prime Minister also discussed Chechnya at length with Acting President Putin in St. Petersburg on 11 March and most recently on 17 April.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Harmon v. HOC Corporate Officer

Mrs. Roe: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what steps the House of Commons has taken following the judgment of the High Court in the case of Harmon v. Corporate Officer of the House of Commons. [119804]

Mr. Kirkwood: On 28 October 1999, His Honour Judge Lloyd QC gave judgment on liability in this action, which was brought by an unsuccessful tenderer for the fenestration contract for Portcullis House. The judge held that the Corporate Officer, on behalf of the House, was liable to Harmon for breach of the Public Works Contracts Regulations 1991, of European law and implied contract. The action is now continuing for the purpose of assessing the amount of the damages.

Concerned by the judgment, the House of Commons Commission asked the Clerk of the House to arrange an independent inquiry. On 17 January 2000, the Clerk accordingly appointed Sir Thomas Legg KCB QC, a former Permanent Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department, and Mr. Peter Bosworth, a consultant specialising in project management, to consider the judgment in the case, to inquire into the circumstances which led to it, and to advise him, and through him the Commission, on any action to be taken, including any changes in the structure and practices of the Parliamentary Works Directorate.

Sir Thomas and Mr. Bosworth completed their inquiry, and submitted their report, on 21 March 2000. The action is still sub judice but I can tell hon. Members that the inquiry concluded in the first place that serious mistakes were made in the handling of the fenestration contract, which exposed the House to liability; and secondly that in future major projects the Parliamentary Works Directorate should establish more clearly: (a) the roles and responsibilities of key members of the project team; (b) a project management process to include guidelines and control systems; and (c) lines of governance within a culture of professional and technical support; and that these recommendations should be taken into account in the current review of the Parliamentary Works Directorate.

The Commission considered the report of the inquiry on 10 April and accepted its conclusions.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Sir George Young: To ask the President of the Council, pursuant to her oral answer of 6 April 2000, Official Report, column 1152, if she has initiated a review of procedures for making documents available to hon. Members; in what terms she has written to her ministerial colleagues on their responsibilities to the House; and if she will publish their responses and her conclusions at the end of this review. [118657]

Mrs. Beckett: I have written, in my capacity as Leader of the House, to ministerial colleagues reminding them of the importance of making documents available to hon. Members in the House.

I also refer the right hon. Member to Madam Speaker's comments on 18 April 2000, Official Report, columns 829–30.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117477]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by the Under-Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, East (Mr. Howarth) on 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 392–93W.

Police Time

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the percentage of police officer time in Leicestershire spent on paperwork in the last year for which figures are available. [113169]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the proportion of time spent by police officers on different tasks is not held centrally. The Association of Chief Police Officers is currently recommending a paper-based method of activity sampling which can be subjected to automated analysis, and is examining Information Technology solutions for the future. These will be compatible with systems being developed under the Home Office's National Strategy for Police Information Systems (NSPIS).

The Government are determined to do everything in their power to help increase the effectiveness of the police in fighting crime, and to ensure that officers are able to spend as much of their time as possible on the front line, as the following measures demonstrate:

The NSPIS Custody and Case Preparation systems, in which we recently announced a new £40 million investment, will minimise the effort involved in completing forms from arrest to prosecution. There are about 1.3 million paper case-files a year which travel between the police, the Crown Prosecution Service and the courts. In the course of preparing cases, police officers complete many different forms, repeating information which had already been made available for other legal requirements. The Custody and Case Preparation systems will automatically share information for delivery to the relevant bodies. This not only saves the police time completing forms, but also avoids making mistakes which take further time to resolve.

The National Automated Fingerprint Identification System (NAFIS) will make possible the electronic capture and identification of fingerprints directly from those who come into custody. This eliminates the need for paper copies and clerical activity and speeds up access to any relevant history.

The introduction of the Public Service Radio Communications System (PSRCS), which will provide data as well as voice communications, will give the police direct information links to police computer systems while they are on patrol, reducing the need to return to the station to complete forms or to obtain important operational information and increasing their operational availability.

Measures introduced last November following the recommendations of the Narey report on Delays in the Criminal Justice systems have gone some way towards reducing the administrative burdens on police officers, and it may be that action which is now being taken pursuant to the Glidewell report on the Crown Prosecution Service will also help in this respect. But work on prosecution case files forms only a part, albeit an important one, of the paperwork required of the police.

The Cabinet Office 'Public Sector Efficiency Team', set up to investigate and provide ways of reducing the burden of bureaucracy in the public sector, have recently published "Making a Difference: Reducing Police Paperwork". The report examines the impact of paperwork on front-line officers, identifying forms that are a burden to the police. It sets out practical solutions that will lead to a significant reduction in the amount of time police have to spend on paperwork by simplifying or removing reports from the system.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what methodologies have been developed to estimate the time spent by police officers on (a) paperwork, (b) detection and (c) prevention of crime; and if he will make a statement. [114365]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 13 March 2000]: Information on the proportion of time spent by police officers on different tasks is not held centrally. Electoral Commission

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what previous political activity will make a person unsuitable to be appointed as an electoral commissioner. [119147]

Mr. Straw: The recruitment process to find the Commissioners will begin shortly and applicants will be asked to declare any political activity within the last ten years. It will be for the selection panel to determine whether that activity has been such as to make the applicant unsuitable for consideration for appointment. For the Commission to perform effectively the functions given to it by Parliament, it must command wide confidence that it is entirely independent and non-partisan. Accordingly, Commissioners must not be, or be perceived to be, associated with any political party.

We also think that it is right that there should be statutory disqualifiers. My noble Friend, the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department said on Second Reading of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Bill in another place that the Government intend to bring forward amendments to disqualify from appointment as Commissioners persons who have had substantial involvement in party politics.

The Government will be seeking to disqualify any person who within the last ten years has held a relevant effective office as defined in paragraph 1(8) of Schedule 6 to the Bill; been an officer of registered political party or one of its accounting units; and appeared in the register of recordable Donations maintained by the Commission.

Additionally, we will be proposing that no person shall be able to serve as a Commissioner while a member of a political party. We shall also be seeking powers to allow for the automatic termination of appointment if a Commissioner:

stands for a relevant elective office;

takes up any office or employment with a registered political party (including accounting units), recognised third parties or permitted participants; and makes a recordable donation.

These additional measures will strengthen the independence of the Commission. The recruitment material sent to applicants will make clear the Government's intention to make these changes to the Bill.

Kosovan Refugees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of Kosovan refugees living in Greater London. [118830]

Mrs. Roche: Information on the number of Kosovan refugees living in Greater London is not available.

Information on the location of refugees is not available, since once an asylum seeker becomes a refugee they no longer are an immigration case, so the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) do not hold any further information on the person/family.

Kosovan asylum seekers are not separately identified within IND statistics. Kosovo is a region in Yugoslavia and applications from Kosovans are included within the nationality Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY), which also includes Serbia and Montenegro. Information on asylum seekers is recorded on a national rather than regional basis and information on the location of asylum seekers is not held centrally.

Young Offenders

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many recorded incidents of (a) suicide, (b) attempted suicide and (c) self-injury at youth offenders' institutions in England there were in each year since 1991. [119139]

Mary Walls

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will request an inquest into the death of Mary Walls; and if he will make a statement. [117956]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 6 April 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on 18 April 2000, Official Report, column 423W.

Police Central Switchboard Calls

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the annual cost to the public of making telephone calls to a police central switchboard at national rates; and if he will assess the benefits of subsidising the service in order to encourage more people to report crime. [119232]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office has made no such estimate.

Gurpal Virdi

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in relation to the Metropolitan Police disciplinary hearing for Sergeant Gurpal Virdi in February, what was the outcome of the request for a tape recorder; what assurance was given of the availability of the transcript; how many days have passed since the end of the hearing without a transcript being made available to Sergeant Virdi; when the police solicitors received a copy; and if he will authorise the release of the transcript. [119477]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that Counsel for Sergeant Virdi withdrew his request for the proceedings to be separately tape-recorded. As a result, no tape recorder was provided for the defendant. A private company employed by the Metropolitan police undertook the official transcription and indicated that they would be able to provide a full transcript within 17 working days from the conclusion of the hearing. Thirty working days have passed since the conclusion of the hearing on 3 March 2000. The Metropolitan Police Complaints Investigation Branch took delivery of the transcripts on 12 April. These are now being collated with all the other relevant papers and will be sent simultaneously to Sergeant Virdi and Metropolitan police solicitors as soon as they are ready. The release of the transcripts is a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations the Metropolitan police made about the date of the tribunal on the unfair dismissal claim by Sergeant Gurpal Virdi; and when they first asked for a postponement. [119478]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the position in relation to Sergeant Gurpal Virdi's case before the employment tribunal remains unaltered since my reply to the hon. Gentleman on 30 November 1999, Official Report, column 110W, and that no further postponement has been sought by the Metropolitan police.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the use his Department, its agencies and public bodies will make of the powers relating to the authorised obtaining of communications data in Part I, Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill once the Bill is enacted. [119510]

Mr. Straw: Part I, Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill provides the law enforcement, security and intelligence agencies with the power to require communications data, such as subscriber details and itemised billing, in a closely controlled manner and for a number of specific purposes such as preventing or detecting crime.

The Bill provides greater safeguards than those which are currently in place for the provision of such data under the Data Protection Act regime, but the purposes for which it may be obtained under the new legislation are very similar. As a result, I do not expect any significant change in the extent to which communications data are obtained.

Immigration

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to make a decision on the case of Home Office visa application number S1016548 in the name of Phailin Sae Kuay; and if he will make a statement. [119657]

Mrs. Roche: A decision has now been made in this case and a reply to the hon. Member was sent on 17 April from the Integrated Casework Directorate.

Disabled Parking Places

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to set a national level of fines on people parking illegally in areas reserved for disabled drivers. [119303]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 17 April 2000]: There is a maximum national level of fines for the offence of parking illegally in an area reserved for disabled drivers. The maximum penalty is a level 3 fine, currently £1,000. When such offences are brought before the courts it is for the court to decide the nature and severity of penalties, taking account of the circumstances of the offence and the offender.

More commonly, such offences are dealt with under the fixed penalty system in which the offender is required to pay a fixed penalty notice in lieu of prosecution. This is currently £20 for all such non-endorsable offences outside London, £30 inside London and £40 on Red Routes. The different levels of penalty reflect greater traffic pressures and congestion in London and the need for greater compliance. The level of fixed penalty are under review.

Distraction Burglary

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to respond to the crime of distraction burglary. [120181]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Bogus callers claim over 16,000 victims every year, but the true figure is believed to be much higher because many people do not report the burglary.

This is a particularly nasty crime as its victims are usually the most vulnerable people in our society; more often than not they are older people living alone.

I have established a steering group bringing together government and industry. Its membership is made up of: Severn Trent Water, Water UK, the Electricity Association, the Association of Chief Police Officers, Age Concern, BT Security, Crime Concern, Crimestoppers, the National Neighbourhood Watch Association, the Institute of Trading Standards, the National Housing Federation and the Womens Royal Volunteer Service. It first met on 11 April and is currently finalising a detailed set of proposals to take forward its work.

This group will:

pull together existing good practice from across the country; establish a database so that details on offenders can be shared;

provide co-ordinated advice for victims of this crime; and produce a help pack for workers who have regular contact with people from vulnerable groups.

Two staff will support it: a community Safety Officer from local government and a police detective superintendent. Both are based at the Home Office.

I will tomorrow, with the National Neighbourhood Watch Association and Severn Trent Water, launch this initiative with the first nationwide leaflet drop to groups and residents across the country.

I am pleased to report that Water UK have agreed to provide sponsorship support for this initiative for two years. The Electricity Association has also agreed to support the Taskforce by a financial contribution.

This is not, however, a crime that the Government can tackle alone. Organisations that send out people for home visits have an enormous role to play and I am very pleased that so many have agreed to support this initiative. But more is needed and we will continue to seek support from all our partners in this.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department's policy is on (a) advertising and (b) acknowledging company sponsorship on the websites of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies; which companies (i) have placed advertisements and (ii) are acknowledged as sponsors on those websites; how much revenue has been received for each financial year since 1997 from such advertisements and sponsorship; and if that revenue has been retained within the budget of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies. [119549]

Mr. Straw: My Department's policy follows the guidance given in the Framework policy and guidelines for the use, management and design of public sector websites. This document, which forms part of the e-government strategy, can be found on the website of the Information Age Government Champions. The official websites of my Department and its executive agencies do not currently carry any advertising or company sponsorship and have never done so in the past. The non-departmental public bodies have set up their own websites independently of the Home Office in most cases. The information requested for these bodies is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Coronation Service

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place a copy of Professor Paul Weller's report containing recommendations on the Coronation Service in the Library. [119721]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A copy of Professor Paul Weller's interim report on his research project on religious discrimination was placed in the Library on 27 January. The report mentions the Coronation Service in passing, but makes no recommendations about it.

Police Recruits

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 April 2000, Official Report, column 258W, if his estimates of the cost of a police recruit, published in the Crime Fighting Fund bidding guidelines still apply; what the cost is of providing (a) the 2,000 additional recruits in 2000–01 and (b) the 3,000 additional recruits in 2001–02; if he has announced funding for the provision of the 2,000 additional recruits in 2000–01 above the £11 million he announced on 6 April 2000 and the £35 million he announced on 30 September 1999; what discussions he has had with police forces on the revised allocation of those recruits and of funding for them; if he will publish the revised allocation; and if he will make a statement. [119780]

Mr. Straw: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 6 April 2000, Official Report, columns 595–96W.

The estimates of the cost of a police recruit as set out in the Crime Fighting Fund bidding guidelines, a copy of which was placed in the Library on 2 December 1999, still apply. My officials have held discussions with police service and police authority representatives and I will make a further announcement as soon as the details of the accelerated scheme have been finalised.

HEALTH

Residential Homes (Elderly)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has carried out research into the impact on life expectancy for residents of the closure of residential homes for the elderly; and if he will make a statement. [119470]

Mr. Hutton: There has been no research carried out into the impact on life expectancy for residents of the closure of residential homes for the elderly.

We are considering the need for such research and expect to make an announcement in the near future.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions, during official visits outside London, the Under-Secretary of State for Health, the hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Ms Stuart), has met (a) trade union representatives and (b) Community Health Council representatives. [119471]

Ms Stuart: I have met representatives of trades unions, staff and Community Health Councils informally during official visits outside London. I also met with members of the Manufacturing, Science and Finance Union on 4 November 1999 and the Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales on 22 February 2000 in London.

Both organisations have a role to play in modernising the National Health Service and I will continue to meet with their representatives as appropriate.

Voice Output Communication Aids

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received from LEAs requesting central Government ring-fenced financing for voice output communication aids in special schools for pupils with communication difficulties; and if he will make a statement; [119221]

(2) what steps his Department is taking to help special schools and LEAs to improve the provision of communication aids for children with speech and communication problems; [119222]

(3) if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the provision of voice output communication aids in special schools, for children with learning disabilities and lack of verbal communication skills; [119223]

(4) what responsibility his Department has for the provision of voice output communication aids for pupils attending special schools who have health-related disabilities; and if he will make a statement. [119224]

Mr. Hutton: We have received no direct representations from local education authorities about communication aids for children in special schools.

Between 1992 and 1995, the Department, in collaboration with the Department for Education and Employment (DfEE), funded an initiative on communication aids for children which published Guidelines to Good Practice in 1995. This promotes the importance of a jointly planned, funded and delivered service. It advocates a multi-professional local service to meet local needs.

This guidance continues to reflect Departmental policy. We do however recognise that further development is needed to ensure local services are able to take advantage of the wide range of sophisticated electronic devices which are now available.

We are currently considering with DfEE what action may be necessary to further improve these services.

Online Services

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the services which (a) his Department and (b) the executive agencies responsible to his Department (i) provide online and (ii) expect to be deliverable online by 2002. [119440]

Ms Stuart: So that the Cabinet Office can publish the spring 2000 report monitoring progress towards the delivery of all Government services electronically by 2005, we are currently collecting data, which will include our progress on delivering 25 per cent. of Government services electronically by 2002. I do not want to pre-empt that report but I can say that we currently provide a range of services electronically. Those included are:

NHS Direct on-line—(http://www.nhsdirect.nhs.uk) which supports the NHS Direct 24-hour nurse staffed telephone help line for people who want information and advice about health, illness and services. This service was launched in December 1999.

Information and knowledge for patients and healthcare professionals will be delivered through the development of the National electronic Library for Health—(http://www.nelh.nhs.uk)—a virtual library designed to provide easy access to best current knowledge about health and healthcare, in order to improve clinical practice and patient choice. It is intended to give access to both healthcare professionals and patients. It is already being piloted and should be rolled out across the NHS by 2002.

Department of Health—(http://www.doh.gov.uk)

The Department's website provides a wide range of guidance and services on line. Key examples include:

Guidance and information on policies, initiatives and services

Departmental circulars and publications are available online on the Department's COIN (Circulars On the INternet) and POINT (Publications On the INTernet) databases

Chief Medical Officer's Urgent Alerts cascaded electronically to health authorities

A dedicated corporate e-mail address for inquiries from members of the public

Consultative exercises on particular policies or initiatives eg children's services planning and deafblind services

Statistical returns from the NHS and local authorities

Information alerting business to opportunities eg

Private finance initiative standard contract form and guidance

A management consultancy database which enables management consultants to register their organisation's details and experience which are then accessible through the departmental intranet to the Department's staff.

Tendering opportunities—most recently human resource management development programmes for the NHS, a briefing Pack and expression of interest questionnaire were published on the website.

Contributions to the pan-governmental sites—direct access government and the local government web ring

A number of forms can be downloaded from the site (eg Section 64 Grants)

Research and development funding—guidance and application forms for national and regional research and development programmes

Medicines Control Agency—(http://www.mca.gov.uk)

Website

Application forms and some guidance notes can be downloaded from the MCA's website, as can order forms for publications and the catalogue for the MCA's Eurodirect publications service.

E-mail

All staff in the MCA have e-mail addresses and can be contacted electronically. There is also a dedicated corporate e-mail address for inquiries from members of the public.

AEGIS (ADROIT Electronically Generated Information Service)

AEGIS allows the electronic transmission of Adverse Drug Reaction (ADR) data between the MCA and selected pharmaceutical companies. AEGIS is a continuously evolving system involving close liaison between the MCA and participating pharmaceutical companies. AEGIS allows the supply of ADR data reports electronically, from the MCA's ADROIT system on demand, thus allowing access to up-to-date information and easy transfer of data to subscribing companies. The AEGIS system also allows messages to be sent to and from the MCA using the Mail facility. This allows the MCA to deal with individual company's specific queries. AEGIS enables ADR reports to be sent to the MCA electronically using the AEGIS e-mail system. The receipt of reports is also acknowledged electronically.

GP electronic reporting of ADRs

The MCA has worked closely with two general practitioner prescribing system suppliers (EMIS and AAH MEDITEL) to develop an electronic "Yellow Card" (the means by which ADRs are reported to the MCA by healthcare professionals). The report is accessed from within the GPs computer system and allows most of the relevant information about the patient and their treatment to be automatically populated from the patients records hence minimising time consuming GP input.

RAMA (Remote Access to Marketing Authorisations)

The RAMA service provides subscribers with on line, real time access to non-confidential information on all authorised medicinal products in the UK and additional confidential information on their own medicinal products and can track the progress of their applications. Subscribers additionally can create some parts of their applications on RAMA and send them electronically to the MCA for final quality assurance and assessment.

NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency—(http://www.nhspa.gov.uk)

The NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency provides the following services on-line for NHS trusts and health authorities:

Electronic communications

The NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency website includes purchasing advice and information to NHS Trusts, provides information, promotional and technical information in support of contracting activity and a web version of the Agency's contracts catalogue.

Electronic catalogues

NHS Supplies' contracts catalogue, with 4,217 contracts and 1,428 suppliers, produced on CD ROM, continued to be developed throughout 1999 in response to NHS trusts' suggestions for improvement. A web version of the contracts catalogue has been available since September 1999. 3,000 CDs are issued monthly with 140,000 products shown.

Links to contracted suppliers

Electronic links have been created between the Agency's website and a dedicated NHS-contract website developed by suppliers in a joint initiative with NHS Supplies. This link enables NHS Trusts to access a wide variety of additional product and technical information to aid their purchase decisions.

Supplier profiles and information

The development of links to supplier websites for contracted products incorporates a parallel development on the display of company profile information, to provide trusts with standard company information required as part of the tendering process. This information is now available to all trusts from a number of the Agency's contracted suppliers and eliminates the need for suppliers to provide such data in paper format. With over 1,400 suppliers more work is required during the year to obtain critical mass.

European Union contract notices

NHS Supplies has played an active part in the development of an information technology software package to allow the electronic transmission of contract notices to the European Union in Brussels. The heads of purchasing in the Department of Health and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions also supported this work.

Contract management system

During 1999, a contract work plan management system was developed in-house by NHS Supplies to enable buyers to record and monitor purchasing and contracting work in progress. Relevant information from this system will be displayed on the Agency's website to give trusts information on the Agency's detailed purchasing and contracting plans for 2000–01.

Infection Control

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the amount spent on infection control in the NHS for each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement; [118853]

(2) how many NHS trusts have infection control teams in place; and what is the average amount spent by trusts on infection control in each of the past five years. [118852]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 17 April 2000]: All acute National Health Service trusts have an infection control team. Details of the amount spent by the NHS, including trusts, on infection control, are not held centrally. Expenditure on infection control is a matter for individual organisations to determine in the light of their local circumstances. Infection control is a priority for the NHS and is a "must do" in the "Modernising Health and Social Services National Priorities Guidance 2000/01—2002/03".

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to revise his Department's 1995 guidance on infection control following the report by the National Audit Office on the Management and Control of Hospital-Acquired Infection in Acute Trusts in England; and if he will make a statement. [118855]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 17 April 2000]: Action has already been taken to update and reinforce the 1995 guidance. Infection Control standards for National Health Service acute trusts were issued in November 1999 and a circular was issued on 11 February setting out a timetabled programme of action to strengthen arrangements for the prevention and control of infection in hospitals.

Guillain Barré Syndrome

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of current standards of care for patients in the acute stage of Guillain-Barré syndrome. [119775]

Ms Stuart: We are not aware of any assessments made into the current standards of care for patients in the acute stage of Guillain-Barré Syndrome.

There are a number of National Health Service services which patients with Guillain-Barré Syndrome may access. These services can include care and advice from their general practitioner, support from therapists and nursing support.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of patients suffering from Guillain-Barré Syndrome received (a) intravenous immunoglobin and (b) plasma exchange in (i) 1997, (ii) 1998, (iii)1999 and (iv) 2000. [119776]

Ms Stuart: The tables show the number of finished consultant episodes (FCEs) where the main diagnosis was Guillain-Barré Syndrome, for selected procedures, in National Health Service hospitals in England, for the years 1996–97 to 1998–99. Data for 1999–2000 are not yet available.

Table 1: Finished consultant episodes (FCEs) where primary diagnosis was G61.0 (Guillain-Barré Syndrome) with any mention of the selection procedures
NHS Hospitals England 1996–97 to 1998–99

Hospital Episodes Statistics (HES), Department of Health

An FCE is defined as a period of patient care under one consultant in one health care provider. The figures do not represent the number of patients, as one person may have several episodes in one year.

There are four operation fields in the HES record—the above table shows a count of every mention of the procedures X30.1, X30.2, X34.2 or X35.3 in the episodes where G61.0 was the main diagnosis.

Data in the tables are grossed for both coverage and unknown/invalid clinical data, except for 1997–98 and 1998–99 which are ungrossed.

Dental Services

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been deregistered for financial reasons by their dentist, in each health authority area, in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [119163]

Mr. Hutton: Over the period 3 July 1992 to 29 March 1996, a weekly survey was carried out to see how many patients were being de-registered because their dentist was dissatisfied with the remuneration system. The results have been placed in the Library. The survey was ended after 1996 when registration stabilised. At the end of February 2000, 23.5 million people were registered with a GDS dentist, virtually the same as in February 1999, 23.6 million.

NHS Ancillary Staff

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 354W, on cleaning staff, if he will give details of (a) the total number of support staff in the NHS and (b) the total cost to the NHS of contract hotel services and laundry and cleaning equipment in the last financial year; and if he will make a statement. [119164]

Ms Stuart: National Health Service expenditure for contract hotel services, laundry and cleaning equipment in England 1998–99 is shown in the table.

Expenditure on in-house cleaning services is not collected centrally.

Analysis of NHS expenditure on contract hotel services and laundry and cleaning equipment—England, 1998–99

Mobile Phones

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the National Radiological Protection Board has finalised its report on the possible health effects of the use of mobile phones, stations and transmitters; and when the report will be published. [119462]

Yvette Cooper: The National Radiological Protection Board was asked to set up an independent expert group on mobile phones. The group, chaired by Sir William Stewart FRS FRSE, has been considering the possible health effects from the use of mobile phones, base stations and transmitters and conducting a comprehensive assessment of existing research. The group is currently finalising its report and publication is expected in May.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the development of his Department's research plans on the biological and health effects of mobile phone masts; when these plans will be announced; and how they will be funded. [119461]

Yvette Cooper: Following our response to the report of the House of Commons Science and Technology Committee on the scientific advisory system and mobile phones and health, discussions were held with the industry about funding a collaborative United Kingdom based research programme. Detailed research plans are currently being developed and will take into account the recommendations of the Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones expected to be published in May.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department's policy is on (a) advertising and (b) acknowledging company sponsorship on the websites of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies; which companies (i) have placed advertisements and (ii) are acknowledged as sponsors on those websites; how much revenue has been received for each financial year since 1997 from such advertisements and sponsorship; and if that revenue has been retained within the budget of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies. [119548]

Ms Stuart: The Department complies with the "Framework Policy and Guidelines for Government Websites" published by the Central Information Technology Unit of the Cabinet Office. This allows for advertising and sponsorship on departmental web pages but advises that in many contexts this may not be appropriate.

The Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies do not carry advertising or sponsorship on their websites. Some hyperlinks to free internet products do appear when it is judged that these may enhance viewing of the sites, for example to the free Adobe Acrobat viewer, but no revenue is received by the Department or its agencies and non-departmental bodies in return for these hyperlinks.

Some National Health Service websites mention companies who have provided services to assist in the development of the site. Examples include the site set up to mark the 50th anniversary of the NHS and NHS Direct Online. In these instances, the "sponsorship" is in the form of provision of technical services, and relationships such as these enable the NHS to get the best possible value for its web developments. In these cases, the NHS receives the technical service free of charge and does not obtain revenue for mention of company names or display of company logos.

Bread (Folic Acid)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make the addition of folic acid to bread and bread flour a statutory requirement; and if he will make a statement. [119773]

Ms Stuart: We plan to consult widely on the addition of folic acid to flour, including bread and bread flour. The consultation is planned for later this year and a decision will be made after this process is completed.

Cleft Lip and Palate Services

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to ensure that their existing progressive treatment pattern is maintained for cleft lip and palate patients whose units are scheduled for closure following his Department's review. [119750]

Ms Stuart: Clinical decisions are based on the one-to-one relationship between clinicians and other health professionals and their patients. It will be for the main cleft lip and palate centres and their "spoke" units to ensure high standards of care through ongoing training and education and through quality control procedures such as national inter-centre audit.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason his Department has stipulated an average of 40 to 50 new referrals per surgeon per annum for designated cleft lip and palate units. [119748]

Ms Stuart: The report on cleft lip and palate services by the Clinical Standards Advisory Group proposed that all surgeons involved in the care of patients with cleft lip and palate malformations should perform at least 40 to 50 operations annually. We have accepted the recommendations of this report.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if current cleft lip and palate patients whose existing unit is closing will be able to choose the new unit to which they are referred for treatment. [119751]

Ms Stuart: It is proposed that cleft lip and palate services should be provided as a "hub and spoke" model. The main "hub" centres will provide specialist facilities for patients, and will work closely with a network of "spoke" hospitals that will provide continuing care services, thus improving access and availability.

Most patients will attend their nearest "spoke" centre for the routine elements of their care. The main "hub" centre will be responsible for specialist treatments, including both primary and secondary surgical episodes. Existing patients who require specialist care will normally attend the main "hub" centre linked to their "spoke" hospital. However, if there are good reasons, patients may be referred to another main "hub" centre for specialist treatments.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will name the cleft lip and palate units listed in Table 25 (Assessment of providers) of the Clinical Standards Advisory Group report published in February 1998. [119749]

Ms Stuart: This information was given on a confidential basis to the Clinical Standards Advisory Group research team, and was not made available. Since the research was carried out, the situation has changed and the information obtained is no longer correct.

Overseas Doctors

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines he issues on checking the previous employment records of overseas doctors wishing to register to practise in the UK; and what plans he has to change these. [119614]

Ms Stuart: The General Medical Council (GMC), which is an independent statutory body, licences doctors to practice medicine in the United Kingdom, following an examination of their qualifications.

The National Health Service terms and conditions of service of hospital medical and dental staff require all career grade doctors to hold full registration with the GMC, while doctors in training should hold either limited or provisional registration.

NHS employers have a responsibility to take all possible action to ensure that all doctors they appoint are fit to practise. The Department has issued guidance reinforcing the need for pre-employment checks for doctors in the "Good Practice Guidance" issued with the "Appointment of Consultants Regulations 1996". Additionally, the Department has issued HSG(98)64 "The Management of Health, Safety and Welfare Issues of NHS Staff", and HSC 1998/212 "Children's Safeguard Review: Choosing with Care", which cover all NHS staff and advises NHS employers to ensure proper pre-employment checks are made so that employees do not represent a risk to patients.

In addition to the existing guidance, the Department plans to issue shortly a Direction requiring NHS employers to include in their application forms for doctors a declaration to be completed by applicant stating whether or not they have been or are the subject of disciplinary action by an overseas licensing or regulatory body.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Online Services

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the services which (a) his Department and (b) the executive agencies responsible to his Department (i) provide online and (ii) expect to be deliverable online by 2002. [119437]

Mr. Lock: So that the Cabinet Office can publish the spring 2000 report monitoring progress towards delivery of all Government services electronically by 2005 we are currently collecting data which will include our progress on delivering 25 per cent. of Government services electronically by 2002. The Lord Chancellor's Department currently provide a range of services electronically that include:

Just Ask!—the Community Legal Service Website.

Just Ask! provides co-ordinated access to several hundred legal information and help websites through its Advice Search feature. The site also features an electronic version of the CLS Directory, to be updated daily, containing over 15,000 entries. The Directory enables users to locate, either locally or nationally, legal service providers that can assist with the query at hand. The site is accessible through many channels. It has been built in accordance with World Wide Web Consortium (W3C) guidelines that ensure websites meet the needs of disabled users. It also features information in Welsh and six community languages (Bengali, Cantonese, Gujarati, Hindi, Punjabi and Urdu).

Legal Services Commission (LSC)

The LSC website provides a direct information service to both the citizen and suppliers of legal aid services. Documents for the public and legal services suppliers are included on the website, these are presented with representation of published leaflets, forms and manuals. These can be downloaded by the user and there is provision for e-mail feed back to the editor.

The Court Service

The Court Service has a significant number of business areas where services are delivered electronically. The Claim Production Centre (CPC) receives liquidated default claims in electronic format. The claim data are then electronically transferred from the centre to the court of the issuing party's nomination. Notification of issue is produced and, in most cases, faxed to the issuing party. The County Court Bulk Centre (CCBC) takes the centralised aspect of the CPC and deals with all administration processes after issue of claim. All judgments are entered via electronic means. The Centralised Attachment of Earnings Payment System (CAPS) performs the vast majority of the Civil Court's Suitors' Cash function. It receives attachment of earnings order information electronically from the local court, produces and dispatches the orders to the parties and, more importantly, the employer, and then collects and monitors for payments. The Parking Enforcement Centre (PEC) was established to support business resulting from the Road Traffic Act of 1991 which de-criminalised parking offences. Participating local authorities register any claims where the parking fine has gone unpaid despite the issue of a penalty notice. If there are no objections lodged to the registration, the authority can apply to issue a warrant of execution. All registrations and applications for warrants are sent electronically. Call Centres support the CCBC, CAPS and PEC. They operate generally between 8 am and 5 pm, Monday to Friday and are supported by out of hours messaging. Court Lists (hearing dates and times) are currently provided electronically to some criminal justice organisations and to defence legal practitioners. The Court Service website is used to provide a wide range of services including:

Access to over 200 Court of Appeal and High Court judgments (selected by the judges concerned);

Access to the daily lists for the whole of the Supreme Court Group and the Crown Court;

233 court forms (which may be completed on screen) are available;

Tribunals

Four Tribunals offer web based services, namely:

Office of the Social Security and Child Support Commissioners;

Immigration Appellate Authority;

Special Commissioners of Income Tax;

VAT and Duties Tribunal.

The range of services offered spans: explanation of tribunals' functions and standards of service; guidance as to how to appeal and for oral hearings; electronic forms; and catalogued commissioners' decisions.

HM Land Registry (HMLR)

HMLR provides a Direct Access Service which allows its Account Holders to view any computerised register online (95 per cent. of registered stock of some 16 million titles are computerised), lodge official searches, order office copies of the land register, view details of pending applications and provide electronic notification of discharge of charges. From its website, the HMLR also provides an interactive residential property price database providing details of property prices from regional down to postal sector levels. It also provides a forms library, where 44 types of Land Registry applications forms can be downloaded and used free of charge.

The Public Record Office (PRO)

The public can use the internet to consult the catalogues of the PRO's holdings; order documents in advance to be used in the reading rooms at Kew;

order books from the PRO's bookshop;

obtain estimates for the cost of copies of documents;

obtain information about the operations of the Public Record Office, copies of press releases and of some recently released documents; and use the Learning Curve, the PRO's contribution to the National Grid for Learning.

Blackwell Committee

Mr. Colman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the committee established by the Lord Chancellor to investigate non-legally qualified claims assessors and employment advisers (the Blackwell Committee) has completed its inquiries; and when it is intended to publish its report. [120091]

Mr. Lock: The Blackwell Committee has completed its investigations into the activities of non-legally qualified claims assessors and employment advisers. The Department has today published its report and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what his Department's policy is on (a) advertising and (b) acknowledging company sponsorship on the websites of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies; which companies (i) have placed advertisements and (ii) are acknowledged as sponsors on those websites; how much revenue has been received for each financial year since 1997 from such advertisements and sponsorship; and if that revenue has been retained within the budget of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies. [119554]

Mr. Lock: Government sites are permitted to carry advertising, but at present there is no advertising or company sponsorship on any of the following websites:

NORTHERN IRELAND

National Security Certificate System

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to ensure the adherence of the national security certificate system to the quality scheme under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. [117361]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The issue of national security certificates would fall with the Department's assessment of the extent to which each of its current functions, policies or duties has an impact on the promotion of equality of opportunity and the promotion of good relations within the terms of section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. On 7 April, the Department published its draft Equality Scheme explaining how it intends to fulfil the duties imposed by section 75 of the 1998 Act.

Saville Inquiry

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of what the final cost will be of the Saville inquiry. [117572]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 April 2000]: The Inquiry currently estimates that the final costs will be in the order of £65 million. That estimate is subject to revision in the light, in particular, of the duration of the hearings and the final determination of those payments to lawyers which are currently being made on an interim basis. The largest single block of expenditure is the lawyers involved in the Inquiry: these are expected to account for about two thirds of the total costs.

Ambulance Bay (Armagh)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the ambulance bay will be provided at Constabulary House, Russell Street, Armagh City; and if he will make a statement. [119022]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. C. James. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from C. James to Mr. John. D. Taylor, dated 19 April 2000:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to respond to your recently tabled Parliamentary Question about the provision of an ambulance bay at Constabulary House, Russell Street, Armagh.

Roads Service is currently progressing the statutory procedures required under Articles 10(4) and 13(1) of the Road Traffic Regulation (Northern Ireland) Order 1997 to authorise that a section of road fronting Constabulary House, Armagh be used for the parking of ambulances. A notice outlining our intention in this respect will be published in the local press tomorrow, Thursday 20 April 2000.

Assuming there are no objections to our proposal, we anticipate that the parking bay should be operational by the middle of June.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Forest Service

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Forest Service for the financial year 2000–01. [120235]

Mr. Ingram: The following key targets have been set for the Forest Service for 2000–01:

Achieve 700 hectares of new planting in public and private sectors combined

Offer for sale 340,000

Achieve 440,000 paying visitors

Maintain the forest estate under sustainable management

Approve (or reject) 90 per cent. of applications under the Woodland Grant Scheme and Farm Woodland Premium Scheme within eight weeks of receipt of a properly completed application form

Following planting, pay 90 per cent. of grant claims within eight weeks of receipt of a properly completed claim form

Complete a strategic review of NI forestry policy by 31 March 2001

Achieve an outturn which meets the targeted net cost of the forestry programme

Achieve 3 per cent. efficiency gains

Control DRC and programme expenditure to within 1 per cent. of the final control totals.

The Forest Service Business Plan for 2000–02 will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses at a later date.

Inward Investment

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many visits sponsored by the Industrial Development Board of prospective (a) incoming and (b) United Kingdom investors there were to each council area in 1998–99; and what is his (i) latest estimate of the corresponding figures for 1999–2000 and (ii) estimate of the total number of visits to Northern Ireland by potential inward investors for 1999–2000, broken down by (1) first time and (2) repeat visits. [118520]

Mr. Ingram: The table provides details of visits by potential investors to Northern Ireland District Council areas arranged by the Industrial Development Board in 1998–99.

The details for 1999–2000 will be made available with the publication of the IDB Annual Report which is expected in the autumn.

Details of first and repeat visits to Northern Ireland in 1999–2000 will be made available with the publication of the IDB End of Year Statement which is due in mid-May.

IDB promoted inward investment visits 1998–99

Notes:
1. Visit elements for other than inward investment purposes, such as visits to tourist attractions, are excluded.
2. General visits to Northern Ireland not including a specific council area are excluded.
3. Total District Council visits may exceed total visits to Northern Ireland as a company visit may cover more than one District Council area.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Debt Relief

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 5 April 2000, Official Report, column 472W, on debt collection, if her policy on giving debt relief includes discrimination between good and bad stewardship by aid recipients. [118415]

Clare Short: The Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative is an international agreement and so the conditions attached to the debt relief provided under the initiative must be agreed internationally. As my answer on 5 April made clear, I am pleased that the main criterion is that the debt relief benefits the poor, with governments of HIPC countries producing poverty reduction strategies to qualify for their relief.

The internationally agreed conditions for debt relief do not discriminate between good and bad stewardship of aid in the past. In many cases, the indebtedness will have arisen, in part, from bad stewardship of aid and other resources. Regardless of past performance, very poor, heavily indebted countries can qualify for the initiative. The key test is whether current governments have demonstrated a commitment to sound policies and poverty reduction, which will include the effective use of aid resources. The HIPC initiative requires a track record of three years before countries start getting their debt relief.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her Department's policy is on (a) advertising and (b) acknowledging company sponsorship on the websites of her Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies; which companies (i) have placed advertisements and (ii) are acknowledged as sponsors on those websites; how much revenue has been received for each financial year since 1997 from such advertisements and sponsorship; and if that revenue has been retained within the budget of her Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies. [119552]

Clare Short: Our website does not carry any advertising or acknowledgements of company sponsorship and we have no plans to change this policy.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Visits

Q13. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to visit the constituency of Meirionnydd Nant Conwy; and if he will make a statement. [118474]

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 19 April. [119325]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I will have further such meetings later today.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Properties

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the offices (i) owned and (ii) rented by his Department and its agencies in Scotland and (b) the number of staff (y) employed and (z) that can be accommodated (1) in total and (2) at each site. [114237]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 15 March 2000]: My Department rents accommodation in London, Edinburgh and Glasgow. Details of the locations and the staff currently employed are as follows. Details of the maximum number of staff that could be accommodated at each site cannot be accurately assessed. This would depend on the configuration of the accommodation.

Location	Number of staff employed
Dover House, London	39
Meridian Court, Glasgow	6
1 Melville Crescent, Edinburgh	18
Victoria Quay, Edinburgh	19
50 Frederick Street, Edinburgh	3

Departmental Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117818]

Dr. Reid: The Scotland Office employs 16 qualified lawyers in the office of the Advocate-General for Scotland. It is not possible to provide a meaningful comparison with the legal staffing of the Scottish Office before devolution.

Inverness Travel-to-Work Area

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 28 March 2000, Official Report, column 110W, on assisted areas, if he will indicate in respect of the Inverness travel-to-work area what comparators he has used which indicate that it is an area of extremely low population density leading to additional costs in the provision of goods and services. [117763]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 5 April 2000]: I have written to the right hon. Member and to other hon. Members with details of the Government's revised proposals for the Assisted Areas map. These proposals are also the subject of wider consultation. In formulating our revised proposals, the Government have taken account of the European Commission's guidelines, which indicate that NUTS 3 areas can be regarded as sparsely populated if they have a population density less than 12.5 persons per square kilometre.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what his Department's policy is on (a) advertising and (b) acknowledging company sponsorship on the websites of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies; which companies (i) have placed advertisements and (ii) are acknowledged as sponsors on those websites; how much revenue has been received for each financial year since 1997 from such advertisements and sponsorship; and if that revenue has been retained within the budget of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies. [119550]

Dr. Reid: Government websites are permitted to carry advertising but my Department has not yet decided whether to do so. Any development of the Scotland Office website will be within the framework of the e-government strategy for public sector websites.

No advertisements have appeared on the Scotland Office website, nor on the website of the former Scottish Office, so no revenue has been generated.

WALES

New Deal (Young People)

9. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of people who have left the New Deal for Young People and returned to state benefits within 12 months. [118443]

Mr. Hanson: Figures for Wales show that, by January 2000, 18,300 young people had left the New Deal for Young People. Of these, 2,600 (14 per cent.) moved directly to other benefits. 17 per cent. of leavers to date had subsequently made a claim for JSA within 12 months of leaving.

Local Government Reform

10. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the reform of local government in Wales. [118444]

Mr. Hanson: The Government are committed to the agenda for modernisation of local government in Wales set out in the 1998 White Paper "Local Voices". The Local Government Bill will help to secure a bigger say for local people by providing for new executive structures which will improve efficiency and accountability. It will also set up a new ethical framework, specifically tailored to Welsh needs, and empower councils to promote the economic, social and environmental well-being of their communities.

Health Service Reform

11. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting in Cardiff on 7 April of the Joint Ministerial Committee on reform and modernisation of the health service. [118445]

Mr. Hanson: This was a very important and very useful meeting. It showed there is a commitment from all parts of the UK to share ideas and learn from each other in order to modernise our National Health Service. The meeting also highlighted a new, shared way of working post devolution and discussed the Government's overall UK increase in NHS investment for the next four years, to raise the level to European averages.

23. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary about the reform and modernisation of the NHS in Wales. [118458]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I regularly meet the Assembly First Secretary and the Assembly Health Secretary to discuss the NHS in Wales. Reform and Modernisation has, of course, been on our agenda and the first meeting of the Joint Ministerial Group on the NHS in the UK was held in Cardiff on 7 April. At that meeting, chaired by the Prime Minister, ideas on modernisation were shared between Ministers from all parts of the UK.

Councillors (Remuneration)

12. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the impact of the provisions of the Local Government Bill on the cost of remuneration of councillors in Wales. [118446]

Mr. Hanson: The Local Government Bill provides for the setting up of independent panels to advise on levels of remuneration. It is not possible to assess the impact of such panels on the cost of councillors' remuneration, as the panels are independent and their recommendations are only advisory.

NHS Waiting Lists

13. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary on NHS waiting lists in Wales. [118447]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet regularly with the National Assembly First Secretary and the Assembly Health Secretary to discuss health issues. The subject of waiting lists is often a part of our discussions. It was also discussed at the first meeting of the Joint Ministerial Committee for Health held recently in Cardiff. The National Assembly has invested over £37 million to reduce waiting lists in Wales.

Learning and Skills Bill

14. Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the Learning and Skills Bill. [118448]

Mr. Hanson: I have received several representations about the Learning and Skills Bill, including from hon. Members, training providers and the industry sector.

Health Funding

15. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary about health funding in Wales. [118449]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet regularly with the First Secretary and the Assembly Health Secretary to discuss Health issues in Wales. In the light of the recent Budget announcements we have, of course, discussed health funding specifically. However, it is for the National Assembly to decide how the additional funding allocated to Wales is distributed.

Genetically Modified Crops

16. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary on the policy of the National Assembly concerning genetically modified crops. [118450]

Mr. Hanson: I have regular meetings with the Assembly Agriculture Secretary Christine Gwyther and we have frequently discussed the issue of genetically modified crops.

Education Funding

17. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary about education funding in Wales. [118451]

Mr. Hanson: I regularly meet the Assembly Secretaries when I discuss a variety of issues. In the light of the recent Budget announcements, I will be discussing education funding. However, it is for the National Assembly to decide how the additional funding allocated to Wales is distributed.

Sport

18. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to discuss access to sport with the First Secretary; and if he will make a statement. [118452]

Mr. Hanson: I meet the Assembly Secretaries on a regular basis to discuss a variety of issues including the development of sport in Wales.

Agriculture

19. Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the recently announced support package for farmers in Wales. [118454]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The farming unions in Wales have broadly welcomed the support package for farmers in Wales which was announced at the recent agriculture summit chaired by the Prime Minister on 30 March.

20. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the First Secretary to discuss the future of agriculture in Wales. [118455]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet the First Secretary on a weekly basis and discuss a wide range of issues, including the agriculture industry in Wales. The farming summit on 30 March chaired by the Prime Minister demonstrated the Government's commitment to the future of farming, agreeing a package of measures and additional funding for farmers across the UK. This will include measures to help them adapt to the problems facing agricultural economies in the 21st century. This should mean an additional £28 million in total for Welsh farmers.

24. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary with regard to the state of farming in Wales. [118459]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet the First Secretary on a regular weekly basis and we discuss a wide range of issues including the Welsh farming industry. This subject was addressed at the Agriculture Summit chaired by the Prime Minister on 30 March, when a package of measures worth £200 million across the UK was agreed. The Finance Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales has subsequently confirmed that over £28 million of this will be available to Welsh farmers.

Education Maintenance Allowances

21. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the Assembly Secretary for Education to discuss education maintenance allowances in Wales. [118456]

Mr. Hanson: I regularly meet the Assembly Secretaries to discuss a variety of issues.

There are currently 15 pilot areas in England covering a wide range of social and geographical circumstances that will allow for valid conclusions to be drawn for Wales.

Once the pilots are completed, the National Assembly for Wales will take the opportunity to consider the information collected and whether or not the scheme should be introduced in Wales.

Car Components Industry

22. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry regarding the consequences for the car components industry in Wales of the sale of Rover. [118457]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I discussed this matter with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry last week and have also discussed the Assembly's response with the First Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales. I am following with interest the work of the Task Force established by the Welsh Automotive Forum and the work of the West Midlands Task Force.

Small and Medium-sized Enterprises

25. Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary about the impact of the 2000 Budget on small and medium-sized enterprises in Wales. [118460]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have regular discussions with the First Secretary and discuss a wide range of issues including the Budget and other related matters.

The Chancellor's Budget is excellent news for Wales. It allows the National Assembly for Wales to provide extra resources to support enterprise including help via Welsh Training and Enterprise Councils for over 1,000 new business start-ups. The Budget also sets out a substantial package of tax and spending measures that build on existing measures to help small and medium-sized enterprises up the ladder of opportunity.

Transport

26. Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans to meet the First Secretary to discuss the transport needs of Wales. [118461]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet the First Secretary on a weekly basis, and discuss a wide range of issues, including the transport needs of Wales.

As a result of the Chancellor's Budget, the Assembly will receive a total of £158 million additional funding in 2000–01. This has allowed the Assembly to announce additional funding of over £16 million to local authority integrated transport packages, safer community transport projects, the Transport Grant and many small-scale safety schemes.

Waterhouse Inquiry

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the former Welsh Office civil servant, Derek Brushett, attended any of the preliminary hearings held by Sir Ronald Waterhouse to discuss procedure with the North Wales child abuse inquiry on 10 September, 15 October, 26 November 1996 and 3 January 1997. [113486]

Mr. Paul Murphy: In so far as it can be established, there is no record of Mr. Brushett attending any of the preliminary hearings in his official capacity.

An examination of the transcripts of evidence shows that he did not take part in any of the preliminary hearings.

Quangos

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the quangos in Wales, and their membership, in (a) 1992, (b) 1993, (c) 1994, (d) 1995, (e) 1996, (f) 1997, (g) 1998 and (h) 1999. [116338]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information given in the table provides all available details.

All non-departmental public bodies in Wales in existence between 1995 and 1999 are listed, with the number of members between 1995 and 1998 given where this information is available. Information is not held centrally before 1995, and is not yet available for 1999, as records are collected from 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2000.

All of these bodies transferred to the National Assembly for Wales on 1 July 1999.

Beef

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Welsh Agriculture Secretary with regard to ensuring that beef which is imported from Europe is not labelled as Welsh Beef. [118438]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My hon. Friend and I meet regularly with our colleagues in the National Assembly to discuss a range of issues including the agriculture sector. The Assembly subscribes to the voluntary Beef Labelling Scheme which operates in implementation of an EC Regulation, and traceability is a key feature. The labels must indicate the location where birth, rearing and slaughter took place and, though labelling itself is voluntary, the rules of the scheme should be adhered to if labelling is done. There are discussions taking place within the EU to finalise the precise structure of a compulsory scheme which it is anticipated will start to operate in September.

A3XX Project

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has made to the First Secretary and the National Assembly regarding the A3XX project. [118453]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet the First Secretary on a weekly basis and have discussed a range of issues, including BAE and Broughton. I am delighted that BAE have been successful in attracting £530 million of launch investment.

Livestock Industry

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary on the prospects for the Welsh livestock industry. [118442]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet the First Secretary on a regular weekly basis and we discuss a range of issues including the Welsh livestock industry. This was also addressed at the Prime Minister's Agriculture Summit on 30 March which agreed the package of support and measures for the farming industry. In Wales £14.7 million goes to the Less Favoured Areas while £10.6 million agrimonetary compensation goes to dairy, beef and sheep farmers.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

BMW/Rover

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list the requests he made for meetings with (a) the Chairman of BMW, (b) the Chairman of Rover, (c) the Chief Executive of BMW and (d) the Chief Executive of Rover between 1 November and 29 March; [117565]

(2) if he will list the meetings and telephone conversations he had with (a) the Chairman of BMW, (b) the Chairman of Rover, (c) the Chief Executive of BMW and (d) the Chief Executive of Rover between 1 November and 29 March; [117566]

(3) if he will list the requests his Department made for information to BMW and Rover between 1 November and 29 March, indicating the date in each case. [117556]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 14 April 2000, Official Report, columns 289–90W, to the hon. Member for Tiverton and Honiton (Mrs. Browning).

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will be able to award regional selective assistance in Britain under an approved map. [118086]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 7 April 2000]: Payments under offers of regional selective assistance made on or before 31 December 1999 continue to be made. New offers are being made subject to approval of the Assisted Areas Map by the College of Commissioners.

Post Offices

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) Crown post offices, (b) franchised post offices and (c) sub-post offices there were in each constituency in (i) 1989 and (ii) 1999. [118772]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I understand from the Post Office that they do not hold historical data for the types and numbers of post offices by parliamentary constituency. I have obtained from the Post Office a list of the information as at 1 October 1999, the latest date available, and have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

World of Leather

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of possible job losses as a result of the World of Leather chain going into receivership. [118897]

Dr. Howells: I am deeply concerned about any job losses that may arise as a consequence of the present difficulties of Uno Plc ("World of Leather"). My officials have been in contact with the administrators of Uno Plc and trade associations in both the furniture manufacturing and leather tanning sectors.

It is hoped that other furniture retailers will acquire the majority of the stores from which Uno Plc traded, although the number of staff who will be offered continued employment by the businesses acquiring those stores is presently not known.

The furniture manufacturing industry has indicated that the short term effects on employment are likely to be limited, although I understand that there have already been closures of two furniture manufacturers as a direct result of the administration of Uno Plc. Concerns have been expressed about employment in the medium term in the sector, not least arising from the effect any adverse publicity will have on consumer confidence.

The leather tanning industry has indicated that there is unlikely to be an impact upon employment in that sector.

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the extent to which the actions of the World of Leather chain towards its customers in the month prior to its going into receivership complied with consumer protection legislation. [118896]

Dr. Howells: Under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986, the joint administrators of the company are obliged to report to me within six months of the administration order on the conduct of the directors of Uno Plc ("World of Leather"). In particular, schedule 1 to that Act requires the administrators, in making their report, to have regard to certain matters including the extent of the directors' responsibility for any failure by the company to supply any goods or services which have been paid for (in whole or in part). The contents of the administrators' report will be given careful consideration by my officials in the Disqualification Unit of the Insolvency Service.

Additionally, my officials continue to be in contact with the joint administrators of Uno Plc in response to specific concerns raised about the affairs leading to the administration of the company.

If there is any evidence that more general consumer protection legislation has been breached it will be for the appropriate authorities to consider whether to undertake an investigation.

BNFL

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many contracts for (a) Thorp and (b) the Sellafield MOX plant have been signed by British Nuclear Fuels for each plant respectively. [119153]

Mrs. Liddell: Contracts and contracted terms between British Nuclear Fuels (BNFL) and its customers for the supply of goods and services are commercial matters for the parties concerned.

BNFL has contracts with customers in the UK and Japan, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, Netherlands, Spain, Sweden and Canada to reprocess spent nuclear fuel at the Thorp plant.

As regards contracts for the Sellafield MOX plant, I refer my hon. Friend to the report produced by PA Consulting for the Environment Agency, entitled "Assessment of BNFL's Economic Case for the Sellafield Mox Plant", copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

BNFL is continuing to pursue reprocessing and MOX fuel business opportunities.

Ofgem

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to advise Ofgem to take action against gas suppliers which breach Standard Condition 2 of the Gas Suppliers' Licence; and if he will make a statement. [118931]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 13 April 2000]: It is for Ofgem to determine whether enforcement action against suppliers for breach of Standard Condition 2 is necessary. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will bring to the attention of the Director General of Ofgem the matter raised by the hon Member.

Shareholder Remedies

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce the results of his Department's consultation on its document, "Shareholder Remedies"; and if he will make a statement on what action he intends to take. [119024]

Dr. Howells: The results of the Department's consultation on "Shareholder Remedies" are being considered in the wider context of the Company Law Review. The Steering Group of the Company Law Review published a further consultation document last month—"Developing the Framework"—which included sections on shareholders and shareholder remedies. A copy of that document was made available to the House: it can also be accessed on the Department's website.

Newspaper Industry

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to investigate the level of competition in the wholesale newspaper industry. [119251]

Dr. Howells: The Director General of Fair Trading has a general responsibility to keep under review the carrying on of commercial activities in the UK. He has powers to investigate and to act where he has concerns about anti-competitive behaviour.

If anyone has evidence to suggest anti-competitive behaviour in the wholesale newspaper market they should inform the Director General of Fair Trading.

Nuclear Safeguards Bill

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what requirements will be placed upon British Nuclear Fuels to allow access by safeguards inspectors to United Kingdom-owned or originated plutonium held at BNFL sites as a result of the enactment of the Nuclear Safeguards Bill [Lords]. [119255]

Dr. Howells: None. Under the terms of the UK/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement and the Euratom Treaty, British Nuclear Fuels are already required to allow access by safeguards inspectors to all civil nuclear material they hold, including plutonium.

Rover

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect of the closure of Rover Longbridge (a) outside the West Midlands and (b) in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [119284]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Much will depend on the outcome of BMW's negotiations with Alchemy or any other potential purchaser. These are ongoing. The Rover Task Force will be submitting an interim report to the Government shortly.

However, until these discussions are concluded and it becomes clearer what the full implications of the acquisition might be, it would be imprudent to draw conclusions about the effect that reduced working at Longbridge might have elsewhere in the UK.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for areas outside the West Midlands which will be affected by the closure of the Longbridge Rover plant to receive financial assistance for retraining and employment creation; and if he will make a statement. [119285]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government will consider this in the light of the interim report from the Rover Task Force, which will be published shortly.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what purposes the Government's aid package for employment in relation to Rover will be allocated, broken down between (a) retraining the work force, (b) grants to attract new business, (c) support for the eventual owners of Rover and (d) other purposes. [119201]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 April 2000]: Decisions on the allocation of the aid package will be informed by the recommendations of the Task Force. I expect to receive their interim report in the near future.

Longbridge

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what money will be available in Worcestershire for reinvestment and retraining from the first £129 million package for Longbridge. [118696]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced on 17 March that the Government would contribute £129 million to support projects aimed at economic regeneration, job creation, and to deal with the consequences of BMW's decision in relation to Rover.

Export Controls

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the export licences granted for strategic exports from the UK from 1 January to (a) Zimbabwe, (b) Uganda, (c) Rwanda, (d) Burundi, (e) Angola and (f) Namibia. [118946]

Dr. Howells: The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated. Between 1 January 2000 and 5 April 2000, 15 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs), and no Open Individual Export Licences, were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in the specified countries of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, commonly known as the Military List. One SIEL covered the export to Angola of goods with the rating PL5033, one SIEL covered the export to Uganda of goods with the rating PL5031, and 13 SIELs covered exports to Zimbabwe; information on the SIELs covering exports for Zimbabwe is set out in the table. Licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings; where this is so, the licence is included in the table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

This information should be considered in light of the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) on 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 307–08W.

In addition, Uganda and Zimbabwe are permitted destinations on certain Open General Export Licences covering the export of goods on the Military List; copies of all Open General Export Licences are routinely placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the most recent export licence for defence-related equipment was issued for export to (a) Saudi Arabia, (b) Kuwait, (c) Malaysia, (d) Zimbabwe, (e) Indonesia, (f) Iran, (g) Pakistan, (h) Yemen and (j) India; what each was for; how many licences for exports to each of those countries were granted in the last five years, and for what purpose; and if he will make a statement. [119479]

Dr. Howells: The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated. Between 1 January 1995 and 1 May 1997, 2,376 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in the specified countries of goods listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, commonly known as the Military List. In this period there were no such SIELs issued to Iran.

As regards export licences granted for the export of military goods to the specified countries between 2 May 1997 and 31 December 1998, details of export licensing decisions in this period were set out in the Government's Annual Reports published by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in March and November 1999. The Reports give details of the military equipment licensed for export during the periods as well as the ratings of these goods. Similar details of the military equipment licensed in later years will be set out in the relevant Annual Reports.

As regards licences granted since 1 January 1999, the Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated. Between 1 January 1999 and 5 April 2000, 1,221 SIELs have been issued covering the export of goods on the Military List. A breakdown of the licences issued between 1 January 1995 and 1 May 1997 and between 1 January 1999 and 5 April 2000 are set out in the tables.

Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings; where this is so, the licence is included in the Table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

This information should be considered in light of the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) on 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 307–08W.

As regards Open Individual Export Licences, I shall write to the Member as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

In addition, India, Kuwait, Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia and Zimbabwe are permitted destinations on certain Open General Export Licences covering the export of goods on the Military List; copies of all Open General Export Licences are routinely placed in the Library of the House.

Finally, it would entail disproportionate cost to compile information on the end-user for all of the licences shown in the Tables, and to make any inquiries necessary under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to register arms brokers before autumn 2000; and if he will make a statement. [119052]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 17 April 2000]: The Government will announce their proposals for new export control legislation, including proposals on trafficking and brokering, following conclusion of the review of the proposals in the White Paper on Strategic Export Controls (Cm 3989) in the light of the responses received. The Government are committed to introducing new legislation on strategic export controls when time is available in the legislative programme.

Compensation Claims

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average payment made per client to date to each firm of solicitors in Yorkshire involved in the compensation claims for (a) chest disease and (b) vibration white finger. [119406]

Mrs. Liddell: The information is given in the table.

Mobile Phone Networks

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to delay the final rounds of bidding for the new mobile phone networks until after the Stewart report is published. [119688]

Ms Hewitt: Bidders in the auction of Wireless Telegraphy Act Licences for Third Generation mobile telecommunications spectrum have been kept informed of the progress of the work of the Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones. The Government understand that the Group expects to deliver its report to the Government some time after Easter. It is planned to publish the report soon after receipt by the Government although definite dates have yet to be decided. If the auction is still in progress it is not proposed to hold any rounds between the receipt of the report by Government and its publication unless all remaining Bidders agree otherwise.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has chosen to re-tender the new round of bidding for the mobile phone network. [119687]

Ms Hewitt: The Government have no plans to re-auction Wireless Telegraphy Act Licences for 3G mobile telecommunications spectrum.

Research Intensity (Imported Goods)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of the United Kingdom market for (a) high research-intensity goods, (b) medium research-intensity goods and (c) low research-intensity goods was represented by imports in the last 12 months. [119593]

Mr. Alan Johnson: In 1996 (the most recent year for which data are available) imports equalled 74 per cent. of UK domestic sales of high technology goods. As well as finished goods, these imports include components and sub-assemblies, a significant proportion of which are incorporated in UK exports (UK exports of high technology goods were £38 billion in 1996, while imports were £36 billion).

In the medium-high technology sector imports equalled 51 per cent. of UK domestic sales while medium-low technology and low-technology imports both equalled 25 per cent. of domestic sales.

Synchrotron

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons the Government preferred Didcot to Daresbury for the synchrotron. [119315]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 17 April 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 21 March 2000, Official Report, column 480W.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department's Ministers decided that Didcot was the best site for the synchrotron. [119313]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 17 April 2000]: After considering all the relevant factors.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department first wrote to Wellcome suggesting Didcot for the synchrotron. [119316]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 17 April 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the evidence given to the Science and Technology Select Committee by the Director General of the Research Councils on 8 December 1999 and by the Director of the Wellcome Trust on 15 December 1999.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the correspondence between his Department and Wellcome over the location of the new synchrotron. [119314]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 17 April 2000]: The correspondence between my Department and the Wellcome Trust contains information given in confidence and as such is exempt from disclosure under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Industrial Diseases

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many ex-miners from (a) Scotland and (b) the UK claiming compensation for chronic bronchitis and emphysema have died before their claims were fully processed. [119558]

Mrs. Liddell: As at 10 April IRISC, the Department's claims handler had been informed of 4,203 claims where the date of death recorded occurred since the date of claim. Of these 341 are in Scotland.

In all these cases the claims will be continued by the claimant's widow or dependants. In addition, where the claimant's death certificate shows that one of the respiratory diseases for which British Coal were found liable either caused or materially contributed to the death, the Department will also make a bereavement award to the claimant's widow.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the claims received from ex-miners in (a) Scotland and (b) the UK for compensation for chronic bronchitis and emphysema have been fully processed. [119559]

Mrs. Liddell: As at 9 April, the Department had made a total of 1,949 full and final payments totalling some £5.4 million, of which 345 totalling £900,000 have been to Scottish ex-miners. In addition, the Department has made a further 18,000 interim and bereavement award payments totalling £50.6 million, of which 1,308 totalling £3.1 million have been to Scottish ex-miners and their families.

Consumer Affairs Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the outcome of the Consumer Affairs Council held in Luxembourg on 13 April; and if he will make a statement. [119587]

Dr. Howells: The Council adopted a Resolution to establish a Community-wide network for settlement of consumer disputes. This European extra-judicial network will be known as EEJ-Net.

The Commission presented its strategy paper for boosting consumer confidence in e-commerce through encouragement of business best practice (in particular the development of codes of practice), effective out of court dispute settlement (EEJ-Net) and guaranteed access to legal redress through the courts in the consumer's own member state.

An orientation debate was held on the Commission's proposals for a European Food Safety Agency following last year's Food Safety White Paper; the Commission is now considering delegates' comments with a view to presenting formal proposals in September/October.

The Commission presented reports on the implementation and enforcement of both the Timeshare and Package Travel Directives and on progress in the negotiations for a Directive on the Distance Marketing of Financial Services.

The Presidency described plans for a forthcoming conference on globalisation, regulation and self-regulation. Denmark presented ideas for a new strategy to strengthen consumer policy in the EU.

Oil and Gas Exploration (Scotland)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will suspend new drilling for oil and gas in the seas west of Scotland until the full implementation of the European Habitats Directive. [119592]

Mrs. Liddell: No. I am of the view that all existing consents to drill oil and gas wells to the west of Scotland are compatible with the requirements of the Habitats Directive. It has been concluded after extensive study and consultation that these wells are unlikely to have significant impacts on the environment generally and in particular any species or sites that might be protected under the Directive or indeed any other wildlife in the area.

MOX Fuel

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 5 April 2000, Official Report, column 476W, if he will place a copy of the English translation of the Kansai report in the Library. [119681]

Mrs. Liddell: I have arranged for copies of the unofficial English translation of Kansai Electric's interim report on its investigation into the falsification of quality assurance data for MOX to be placed in the Library of the House. This translation of its report has not been approved by Kansai Electric.

Domestic Gas Supply

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many houses in the UK he estimates are not connected to the domestic gas supply network; which (a) regions and (b) constituencies have the highest proportion of such houses; and what plans he has to encourage gas suppliers to increase connections. [119603]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 18 April 2000]: The information requested is not held centrally. The question of gas suppliers increasing connections is one for the Director General of Gas and Electricity Markets. He has duties under the Gas Act 1986 (as amended) to exercise his relevant functions to ensure that reasonable demands for gas conveyed through pipes are met where it is economical, and that there is effective competition in the conveyance of gas to new areas. There are some seven Public Gas Transporters (PGTs). A consumer seeking a gas connection can either seek a connection from a PGT, purchase and lay the pipe himself, or his PGT can use the system of supplemental charges whereby the cost of connection is recovered over a protracted period through an additional charge on each unit of gas supplied.

Liquid Petroleum Gas

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many suppliers of liquid petroleum gas operate in the UK; what is the market share of each; what was the average price per litre of gas supplied in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what plans he has to bring this market within the remit of the regulator. [119604]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 18 April 2000]: There are around 16 liquid petroleum gas (LPG) suppliers in the UK. On the market share of individual companies , I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 9 March 2000, Official Report, column 775W.

The average price paid for LPG by manufacturing industry in Great Britain in 1999 is provisionally estimated at £145.11 per tonne. My Department regularly publishes quarterly estimates of prices paid by manufacturing industry for LPG in the monthly bulletin "Energy Trends".

There are no plans to bring the LPG market within the remit of the gas regulator, the Director General of Gas Supply.

Communications Reform

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on consultation on the Communications Reform White Paper. [120230]

Mr. Byers: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport and I encourage anyone with ideas or thoughts on the substance of the White Paper to submit them to us, either in writing or via our e-mail address consultation@communicationswhitepaper.gov.uk

by 23 June 2000.

Unless contributors make clear that they do not want their contributions to be published, we intend to place most of the material submitted to us on our website. We hope that this will generate further comment and debate as we prepare the main messages of the White Paper.

Fireworks Injuries

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the fireworks injuries statistics for 1999; and if he will make a statement. [120231]

Dr. Howells: The total number of persons recorded as attending hospital casualty departments in Great Britain during the 1999 bonfire night period was 1,056. This represents an increase of just over 21 per cent. on the previous year's total of 831. However, injuries in 1999 were still at a lower level than those recorded in the mid 1990s. Also firework sales were approximately 40 per cent. higher in 1999 than for the same period in 1998.

During the millennium period 327 persons required treatment at hospital casualty departments. This suggests that the Government's warning about the dangers of mixing alcohol and fireworks was taken very much to heart.

There were no deaths from fireworks in 1999.

I am arranging for draft copies of the injury figures together with the analytical and regional tables to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses as well as on the DTI website (www.dti.gov.uk) and hard copies will be published shortly as will details of the millennium injuries.

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to conduct the quinquennial review of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority. [120230]

Mrs. Liddell: In line with the Government's policy of reviewing Executive Agencies and Non-Departmental Public Bodies at regular intervals, my Department intends to conduct the quinquennial review of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) during the course of this year with the aim of completing it by the end of March 2001. This is five years after the UKAEA assumed its current form following the separation of AEA Technology. The review will be forward-looking, open to external input and take full account of the views of all stakeholders.

The quinquennial review will be conducted in two stages. The first will look at options for the future delivery of functions provided by the UKAEA. The second will consider future performance requirements for delivery of those functions. In both cases the focus will be on corporate organisational and strategic issues, not on specific site-related operational matters. A copy of the terms of reference for the review has been placed in the Library of the House.

The review will be carried out by my officials with advice from a Steering Board chaired by the Director General of Energy in my Department. The Board will include representatives of UKAEA, other Government Departments and external, independent members with relevant knowledge and expertise. UKAEA customers, staff, trade unions and all other interested parties will have the opportunity to contribute to the review. I very much hope they will do so.

Further information on the review, including how to contribute, can be obtained from the UKAEA Quinquennial Review Team, Department of Trade and Industry, Room 107, 1 Victoria Street, London, SW1H 0ET or from the DTI website at www.dti.gov.uk. Comments on the review and requests for further information can also be sent to ukaeareview.comment@dti.gov.uk.

The review will be carried out as openly as possible and the results of each stage made public. Contributors to the review should make clear whether they have any objections to publication of their comments, including publication on the DTI website.

Weights and Measures Laboratory

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what targets he has set his Department's National Weights and Measures Laboratory for 2000–01. [120295]

Mr. Byers: I have set the National Weights and Measures Laboratory the following quality of service and efficiency targets for 2000–01:

Financial Targets

To report a break-even situation in the Income and Expenditure Account 2000–01.

To meet the net vote target in 2000–01.

To ensure that total overhead costs are less than 55 per cent. of total costs.

To increase non-DTI income by 15 per cent.

Operational Targets

To complete 90 per cent. of European type approvals within 10 weeks.

To complete all European type approvals within an average of seven weeks.

To complete 95 per cent. of all calibration jobs (including preparation of certificates) within 18 working days of acceptance of the work and to achieve an average completion time of less than 14 days.

To meet 70 per cent. of the milestones by their due date in the work programme agreed between the NMSPU and NWML.

80 per cent. of customers rate NWML's provision of services as satisfactory or better.

Questions delegated to the Chief Executive.

Chief Executive to reply within 10 working days to all letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply.

I have placed copies of the Corporate Plan in the Libraries of the House.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 1 February 2000, Official Report, column 537W, what plans he has to set separate renewable energy generation targets for each of the UK standard regions; and if he will make a statement. [119692]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government Offices for the Regions are initiating work to prepare regional assessments and targets for renewable energy provision based upon, and where necessary updating, existing resource studies. On 9 February, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) published "Guidance on Preparing Regional Sustainable Development Frameworks". The guidance indicated that the Government hope that the frameworks will draw upon this work and elaborate a regional approach to renewable energy, including regional targets flowing from the assessments of each region's capacity to generate electricity from a range of different sources. The Government would like to see frameworks in place in all regions by the end of 2000.

The frameworks will work alongside Regional Planning Guidance (RPG) and Regional Development Agencies' Economic Strategies in promoting sustainable development. We are encouraging regional planning bodies to set targets in RPG for the structure plan and unitary development plan areas within the region consistent with the regional targets provided by the regional sustainable development frameworks. Advice on this will be set out in the final version of the revised "Planning Policy Guidance (PPG) Note 11: Regional Planning" to be published by DETR shortly.

Together with the national planning policy guidance in "PPP 22: Renewable Energy", RPG—as taken forward through structure plans and Part 1 unitary development plans—will provide a strategic framework for policies and proposals for renewable energy development in local plans, including the identification in those plans of suitable sites. This, in turn, will feed through to decisions on individual planning applications.

More positive planning at regional and local levels will contribute to greater public familiarity with, and acceptance of, prospective renewable energy developments. It remains important, however, for operators to prepare the ground with local authorities, environmental organisations and local people before formal planning applications are submitted and to develop proposals in consultation with them.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Statistics

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the increase in the number of pensioners entitled to the Minimum Income Guarantee as a result of the Budget in (a) the Basildon parliamentary constituency, (b) Basildon and (c) Thurrock. [117053]

Mr. Bayley: The number of pensioners who will benefit from the recent increases in benefit rates is listed in the table.

Number of pensioners currently entitled to the Minimum Income Guarantee

	Number
Basildon parliamentary constituency	2,700
Basildon local authority	4,400
Thurrock local authority	2,800

Source:
November 1999 Quarterly Statistical Enquiry

We also estimate that over 500,000 pensioners in total will benefit from the increased capital limits in the Minimum Income Guarantee, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. Estimates of pensioners newly entitled to benefit because of these changes are not available at constituency level.

Disabled People

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people on Incapacity Benefit have, under the innovation schemes established as part of the New Deal for the Disabled, (a) had any contact with one of the schemes, (b) applied for one of the schemes, (c) joined one of the schemes, (d) completed a placement with one of the schemes, (e) found part-time employment as a result of participation in one of the schemes and (f) found full-time employment as a result of participation in one of the schemes. [118607]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

Up until 29 February, which is the latest date for which information is available:

6,055 people have applied to join New Deal for Disabled People Innovative schemes;

3,079 people have been accepted onto these schemes;

494 people are in, or have completed work trials;

607 people have started work;

Other disabled people have been assisted by the New Deal for Disabled People Personal Adviser pilots.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners with a final level of income below that to which they could be entitled if they could claim the Minimum Income Guarantee are disqualified from claiming the Minimum Income Guarantee. [119210]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

Pensioners with income below Minimum Income Guarantee levels, disqualified due to full-time work or excess capital

Capital	All pensioners	Excluding workers
0 to 3,000	25,000	0
3,001 to 8,000	50,000	45,000
8,001 to 12,000	70,000	65,000
12,001 to 16,000	20,000	20,000
Over 16,000	90,000	85,000
Total	255,000	215,000

Notes:

1. Figures are in 2000–01 prices and benefit levels.

2. Cases are rounded to the nearest 5,000.

3. The number of cases have been calculated using the Pensioner Income Series Data based on the 1997–98 FRS and the Policy Simulation Model (PSM) for Income Related benefits, based on 1997–98 Family Resources Survey data.

4. Workers include pensioners and/or their partners who are in full-time work.

Recovery of Overpayments

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of the Debt Accounting and Management system; and when the installation was cancelled. [119212]

Angela Eagle: Administration of benefits and recovery of overpayment is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. He will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 18 April 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent question asking what was the cost of the Debt Accounting and Management System (DAMS) and when the installation was cancelled.

The costs of DAMS are commercial in confidence.

The DAMS procurement contract with EDS was discharged in July 1999.

EDS is contracted to provide information systems IT service delivery support to the Department. This contract has not been terminated.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Capital Rules

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of amending the capital rules for disabled people to match the new level announced for pensioners. [119250]

Mr. Bayley: The cost of increasing the capital limits to £6,000 and £12,000 in the income related benefits for disabled people would be £25 million.

Lone Parents

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many initial invitation letters have been sent to lone parents in the target group for the New Deal for Lone Parents. [119248]

Angela Eagle: 514,821 initial invitation letters were sent to lone parents in the target group from July 1997 to January 2000, the latest figures available.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents whose youngest child is aged five years and three months or over are in receipt of Income Support. [119245]

Angela Eagle: The number of lone parents on Income Support in Great Britain with a youngest child aged five years and three months or over is 470,000.

Source:

Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry, November 1999.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents, under the New Deal for Lone Parents, have secured employment in each month since the scheme began, broken down into (a) target and (b) non-target groups. [119247]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Information for National Phase—October 1998 to January 2000

National Programme	Target group	Non-target group	Total[1]
October 1998	16	7	23
November 1998	802	533	1,353
December 1998	492	382	884
January 1999	792	628	1,427
February 1999	1,139	883	2,030
March 1999	1,382	989	2,383
April 1999	1,866	1,314	3,190
May 1999	1,527	1,029	2,569
June 1999	1,381	898	2,290
July 1999	1,463	1,019	2,495
August 1999	1,122	750	1,887
September 1999	1,502	1,010	2,525
October 1999	2,924	2,248	5,198
November 1999	2,577	1,910	4,509
December 1999	1,319	1,124	2,459
January 2000	1,307	800	2,133
Total	21,611	15,524	[2]37,355

[1] The total column includes those for whom target/non-target is not recorded, for this reason the columns do not sum to the total.

[2] The total figure differs from the total figure quoted in the Statistical First Release (SFR) due to rounding in the SFR.

During phase 1 (July 1997-October 1998) 2,473 target group and 920 non-target group lone parents obtained jobs[1]. In phase 2 (April 1998 to October 1998) a total of 2,878 lone parents obtained jobs[2].

[1] Information is not available in the format requested for phases 1 and 2 because results were kept clerically and it is not possible to accurately break them down on a monthly basis.

[2] In some cases it was not recorded whether the lone parent was either from the target or non-target group, for this reason the figures cannot be split into these groups.

Online Services

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the services which (a) his Department and (b) the executive agencies responsible to his Department (i) provide online and (ii) expect to be deliverable online by 2002. [119436]

Angela Eagle: So that the Cabinet Office can publish the spring 2000 report on monitoring progress towards delivery of all Government services electronically by 2005, we are currently collecting data which will include our progress on delivering 25 per cent. of Government services electronically by 2002.

The Departmental website is undergoing immediate re-design to aid navigation to our key client groups: Families with Children, Working Age and Pensioners. There will also be access points providing information to support groups and journalists.

Currently, however, the Department provides a range of services electronically that include the Child Care Information System, developed in conjunction with the Department for Education and Employment and the Scotland Office, providing comprehensive information on child care broken down into geographical areas. The Department provides consultation documents, forms and leaflets over the internet. Forms available for downloading include the Retirement Pensions application form and the Statutory Sick Pay/Incapacity Benefit claim pack; leaflets include "Approaching Retirement" and "Babies and Children".

Data Matching

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the compatibility of his Department's data matching with respect to benefit fraud with Article 8 of the Human Rights Act 1998; what representations he has received on this subject; and if he will make a statement. [119531]

Mr. Rooker: This Department conducts data matching exercises, including services provided for local authorities, primarily to prevent and detect crime or where they are needed to provide important assistance in the proper administration of the Department's functions and the protection of public funds.

In October 1998, we published a "Code of Practice for Data Matching" in consultation with the then Data Protection Registrar. The code sets out the safeguards, including procedural safeguards, which must be followed in data matching activity under the code. We believe that these safeguards and the processing itself conform with Article 8 of the European Convention of Human Rights (and the Human Rights Act 1998) and the Data Protection Act 1998.

We have not received any representations about the Human Rights Act and the Department's data matching activities.

Children in Poverty

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children were living in poverty in Shrewsbury and Atcham on (a) 1 May 1997 and (b) the most recent date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [119468]

Mr. Bayley: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave him on 20 March 2000, Official Report, columns 453–54W.

The estimates in the answer provided on 20 March are the most recent available with the exception of estimates of the numbers of dependants aged under 16 included in Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance (income-based) claims. Figures for February 1997, the nearest date prior to 1 May 1997, and November 1999, are given in the table.

Number of dependants under age 16 included in Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance (income-based) claims for Shrewsbury and Atcham

	Thousand
February 1997	2.9
November 1999	2.0

Notes:

1. Numbers are taken from the Income Support/Jobseeker's Allowance Statistics Quarterly Enquiries for February 1997 and November 1999, which are point in time surveys based on a 5 per cent. sample of Income Support/Jobseeker's Allowance claimants.
2. The figures include the unemployed who until 1996 were included in Income Support caseloads. Income Support for the unemployed was replaced by income-based Jobseeker's Allowance from October 1996.
3. Numbers are based on sample cases and will therefore be subject to sampling error.
4. Numbers have been rounded to the nearest hundred and expressed in thousands.
5. The local authority district is assigned by matching postcodes against the relevant 1997 version 1 and 1999 version 2 postcode directories.

Communication Aids

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assistance his Department can give to parents of children with communication difficulties for the provision of voice output communication aids; and if he will make a statement. [119230]

Angela Eagle: The Department's Social Fund provides for one-off payments by way of grants or interest-free loans to people who are receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance. These payments are intended to cover a variety of essential household items. The Social Fund does not meet special educational needs because it does not duplicate provision made by other Government Departments.

Child Support Agency

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the CSA differentiates between absent parents and non-resident parents for the purposes of calculating payments. [119571]

Angela Eagle: Under the Child Support Act 1991, "absent parents" are defined as parents who do not live in the same household with their children. However, many parents who do not live with their children have regular contact with them, they are not in fact absent from their children's lives. Therefore under new legislation, currently before Parliament, the term "absent parent" will be replaced by the term "non-resident parent". In practice, there is no difference between an absent and non-resident parent in the calculation of child maintenance liability.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the CSA maintenance payment is calculated as a sum to be spent directly on the children concerned; and to what extent it includes a payment to the custodial parent for looking after the children. [119569]

Angela Eagle: The basis of the current, complex maintenance calculation is the maintenance requirement, which is intended to represent the basic amount that is needed to support the child. Where the qualifying child is aged 16 or less, the maintenance requirement includes an age-related premium to reflect the fact that a child needs someone to care for them.

The complexity of the current formula makes it difficult for both parents to understand how maintenance has been worked out. In the new child support scheme, maintenance will be calculated according to the number of qualifying children. There will be no separate allowance for the cost of caring for the child.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures the CSA takes to ensure that money paid to the custodial parents for child support is spent on the child. [119568]

Angela Eagle: The Child Support Agency's (CSA) role is to establish maintenance liability and to calculate and collect child maintenance. It is for the parent with care to decide how best to use the money paid to support and care for her children: the CSA is not equipped to police family expenditure.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what powers the CSA has to check a parent's statement of income. [119573]

Angela Eagle: The current child support calculation requires a wide range of information to be obtained, including details about both parents' income. The current scheme can be frustrated by parents who fail to produce the information required. Parents may also provide false information, which can result in an incorrect assessment of liability.

If the Child Support Agency cannot obtain information about earnings from the parent, they will contact the employer for the details. If the information is still not provided, a child support inspector can arrange to visit the employer. Currently there is no penalty for failure to provide information, but it is an offence to obstruct an inspector. For self-employed cases, the Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999 gives the Child Support Agency access to information about earnings held by the Inland Revenue if all other measures have failed.

The new child support scheme will require substantially less information. Liability will be based only on the non-resident parent's income and the number of children for whom he is responsible. However, to ensure that this information can be obtained in all cases, two new criminal offences are being introduced in the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill, which is currently before Parliament, for failure to provide information, or misrepresentation of facts. The offences will apply to anyone who fails to provide information or gives false information to the Child Support Agency, for which there will be a fine of up to £1,000 on conviction.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances the CSA does not require non-resident parents to pay 25 per cent. of their income to the CSA. [119572]

Angela Eagle: Under the present scheme, non-resident parents can be assessed to pay up to 30 per cent. of their net income in current child maintenance. However, the specific percentages will vary in individual cases. Liability is assessed on the basis of a complex calculation taking account of a variety of factors, including housing costs and the circumstances of the non-resident parent's second family. Parents who owe arrears of maintenance may be required to pay up to 40 per cent. of their net income in a combination of current maintenance and arrears.

Under the new child support scheme, maintenance assessments will be based on a simple percentage of the non-resident parent's net income: 15 per cent. for one child, 20 per cent. for two, and 25 per cent. for three or more children. Allowance will be made for children in the non-resident parent's second family, for shared care arrangements if the non-resident parent has the child to stay for more than 52 nights a year, and for those on a low income. If the non-resident parent owes arrears, he may be asked to pay an extra 5 per cent. of his net income.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what account the CSA takes when calculating maintenance requirements of money paid by the non-resident parent towards their children's maintenance. [119574]

Angela Eagle: Liability to pay child support maintenance usually begins on the day that the non-resident parent is told about the application for a maintenance calculation. However, there can be some delay between this date and the date the maintenance calculation is completed. Voluntary payments made by the non-resident parent during this period can reduce any arrears that have built up. But voluntary payments are not defined and currently have no statutory basis, which means that the Child Support Agency uses discretion in what might be considered an acceptable payment towards child maintenance. New legislation, currently before Parliament, will give statutory recognition to such payments.

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the new formula for calculating maintenance assessments for the Child Support Agency; and on what date the new formula will come into force. [119752]

Angela Eagle: We intend to introduce the new child support scheme for new cases by April 2002. Existing cases will be transferred at a later date, once we are sure that the new system is working well.

In the new child support scheme, the amount of child maintenance to be paid will be based on a simple percentage of the non-resident parent's net income. The basic rate will be 15 per cent. for one child, 20 per cent. for two and 25 per cent. for three or more. The amount of maintenance will be reduced if the non-resident parent shares the care of the child for 52 nights a week or more a year, has a second family or if his income is low. And either parent will be able to apply for a variation in liability to reflect truly exceptional circumstances.

The White Paper "A new contract for welfare: Children's Rights and Parents' Responsibilities" (Cm 4349) sets out the detailed arrangements and contains tables showing what the basic liability will be at different levels of income.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what his Department's policy is on (a) advertising and (b) acknowledging company sponsorship on the websites of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies; which companies (i) have placed advertisements and (ii) are acknowledged as sponsors on those websites; how much revenue has been received for each financial year since 1997 from such advertisements and sponsorship; and if that revenue has been retained within the budget of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies. [119545]

Angela Eagle: This Department's policy is to follow the guidance on advertising given in the Framework policy and guidelines for the use, management and design of public sector websites, laid down by CITU (Central Information Technology Unit).

This Department does not presently carry advertising on its websites.

The Appeals Service, which is one of the Department's Agencies, does have a list of links to commercial legal sites which are considered most useful to those that may use the site but these links are not there on a basis of any commercial agreement.

Guillain-Barré Syndrome

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the eligibility for disability benefit of people suffering from (a) the effects of Guillain-Barré syndrome and (b) long-term disability produced by Guillain-Barré syndrome. [119777]

Mr. Bayley: People with Guillain-Barré syndrome are eligible for Social Security benefits on the same basis as people with other disabling conditions.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people suffering from the (a) effects of Guillain-Barré syndrome and (b) long-term disability produced by Guillain-Barré syndrome were awarded disability living allowance in each year since 1997. [119778]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Schools Funding

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that local education authorities are able to provide the necessary matched funding to enable schools to take advantage of money provided through the standards fund. [117648]

Ms Estelle Morris: The requirement for local education authorities to contribute to the Standards Fund was allowed for in the 5.4 per cent. increase in education Standard Spending Assessment (SSA) for 2000–01. Most authorities have accepted in full the Standards Fund grants. In addition, Northamptonshire's schools will receive over £4 million as its share of the £290 million funding increase announced in the budget: from £3,000 for the smallest primary school, to £50,000 for the largest secondary school, to use as they see fit to drive up standards further. They will also benefit from their share of the £50 million extra in grant which we announced in November for general support of school budgets.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans he has to have transferred to his Department from the DETR, funding arrangements for schools in England; and if he will make a statement; [119686]

(2) what plans he has to fund schools directly from his Department; and if he will make a statement. [119685]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Government intend to issue a Green Paper in the summer which will address the future funding of local authorities, including options for the funding of education.

Connexions Service

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current annual level of public expenditure on the statutory and voluntary youth services, guidance and educational welfare; and if he will make a statement on the amount of such spending to be (a) retained, (b) transferred to the ConneXions service and (c) made available to ConneXions as additional public expenditure. [117245]

Mr. Wicks: [holding answer 3 April 2000]: The provisional figure for the level of expenditure by local authorities in England on the Youth Service in 1998–99, the latest year for which figures are available, is £267 million. It includes grants and services to the voluntary youth sector from local authority youth services. In addition, the Department for Education and Employment provides £4 million per annum to the voluntary youth services through the National Voluntary Youth Organisation Grant Scheme. Public expenditure on the careers service in England, in 1999–2000, is expected to be £228 million and on the New Start initiative, £5.8 million. Public expenditure on the Educational Welfare Service in England, in 1999–2000, is expected to be £80.5 million.

The resources for the ConneXions Service will come from the bringing together of existing resources devoted to youth support and guidance. The whole of the current careers service and New Start budgets will be routed through the ConneXions Service. Other services will contribute to ConneXions in practical ways without a formal transfer of resources.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is his estimate of the cost of the human resource audit referred to in Chapter 6 of the paper, "ConneXions"; [119277]

(2) when he expects to (a) commence and (b) complete the audit of the human resource implications of existing and additional advice and support services provided by his Department and other agencies, referred to in Chapter 6 of the paper, "ConneXions". [119276]

Mr. Wicks: Following the publication of the "ConneXions" document, officials from a number of Government Departments are currently undertaking an audit of the human resource implications of a range of new and existing advice and support services for young people. This study will inform the ConneXions Inter-Departmental Ministerial Group's strategy for implementing the Service and the Year 2000 Spending Review.

The estimated cost of consulting with external partners, including the cost of a specialist consultant, is £15,500.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many persons he expects to be employed in the (a) ConneXions Service National Unit and (b) ConneXions Partnerships at local learning and skills council level following the full implementation of the ConneXions Service. [119260]

Mr. Wicks: The ConneXions Service National Unit will largely be staffed by existing civil servants from a range of Government Departments but will also draw on secondees from the voluntary, youth and private sectors where appropriate. The structure of the new National Unit, including the staffing complement, will be for the new Chief Executive to determine when appointed.

At local Learning and Skills Council level, staffing will be a matter for determination by local ConneXions Partnerships.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for the training of learning mentors and personal advisers in the ConneXions Service. [119264]

Mr. Wicks: The ConneXions Service will be delivered through a network of Personal Advisers—who, in the school setting, will be known as Learning Mentors. This emerging new profession will be supported by a comprehensive training programme to ensure that those moving into the Personal Adviser role have the appropriate skills and knowledge for the job. We will shortly be consulting widely on the structure of the professional and training framework for Personal Advisers.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many officials in his Department are engaged in the implementation of his proposals for learning mentors. [119263]

Mr. Wicks: For the implementation of the current programme of Learning Mentors within Excellence in Cities areas, three officials within DfEE are employed full time. A number of others are involved in the wider development of Excellence in Cities.

My Department also contains a team dealing with professional formation issues within the ConneXions Service. These issues include the role and training of Personal Advisers, who, in a school context, will be similar to Learning Mentors. The team contains six members.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what his timetable is for the implementation of his proposals in respect of personal advisers in the ConneXions service. [119268]

Mr. Wicks: There will be a phased introduction of the ConneXions service from April 2001 over a two to three year period. This will allow time to recruit and train the staff needed for the service. It is expected that in the initial stages of implementation the majority of personal advisers will be drawn from existing careers service and youth service practitioners, along with others from a wide range of backgrounds in the voluntary, public and private sectors with the necessary experience and aptitude to work effectively with young people.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate he has made of (a) the start-up costs, (b) the running cost in each of the next three years and (c) the annual running cost following full implementation of the learning mentor scheme of the ConneXions service; [119275]

(2) which partners he expects to pool resources currently devoted to youth support and guidance in order to fund the ConneXions service, referred to in paragraph 6.4 of the paper, ConneXions; and what estimate he has made of the resources he expects each such partner to make available. [119278]

Mr. Wicks: The ConneXions strategy document, "ConneXions: The best start in life for every young person" sets out the key services that will contribute to the ConneXions service. These will include careers services, youth services, Youth Offending Teams, the Educational Welfare Service, Learning Mentors and Care Leaver Personal Advisers.

The whole of the current careers service budget, and also the budget for New Start, will be routed through the ConneXions service. Public expenditure on the careers service in England, in 1999–2000, was planned to be £228 million, and on New Start £5.8 million. Other partners will be expected to contribute to the ConneXions service the appropriate parts of their existing support services for young people, but funding will not be formally transferred to the new service. As a first step, local ConneXions partnerships will be mapping current provision and auditing existing resources as well as local needs. This will inform local delivery plans and decisions about the speed of implementation of the service. Once the information is available, we will be clearer on the resources local partners can make available, the level of start up costs, and the build up of running costs. We are also considering what additional resources will be needed and can be made available as part of the Government's Year 2000 Spending Review.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many personal advisers will be required for the full implementation of the proposals in the paper, "ConneXions"; [119265]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of learning mentors who will be required for the full implementation of his proposals for the ConneXions service; [119273]

(3) what estimate he has made of the cost of training enough personal advisers to implement fully the ConneXions service; [119267]

(4) what plans he has for the identification and recruitment of learning mentors for the ConneXions service; [119271]

(5) what estimate he has made of the number of persons who will be recruited as personal advisers in addition to persons already employed in the support and guidance of young people in order to fully implement his proposals for the ConneXions service. [119262]

Mr. Wicks: We are currently examining the precise numbers of personal advisers required by the ConneXions service—who, within schools, will be known as Learning Mentors, based on the needs of different groups of young people. Piloting of the service, which has just started, will provide useful information on the operation of the personal adviser, caseloads and numbers needed.

It is expected that in the initial stages of implementation the majority of personal advisers will be drawn from existing careers service and youth service practitioners, along with others from a wide range of backgrounds in the voluntary, public and private sectors with the necessary experience and aptitude to work effectively with young people.

We will ensure that sufficient resources are available to train people moving into the role of personal adviser. A comprehensive training programme will be put in place to ensure that personal advisers have the appropriate skills and knowledge for the role and meet agreed standards for the profession. To help this process we will shortly be consulting widely on the structure of the professional and training framework for personal advisers.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has for the vetting of learning mentors. [119274]

Mr. Wicks: For Learning Mentors in the Excellence in Cities programme, as with any school employee, authorities and schools should conduct all necessary background and other checks to verify the suitability of those applying to work with children and young people.

ConneXions Partnerships will be required to ensure that personal advisers employed within the ConneXions Service have met recruitment specifications. These include: ensuring that personal checks including criminal background checks have been completed prior to employment; that they have attended or agreed to attend appropriate training at a recognised centre offering approved personal adviser foundation training; and that they work effectively in the role of personal adviser to the standards agreed for the role including, for example, the practical application of equal opportunities and diversity.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many meetings he has held with proposed external partners in the Connexions Service. [119270]

Mr. Wicks: My fellow ministers and I have had a substantial number of meetings with proposed external partners in the ConneXions Service. There have also been frequent meetings at official level.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on what dates the Inter-Departmental Ministerial Group on the Connexions Strategy has met; when it next plans to meet; and if he will list the members of the group. [119269]

Mr. Wicks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has chaired two meetings of the "Bridging The Gap" Ministerial Steering Group at which the ConneXions Service—a central part of the overall ConneXions Strategy—was one of the key areas for discussion. The meetings were held on 28 September 1999 and 8 November 1999. In addition to my right hon. Friend, the members of this group are: my noble Friend the Minister of State, Department for Education and Employment; the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State responsible for Lifelong Learning; my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, North (Mr. Wicks); the Financial Secretary to the Treasury; the Minister of State, Home Office; the Minister for the Arts; the Minister of State, Department of Health; the Minister for Local Government and the Regions; the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security; the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales; special advisers from the Prime Minister's office and my Department; and officials from the Social Exclusion Unit. In addition I have held a number of bilateral meetings about the ConneXions Service with other Government Departments.

Senior officials from across Government have met on 16 occasions since November 1999 to consider the arrangements for introducing the ConneXions Service. Implementation issues are now being overseen by an inter-Departmental ConneXions Group which will meet for the first time shortly.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultations he has carried out with parents regarding personal advisers in the ConneXions Service. [119261]

Mr. Wicks: Personal Advisers will work with parents and carers to ensure that young people receive the right information, guidance and support at the right time. It is therefore important that we involve them in the development of the ConneXions Service. We have already sought young people's views through a range of consultation methods and we aim to do the same with parents and carers as the ConneXions pilots are rolled out. This will ensure that the service supports parents in their vital role.

Departmental Circulars

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) consultation documents, (b) regulations, (c) revised and corrected regulations, (d) guidance notes, (e) requests for statistical information in addition to form 618G and (f) letters from Ministers, were sent to local education authorities by his Department between April 1996 and April 1997. [118277]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 7 April 2000]: Between April 1996 and April 1997 this Department sent local education authorities the following:

Teachers (Training Grants)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what factors underlay his decision to exclude Independent School Council schools from the ICT Training Grants scheme for teachers. [118659]

Mr. Wills: National Lottery funding for ICT training is not available to teachers in the independent sector because of the need to maintain a viable programme within the limited Lottery money available. The basis on which the New Opportunities Fund funds the training programme was set out in their Policy Directions, copies of which are available in the Libraries of both Houses. The Department is currently exploring ways in which the independent and state sector can work together in order to spread good practice in the use of ICT training.

Church Schools

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to amend the regulations governing the criteria under which church schools can veto school closure plans proposed by local education authorities. [119252]

Ms Estelle Morris: Under Schedule 6 to the School Standards and Framework Act 1998, School Organisation Committees and Adjudicators are required to have regard to any guidance given by the Secretary of State when deciding whether or not to approve statutory proposals for changes to schools. The guidance on statutory proposals says that, in deciding proposals to close or reduce the capacity of denominational schools, care should be taken to consider the effect that this will have on the balance of denominational and non-denominational provision. Where the local School Organisation Committee cannot reach a unanimous decision on a proposal, it is passed to a schools Adjudicator to decide. The guidance also says that, where the relevant Church group on the School Organisation Committee has voted against the closure of a denominational school, the Adjudicator should not take a decision that will, when taken with any other related changes, reduce the proportion of such denominational places within an LEA area. We have no plans to amend this aspect of the guidance.

Capital Allocations (Cleethorpes)

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the total capital allocation since May 1997 to each school in Cleethorpes constituency; and if he will break down these capital allocations by category. [119469]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is contained in the table.

remove surplus places from schools in the Cleethorpes constituency, the local education authorities (LEAs) are not obliged to use the credit approval for those schools.

Other capital allocations have been made to the LEAs covered by the Cleethorpes constituency, but it is for the LEAs to decide which schools will benefit from the use of those allocations.

General Teaching Council

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on the minimum qualifying period of two years teaching experience for candidates seeking election to the General Teaching Council. [119706]

Jacqui Smith: The Secretary of State has not received any representations on the minimum qualifying period to stand for election to the General Teaching Council.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the minimum information required from candidates seeking election to the General Teaching Council; and if he will make a statement. [119705]

Jacqui Smith: The General Teaching Council for England (Constitution) Regulations 1999 set out the eligibility criteria for candidates. Teachers seeking election must have qualified teacher status; must have been employed as a teacher in the 12 months preceding the election and for an aggregate of two years in the five years preceding the election; and must also not be prohibited from teaching. The electoral scheme required candidates, their proposer, seconder and five others to be on the GTC's electoral roll and in the same constituency as the candidate.

Mental Health Awareness

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to raise awareness of mental health issues among school children. [119578]

Jacqui Smith: The National Healthy School Standard (NHSS), which was launched last October, has as one of its specific themes 'Emotional Health and Wellbeing', which will include awareness of mental health issues.

The NHSS will be delivered as an integral part of the Personal, Social and Health Education (PSHE) framework in schools. Over the next two years, through the Standards Fund, £5.7 million each year is being made available by DfEE and DH to LEAs to fund the running of Health Education Partnerships, which in turn should assist schools in the attainment of the National Healthy School Standard. £19,000 (£2.85 million nationwide) was made available to every LEA last year to help set up these partnerships.

Teachers' Pay (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will take steps to amend the law to enable the National Assembly for Wales to pursue a policy of not basing teachers' salaries on an assessment of pupil performance; and if he will make a statement. [119583]

Ms Estelle Morris: Teachers' pay is not currently devolved and there are no plans to change this. We believe that while there remains a single pay structure, the same opportunities must be available to teachers in both England and Wales to access the new pay levels.

Learning and Skills Council

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in which national newspapers advertisements for appointments to the Learning and Skills Council were placed. [119700]

Mr. Wicks: The posts of Chair and Chief Executive of the proposed Learning and Skills Council, and the Chairs and Executive Directors of the Council's 47 local arms were advertised in the week commencing 2 April. Advertisements for these appointments were placed in the Sunday Times, the Mail on Sunday, the Sunday Telegraph, the Observer, the Daily Telegraph, the Guardian, the Financial Times, the Times, the Independent, the Times Education Supplement, the Times Higher Educational Supplement, the Eastern Eye/Caribbean Times, the Nation, the Asian Times/New Nation, and the Voice.

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to appoint the Chair and Chief Executive of the proposed Learning and Skills Council. [120233]

Mr. Wicks: The Learning and Skills Bill has received its Second reading in the Commons, thereby indicating Parliamentary support for the principle of the Bill. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has started the recruitment process for the national Chair and Chief Executive and the local Chairs and Executive Directors of the proposed Learning and Skills Council. The successful candidates will not formally be appointed to these positions until after the Bill has received Royal Assent.

Parliamentary approval for expenditure on the Learning and Skills Council will be sought in the Summer Supplementary Estimate for the Department for Education and Employment Vote (Class 1, Vote 1). Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £1,285,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

This expenditure is required to meet the cost of recruiting for key posts, together with preparatory work on information and business systems, premises and personnel arrangements for future Learning and Skills Council staff. Its urgency arises from the need to have both the Chair and Chief Executive in place as soon as possible after Royal Assent to ensure that public funds are properly protected and to enable their full participation in the planning process to ensure rapid progress to the establishment of the Learning and Skills Council in April 2001.

University Constitutions

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to consult on changes to universities' constitutions and to reform the visitorial system of disputes resolution in old universities; and if he will produce a timetable. [119678]

Mr. Wicks: The Government have asked the Higher Education Funding Council for England to ensure that all higher education institutions have in place student complaint procedures which meet the requirements set out in the report of the Dearing Committee. I understand the Quality Assurance Agency for Higher Education will shortly launch a Code of Practice on student appeals and complaints which will make reference to university governance. The Government will consider the position in the light of the Code of Practice and discussions with representative bodies.

Special Schools

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary and (b) secondary special schools have been placed on special measures in each year since 1995 in each local education authority. [119538]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 17 April 2000]: The number of primary and maintained and non-maintained special schools which have been placed in special measures in each local education authority area since 1995 is contained in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries. While there are some special schools which cater for pupils wholly of primary school age, or wholly of secondary school age, there are many others which cover age ranges bridging part or the whole of the primary and secondary phases. The table does not distinguish between special schools covering the wide number of possible different age ranges. The figures in the table represent those primary and maintained and non-maintained special schools which were inspected by Ofsted during that academic year and deemed to be in need of special measures. In total, of the 609 primary schools that have been in special measures, 382 have so far come out and 41 closed. Of the 122 special schools that have been in special measures, 66 have so far come out and 26 closed.

Local Learning Partnerships

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the extent of current involvement by higher education institutions in local learning partnerships and on the future development of this involvement. [119613]

Mr. Wicks: Of the 101 Learning Partnerships now established across England, 67 directly involve higher education institutions (HEIs) as members while many others are engaging with HEIs in other ways (for example, through thematic or geographical working groups tackling specific local issues). The DfEE—alongside regional and local partners—is working to further improve links between Learning Partnerships and all those local and regional bodies with an interest in post-16 learning. I fully expect that to result in increased involvement of HEIs in the work of Learning Partnerships.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to develop performance indicators for the delivery of services by (a) local education authorities, (b) mainstream schools and (c) special schools to children with special educational needs. [119324]

Jacqui Smith: Education Development Plans and Ofsted inspections are used to monitor local education authorities. Annual performance tables are published for both primary and secondary schools. We are considering what if any further information could be used to measure the performance of LEAs and schools with children with special educational needs.

Adult Learning Inspectorate

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to appoint the Chair and Chief Inspector of the proposed Adult Learning Inspectorate. [120182]

Mr. Wicks: The Learning and Skills Bill has received its Second reading in the Commons, thereby indicating Parliamentary support for the principle of the Bill. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will shortly start the recruitment process for the Chair and Chief Inspector of the proposed Adult Learning Inspectorate. The successful candidates will not formally be appointed to these positions until after the Bill has received Royal Assent.

Parliamentary approval for expenditure on the Adult Learning Inspectorate will be sought in the Summer Supplementary Estimate for the Department for Education and Employment Vote (Class 1 Vote 1). Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £285,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

This expenditure is required to meet the cost of recruiting the Chair and Chief Inspector of the proposed Adult Learning Inspectorate together with preparatory work on information and business systems, premises and personnel arrangements for future Adult Learning Inspectorate staff. Its urgency arises from the need to have both the Chair and Chief Inspector in place as soon as possible after Royal Assent to ensure that public funds are properly protected and to enable their full participation in the planning process to ensure rapid progress to the establishment of the Adult Learning Inspectorate in April 2001.

Trade Union Funding

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what public funds are available to support the educational activities of trades unions; by whom the funds are supervised; and who monitors the outcomes of their use. [119427]

Mr. Wicks: There is a £12 million Union Learning Fund (over four years) to support union-led activity on learning in the workplace and in the wider community. It is administered and evaluated by officials within the Department for Education and Employment. There are no public funds specifically available for the educational activities of trade unionists.

Teaching and Higher Education Act 1998

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many employed young persons to date have taken advantage of the right to time off for study under the Teaching and Higher Education Act 1998. [119426]

Mr. Wicks: This information is not collected centrally.

FEFC and TEC Redundancies

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is his estimate of the cost of redundancy payments for staff of the Further Education Funding Council and individual TECs following the setting up of the national and local learning and skills councils; and if he will make a statement; [119683]

(2) how many staff will be made redundant from the Further Education Funding Council and individual TECs as a result of setting up national and local learning and skills councils. [119684]

Mr. Wicks: As the Explanatory Notes to the Learning and Skills Bill explain, we estimate that the new arrangements will lead to a reduction of between 15–20 per cent. in the total number of staff employed to administer post-16 education and training.

However, the transition to the new arrangements is taking place over a relatively long period. During this period there will be routine turnover of staff within the organisations affected as well as the opportunity to work with those organisations to manage staff numbers in such a way as to reduce the need for redundancies.

We are currently going through a detailed exercise with TECs and other organisations affected which will provide a clearer picture of numbers by the end of June. If redundancies are necessary, we are committed to working with the organisations involved to ensure that these are handled in an open, fair and sensitive way.

CABINET OFFICE

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the expenditure incurred by her Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of websites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if she will list for each website (i) the topics that have been covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [116203]

Mr. Stringer: My Department fully supports the e-government strategy and the Internet forms an integral part of our overall communications, publications and information strategy.

Details of the websites of the Cabinet Office, its Agencies and NDPBs, and the Central Office of Information are given in the table. The Cabinet Office has no executive NDPBs. The figures for its advisory NDPBs are included in the Department's total figures. As of 1 April 2000 the Cabinet Office only has one Executive Agency, the Government Car and Despatch Agency, so estimated expenditure for future years only covers Cabinet Office, GCDA and COI.

Government Computer Systems

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans the Government have to reduce the number of times each person's name and address is recorded in Government computer systems. [119475]

Mr. Ian McCartney: As part of our modernising Government agenda we are transforming the delivery of public services to fit in with the needs of those who use them. This means not only providing services in a way that fits in with people's needs but also getting rid of the paper-chasing bureaucracy of the past. We are currently developing a pilot that will be available later this year where people can record their change of address with different parts of Government electronically in one transaction.

Taskforces

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to her answer of 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 204W, if she will publish a list of taskforces created since 9 December 1999. [119541]

Mr. Stringer: We have given a commitment to publish full lists of taskforces and other reviews every six months. The next list covering the period to the end of April will be published in due course.

TREASURY

Petrol

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on how the price of lead replacement petrol is arrived at. [119658]

Mr. Timms: The price of petrol is a matter for the oil companies. The duty rate for Lead Replacement Petrol is currently 50.89 pence per litre.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to publish an environmental appraisal of the second Comprehensive Spending Review; and if he will make a statement. [118858]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 17 April 2000]: The White Paper reporting the outcome of the 2000 Spending Review will include an assessment of its implications for sustainable development, covering economic, social and environmental issues.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the horticultural industry on substituting a voluntary agreement on emission reduction for the Climate Change Levy. [119293]

Mr. Timms: Budget 2000 announced the Government's intention to offer a special package of support to the horticulture sector under the climate change levy, through setting aside part of the £50 million 'energy efficiency' fund to improve the energy efficiency of the sector and through the additional of thermal screens used in glasshouses to the list of technologies qualifying for the enhanced capital allowances scheme. And to further safeguard the competitiveness of the horticulture sector while these measures take effect, the Government intend to offer a temporary 50 per cent. discount to horticulture firms.

This package of support and the 50 per cent. discount are not conditional on the horticulture sector entering any form of emission reduction agreement with the Government. The Government have been listening carefully to the views of the horticulture industry as the design of the levy has been worked up and the Government intend to continue working with the industry to maximise the environmental benefits of this package of support by improving the energy efficiency of firms in this sector.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total carbon dioxide saving expected from the Government's original proposals for a climate change levy; and what is the saving expected from the present proposals. [119287]

Mr. Timms: The original estimate of the emission saving from the climate change levy, as set out in table 5.1 of the 1999 Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report, was around 1.5 million tonnes of carbon (MtC) a year by 2010. This estimate related to the pure price effect of the levy, and did not include any savings from the negotiated agreements with the energy intensive sectors.

The most recent estimate of the emission saving from the levy package as a whole, as detailed in table 6.2 of the 2000 Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report, is at least 5 MtC a year by 2010. This estimate now includes the savings from the negotiated agreements with the energy intensive sectors, and the savings from the refinements to the design of the levy that were set out in the 1999 Pre-Budget Report.

Offshore Financial Activity

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the sterling liabilities of offshore banking in (a) Jersey, (b) Guernsey and (c) the Isle of Man in 1999. [119239]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Kidgell to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 19 April 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on the sterling liabilities of the Channel Islands and Isle of Man. I am replying in the Director's absence.

Offshore residents are excluded from the definition of the UK for the purposes of BoP estimates. Therefore estimates of offshore banking financial liabilities are not made centrally.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the annual growth of UK residents' sterling deposits (a) onshore and (b) offshore to Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Man for each year from 1996. [119234]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Kidgell to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 19 April 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), has been asked to reply to your recent question on UK residents sterling deposits onshore and offshore. I am replying in the Director's absence.

The table below gives the annual percentage growth for UK residents sterling deposits with UK monetary financial institutions (UK banks and UK building societies). Estimates for UK residents sterling deposits with offshore monetary financial institutions are not made centrally.

End year	Percentage growth
1996	9.8
1997	14.3
1998	6.7
1999	2.4

ONS Sector and Financial Accounts

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on sterling M4 and the UK money supply of British money flowing out to offshore financial institutions in Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Man in the last three years. [119233]

Mr. Timms: Data on sterling M4 deposits at Channel Islands and Isle of Man institutions are published by the Bank of England in Table 8 of "Monetary and Financial Statistics". The stock data for sterling private sector deposits—the main component of M4—as at end December each year were:

	£ million
1997	19,543
1998	22,356
1999	23,755

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how monetary policy is coordinated between the United Kingdom, Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Man. [119240]

Mr. Timms: Although the authorities in the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man issue their own notes and coins, the currency used in these jurisdictions is sterling. As a result, the issue of monetary policy co-ordination does not arise.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who receives the seigniory profit on the note issues of (a) Jersey, (b) Guernsey and (c) the Isle of Man. [119238]

Mr. Straw: I have been asked to reply.

The authorities in Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Man issue their own notes. I understand that the profits from these note issues accrue respectively to the States of Jersey and Guernsey and to the Isle of Man Government.

Housing

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the scale of equity withdrawal from housing in 1998 and 1999. [119235]

Mr. Timms: The Bank of England estimate that mortgage equity withdrawal was -£1.1 billion in 1998 and £8.2 billion in 1999.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the value of the spectrum he plans to release for mobile phone use; and if he will make a statement. [119999]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

The total of the highest bids for each of the five third generation mobile phone licences was £21.67 billion at the end of the 139th round of bidding on 18 April.

Double Taxation Relief

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the loss of tax revenue if all those companies at present benefiting from rules to be changed by the Budget proposals on (a) double taxation relief and (b) controlled foreign companies were to move away from United Kingdom tax jurisdiction; [117398]

(2) what is the estimated yield from the Budget proposals for (a) double taxation relief for companies and (b) controlled foreign companies if all off-setting behavioural changes are ignored; [117400]

(3) what is the number of companies likely to be affected by the Budget proposals for (a) double taxation relief and (b) controlled foreign companies. [117399]

Mr. Portillo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received from business organisations concerning the proposed changes to double taxation relief and to controlled foreign companies outlined in his Budget report; how many such representations he has received; from whom such representations have been received; what estimates have been given by business organisations concerning the cost to United Kingdom-based multinationals of the proposed changes; and if he will make a statement; [117284]

(2) pursuant to the oral statement by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, of 27 March 2000, Official Report, column 121, if he will list the companies named in representations by Mr. Peter Wyman of PricewaterhouseCoopers as likely to be adversely affected by the proposed changes to double tax relief and to controlled foreign companies outlined in his Budget report; [117281]

(3) if he proposes to revise the estimated revenue to be produced by the changes to double taxation relief and to controlled foreign companies outlined in his Budget report following the representations made by business organisations; [117285]

(4) within what range of cost to individual UK-based multinationals the proposed changes to double taxation relief and to controlled foreign companies outlined in his Budget report will fall; [117280]

(5) pursuant to the oral statement by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, of 27 March 2000, Official Report, column 121, what representations have been made to the Treasury by Mr. Peter Wyman of PricewaterhouseCoopers concerning the proposed changes to double taxation relief and to controlled foreign companies outlined in his Budget report. [117282]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answers 3 April 2000]: The expected yield from the double taxation relief and controlled foreign company proposals is set out in Table A.13 of the 2000 Financial Statement and Budget Report. No other reliable estimates have been received. The extent to which companies will be affected will vary from year to year depending on a number of factors. The Government are determined to create the most competitive environment for business in the world. We have cut corporate tax rates to their lowest level ever but to keep tax rates low we cannot tolerate the erosion of the tax base by tax avoidance schemes and structures.

Children's Tax Credit

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the distributional impact (a) of the children's tax credit and Working Families Tax Credit of £32 per week for a second adult and (b) if the CTC were reduced so that the cost to the Exchequer was the same as a £32 credit for a second adult. [118202]

Dawn Primarolo: As given in the reply to my hon. Friend on 9 March 2000, Official Report, column 817W, based on the full year cost of the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC), the cost of including an additional £32 per week within the credits for all couples already in receipt of WFTC would be about £1.3 billion before taking into account additional take-up and other behavioural effects. If the overall costs to the Exchequer were to remain the same, a cost of this magnitude could absorb the funding for the children's tax credit (CTC).

The £32 per week second adult credit would benefit all couples in receipt of the WFTC equally, whereas the CTC would benefit all families with children under 16 by up to £8.50 per week.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 340W, if he will disaggregate the number of families claiming Family Credit and Working Families Tax Credit by (a) income deciles, (b) each £5,000 of household income and (c) families above and below half average household income. [118231]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 7 April 2000]: For the analyses of families with the Working Families Tax Credit, I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given on 12 April 2000, Official Report, column 160W. For Family Credit, the latest available estimates are for recipients in 1997–98. The distributions are given in the tables as percentages.

(a) Percentage distribution of families receiving Family Credit by quintile of net equivalised household income, 1997–98

Percentage

	Before housing costs	After housing costs
Bottom quintile	41	38
Second quintile	39	44
Third, fourth and top quintile	20	18

(b) Percentage distribution of families receiving Family Credit by £100 band of net equivalised household income, £ per week, 1997–98

Percentage

	Before housing costs	After housing costs
0 to £100	*	18
£100 to £200	63	68
£200 to £300	27	(12)
£300+	*	*

(c) Percentage distribution of families receiving Family Credit above/below half average net equivalised household income, 1997–98

Percentage

Below half average income	39	50

Notes:

1. The information comes from the "Household Below Average Income" (HBAI) data set for 1997–98, based on the Family Resources Survey, and relate to Great Britain.
2. The estimates are presented on household income both Before Housing Costs and After Housing Costs, in line with HBAI conventions.
3. All the estimates in the table relate to families in receipt of Family Credit, and are based on their incomes recorded in the survey, not at the time of claim. The are also based on incomes equivalised using the McClements scale. Equivalised incomes are equivalent to cash incomes for couples with no children. The results in table (b) are particularly sensitive to the choice of scale.
4. All the estimates are subject to sampling error. Groups have been aggregated due to small sample numbers. In particular, this has led to decile groups being aggregated to quintile groups in table (a). Results are not reliable for cells with small sample sizes: cells with sample sizes under 50 are marked with an asterisk (*). Results for cells based on samples of 50 to 100 benefit units are bracketed.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 340W, how many of those families claiming Working Families Tax Credit in each month since its introduction would have been entitled to family credit. [118232]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 7 April 2000]: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer the Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, my hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle), gave him on 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 340W.

Given the difference in income rules in relation to maintenance and the fact that it is not possible to isolate behavioural effects (such as the number of families who may have entered work or increased their hours because Working Families Tax Credit provides a more generous work incentive than Family Credit) it is not possible to determine whether individual Working Families Tax Credit recipients in each month would have been entitled to Family Credit.

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons it is necessary for claimants of working families tax credit who are paid monthly to provide more evidence of earnings than claimants who are paid weekly. [119739]

Dawn Primarolo: Working Families Tax Credit is based on a snapshot of a family's income immediately before the claim and is paid for a fixed period of 26 weeks. Therefore, it is necessary to ensure that the period over which normal earnings are considered is representative. For weekly-paid applicants, the set period is six weeks in the seven weeks immediately before the week in which the application is made. For monthly-paid people, the set period is the three months before the application. These periods should provide a representative picture in arriving at the applicant's normal earnings. Although monthly-paid staff are asked to provide evidence of pay over a three month period they need only provide three payslips whereas weekly-paid staff are required to provide six payslips.

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families have been awarded working families tax credit in each local authority area in London. [119829]

Dawn Primarolo: Up to the end of March 2000, there had been 76,200 awards made of the Working Families' Tax Credit (WFTC) in the London Government Office Region. Available figures by local authority are given in the table.

Local authority	Estimated number of WFTC awards made to end March 2000 [1]
Barking and Dagenham	2,100
Barnet	2,000
Bexley	1,400
Brent	3,100
Bromley	2,000
Camden	1,600
Croydon	4,000
Ealing	3,100
Enfield	2,900
Greenwich	2,800
Hackney	3,300
Hammersmith and Fulham	1,200
Haringey	2,500
Harrow	1,400
Havering	2,000
Hillingdon	2,100
Hounslow	2,600
Islington	1,800
Kensington and Chelsea	1,000
Kingston-upon-Thames	700
Lambeth	4,400
Lewisham	3,600
Merton	1,800
Newham	4,500
Redbridge	1,600
Richmond-upon-Thames	700

Local authority	Estimated number of WFTC awards made to end March 2000 [1]
Southwark	3,300
Sutton	1,800
Tower Hamlets	4,100
Waltham Forest	2,800
Wandsworth	2,300
Westminster and City of London[2]	1,700

[1] All figures are rounded to the nearest hundred. The estimates for constituencies in Great Britain are based on a 5 per cent. sample and are subject to sampling error. For example local authorities with 500 awards could be in the range 300 to 700.

[2] A single estimate is given for Westminster and the City of London as there are too few sample cases in the latter for a reliable estimate to be made.

Income Tax (Pensioners)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people over pensionable age in the UK paid income tax in 1999 [118835]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that the number of pensioners[1] who are liable to income tax in 1999—2000 is 4.0 million.

This estimate is based on the 1997—98 Survey of Personal Incomes and is consistent with the March 2000 Budget.

[1] Women aged 60 and over, men aged 65 and over.

Personal Data

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what items of personal data his Department routinely obtains from public utilities and other Government Departments for data matching exercises undertaken in his Department. [119529]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue obtains personal data, under its statutory information powers, from a variety of third parties and collates this data by reference to individual records. It does provide personal data, as permitted by Social Security legislation, to the Department of Social Security for data matching by that Department to prevent and detect crime; to check the accuracy of their information; or to protect public funds.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the compatibility of his Department's data matching with respect to benefit fraud and tax evasion with Article 8 of the Human Rights Act 1998; what representations he has received on this subject; and if he will make a statement. [119527]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue obtains personal data, under its statutory information powers, from a variety of third parties and collates this data by reference to individual records. It does provide personal data, as permitted by Social Security legislation, to the Department of Social Security for data matching by that Department to prevent and detect crime; to check the accuracy of their information; or to protect public funds.

The Inland Revenue has not received any representations on data matching and Article 8 of the Human Rights Act 1998.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what Code of Practice covers his Department's data matching activities; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [119528]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue obtains personal data, under its statutory information powers, from a variety of third parties and collates this data by reference to individual records. It does provide personal data, as permitted by Social Security legislation, to the Department of Social Security for data matching by that Department. This data matching is governed by their published "Code of Practice for Data Matching".

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what items of personal data, not related to PAYE arrangements, his Department routinely obtains from the London Borough of Waltham Forest; and if he will make a statement. [119530]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue obtains information from the London Borough of Waltham Forest under its statutory information powers. This information comprises all payments for services rendered to the borough, all payments made under grants or subsidies, all licences, registers and approvals and payments under leases and related obligations.

Online Services

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the services which (a) his Department and (b) the executive agencies responsible to his Department (i) provide online and (ii) expect to be deliverable online by 2002. [119434]

Dawn Primarolo: So that the Cabinet Office can published the spring 2000 report monitoring progress towards delivery of all Government services electronically by 2005 we are currently collecting data which will include our progress on delivering 25 per cent. of Government services electronically by 2002. I do not want to pre-empt that report, but I can say that we currently provide a range of services electronically that include:

Customs and Excise

(i) The following services are currently available electronically online (by Electronic Data Interchange—EDI)

Customs Exports and Imports declarations
Intrastat declarations
VAT EC Sales Listing declarations

Also available now, in the internet, are:

provision of departmental information via our website
Intrastat declarations
VAT return pilot (2,000 traders)

(ii) The following services are planned to be available online on the internet by 2002:

VAT return (full operation starting with 100,000 traders in January 2001)
VAT registration
VAT EC Sales listings
Climate Change Levy
Insurance Premium Tax
Customs (Third Country exports) declarations
Beer, wine, cider duty
Tobacco Products duty

Government Actuary's Department (GAD)

(i) The following services are currently available online and via the GAD website

I. Public access to GAD staff via external e-mail and for correspondence to clients.

II. Population Projections (1998)

III. Command Documents and Publications written by Government Actuary staff

IV. Portal to other Government Departments via open.gov.uk

V. Recruitment Details

VI. Contacts and Organisational Structure of GAD

Press Releases

(ii) The following services are planned to be available online via the Internet by 2002

Public access to Annual Report and Public Service Agreement
Public Sector Pension Services Catalogue
International Services Catalogue
Proforma Passport for contracting out of services
Best Practice Guidance
Marital Conditions Projections and Annual Life Tables
Desktop Internet Access for all staff
Remote e-mail access for all staff
Further Population Projections (2000 and 2002)
GAD Vacancy Notices and online application
The provision of bespoke Actuarial calculation software to clients (e-commerce) is currently under investigation.

Royal Mint

The Royal Mint has a website for its collector coin customers. In addition, and if you wish to expand, the following website facilities are offered:

(i) Current online facilities

Online ordering
Forum Facility (an open contributory facility relating to coinage)
Corporate information provision (history, annual report etc.)
Museum (information on the current museum collection)
General circulation coinage statistics
Chat facility (opportunity to talk to members of the Royal Mint and other coin enthusiasts)
Monthly competitions
e-mail based inquiry facility (order, product information etc.)
Contact via e-mail

(ii) Expecting to be delivered by 2002

Order tracking facility
Subscription e-mail newsletter

UK Debt Management Office

(i) Current: Website giving information on gilts policy announcements and publications

(ii) By 2002: Gilts database accessible via website

Possibly, personal investor access to the Bank of England's gilts brokerage service; and Bidding at gilts auctions (but cannot be certain)

National Savings

The National Savings Internet site currently offers product information and access to application forms for all products which can be printed and sent by post to National Savings.

National Savings aims to provide the following services online for all products (with the possible exception of the passbook savings account):

general information and inquiry fulfilment sales and account opening after sales service and information limited withdrawal services

Delivery of these services is expected to be available for customers before 2002.

Office for National Statistics (ONS)

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) currently manages/provides two websites:

The ONS website; which promotes the ONS and its products and services.

It provides sources and contacts for all the products we produce and services we provide; and the Government Statistical Service (GSS) website which offers free downloadable economic and social statistics via a database delivery system, ONS Press Releases, details of job vacancies and training with the GSS and carries promotions and links to other Government Departments' statistics.

The new National Statistics website, to go live in June, will be a redesigned amalgamation of both the previous sites. It will offer everything both sites already offer. In addition many publications will be available to view online with the option to purchase via e-commerce in place by the end of the year.

Further development and enhancement of the site will be led by research with users.

HM Treasury

The domestic Treasury has contact with the general public through its Publishing Unit, the Public Inquiry Unit and via Ministerial Correspondence, and with business via its procurement procedures. The Publishing Unit is responsible for the Treasury's Internet site, which already offers online access to many of its publications. It is also possible to e-mail the Public Inquiry Unit via a link on the public website. The system that deals with Ministerial Correspondence will be updated to cope with all forms of electronic communication, including e-mail, before 2002. The Treasury Procurement Unit is working closely with the Office of Government Commerce and plans to participate in the Government Shopping Mall and to pilot electronic tendering before 2002.

Inland Revenue

(i) The following services are currently available online:

By Electronic Data Interchange (EDI)

Electronic Lodgement Service (for approved agents to send their clients Self Assessment returns to the Revenue electronically. 300,000 returns for 1998–99 were received this way)

Employer Electronic Communication (for, predominantly large, employers to exchange PAYE and CIS forms and returns with the Revenue electronically)

On the Internet, via our website, are:

provision of departmental information and guidance

a range of forms for download and print,

Valuation Office 1995 and 2000 Non-Domestic Rating Lists online, with an online appeals facility

Capital Taxes Office, Tax-exempt Heritage Assets database registration facility for the new service which will allow individual taxpayers to send their tax return to Inland Revenue via the Internet within the next few weeks

Additional services planned to be available online by 2002 will allow a range of forms and returns to be sent to the Inland Revenue via the Internet

Self Assessment

Pay As You Earn (PAYE)

A number of other services, such as Corporation Tax, which will be delivered during 2002 are currently at the planning stage

Valuation Office

Targets in respect of key services to be delivered by 2002

Complaints and correspondence. Facility already enabled. The target is for 25 per cent. being received electronically by 2002. The recent implementation of Internet e-mail in all Valuation Offices and creation of the VOA website should ensure this target is, commensurate with the public's access to e-mail, easily met.

Rating List availability

The 1995 and 2000 rating lists are now available online via the Internet. There have been 2 million "hits" since January 2000

Rating appeals

Since April 2000 ratepayers and their advisers have been able to submit appeals electronically against the 1995 and 2000 rating lists. The target is that by 2002 40 per cent. of appeals are submitted this way. Critical to meeting this target is success in working closely with the surveying profession to ensure the numerous appeals they submit on behalf of clients are electronic.

Forms of Return

Prior to each quinquennial revaluation of non domestic properties up to 1.8 million notices requiring a return of information essential to the valuation process are issued.

The next 2005 revaluation will require forms being issued in early 2003. We expect to offer an electronic lodgement service with a target of 20 per cent. of forms being received this way.

Transfer of Rating and Council Tax Data to Valuation Tribunal Offices.

The VOA transfers large quantities of information in respect of appeals to the VTO's on a regular basis. Previously achieved in hard copy and then magnetic tape this process became electronic in October 1999.

Council Tax Lists and Appeals via the Internet

Government guidelines currently preclude publishing the Council Tax lists on the Internet. Consideration is being given to how to facilitate electronic lodgement of appeals and what the target should be.

Data transfer of lists and schedules to BA's

VOA frequently transfers significant quantities of data to Billing Authorities in the form of complete lists and schedules for Council Tax and Rating. Current media is hard copy, floppy disk or tape (23 million properties). With effect from 1 May 2000 this data transfer is available electronically.

Instructions

With effect from 1 June 2000 the key instructions used by VOA staff to carry out their responsibilities will be available online to the public

Telephone

Last year the Agency implemented a new telephone system which enables the public to ring any valuation office in the country at local call rates

Office of Government Commerce HQ

(i) OGC provides online information through its website

OGC are planning to have the infrastructure to enable departments to carry out online electronic procurement functions by 2002

PACE

Assumes that as the question is about services to the public, in which case a nil return for both (i) and (ii)

The Buying Agency

TBA currently provide an online catalogue and ordering facility for goods and services available through competitively tendered frameworks for use by buyers throughout the public sector.

The existing online ordering will be extended to include payment etc. before 2002

CCTA

The only service CCTA provides online to the public is the availability of the open.gov.uk access point to government websites. We have no plans for additional services by 2002.

We do provide online services to other Government organisations, (a) in terms of advice and guidance provided on the Virtual Foundation intranet site and (b) through our catalogue services and framework contracts for Government purchasers of IT goods and services. It is planned to expand these facilities by 2002.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what safeguards the Inland Revenue has in place to ensure that employers' annual packs are delivered before the start of a new tax year. [119339]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue includes in the mailing a number of seed packs addressed to its own staff to ensure the completion of the pack and the Royal Mail delivery times.

Royal Mail has its own quality assurance procedures. In addition, the two mailing contractors have strict quality assurance measures in place and the Inland Revenue sends in some of its own staff to check on the assembly and packing of the Annual Packs.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of employers' annual packs due to be sent out by the Inland Revenue for the new tax year had been dispatched by 4 April; and if he will make a statement on how the dispatch has been organised. [119341]

Dawn Primarolo: We understand there is a small problem in the order of 1 per cent. in the despatch of Employers' Annual Packs by 4 April 2000.

The Inland Revenue's IT partner—EDS—supplied Dataforce Group, Northampton, with name, address and reference details of some 1.2 million employers to whom an Annual Pack was to be issued. Dataforce Group personalised address carriers for each employer and enclosed 50 per cent. of these together with the other contents of Annual Packs, the other 50 per cent. being handled by Scotmail Ltd. of Glasgow. The Annual Packs were despatched by second class post. The Inland Revenue has three year contracts with both Dataforce Group and Scotmail, which have at least a further two years to run. These contracts were let in 1999 through the normal contract letting process, overseen by the Inland Revenue Contractors and Procurement Unit.

The Inland Revenue has outsourced the assembly and despatch of its Annual Packs since 1993.

The management and control of the contracts with Dataforce Group, Scotmail and Royal Mail in respect of employer packs, were handled by Inland Revenue, Business and Management Services Division in Shipley, West Yorkshire.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the delivery of Inland Revenue employers' annual packs in 2000 to date; and if he will make a statement. [119340]

Dawn Primarolo: Treasury Ministers receive representations on a wide range of subjects.

Tobacco Smuggling

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to limit tobacco smuggling via the port of Dover from the continent. [119581]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government recently announced a huge new investment of up to £209 million for HM Customs and Excise to tackle tobacco smuggling. Customs are appointing nearly 1,000 extra staff, a substantial number of whom will be at Dover. In addition, Dover will be included in the new national network of x-ray scanners.

Finance Bill

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which clauses in the Finance Bill were altered prior to its introduction so that their wording conformed to the aims of the Tax Law Rewrite project in respect of plain language. [119423]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17 April 2000]: Draftsmen always seek to write as clearly as possible, subject to the overriding requirements of accuracy and certainty. Where provisions in a Finance Bill amend past Finance Acts—as is often the case—the drafting has to take account of the structure and wording of the existing legislation.

In the case of the Finance Bill 2000, the draftsmen have also been able to take account of the draft legislation published by the Tax Law Rewrite Project and have, where possible, taken the Project's approach into account. Part 9 of Schedule 22 (on Tonnage Tax) is an example of this.

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 February 2000, Official Report, column 609W, what assumptions were made regarding entitlement to inherited SERPS in calculating the estimated balance in the National Insurance Fund at the end of 2001–02. [118935]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17 April 2000]: In calculating the estimated balance in the National Insurance Fund at the end of 2001–02 it was assumed that there would be a 100 per cent. entitlement to inherited SERPS if the spouse died in 2000–01 or 2001–02.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the National Insurance Fund balance at the end of each year from 2000–01 to 2010–11 is expected to exceed the minimum level recommended by the Government Actuary. [118936]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17 April 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to him on 16 February 2000, Official Report, column 608W, detailing estimates for 2000–01 and 2001–02. As I explained then, the figures are based on the difference between forecasts of receipts and expenditure. Small changes in these forecasts could have a substantial impact on the excess. Current projections suggest that existing policy with respect to the National Insurance Fund is consistent with long-term sustainability. However, given the sensitivity of the variables involved, precise long-term forecasts of any actual excess on the Fund reserves would be misleading.

Employment Tax Credit

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what method was used in calculating the cost of an employment tax credit given in paragraph 3.24 of the Treasury paper, "Supporting Work Through an Employment Tax Credit"; how much he estimates will be paid through the adult allowance portion of the working families tax credit in financial year 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [119053]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17 April 2000]: Detailed design of the parameters for an employment tax credit for people without children will be decided in due course prior to its introduction from 2003. The costing in paragraph 3.24 is based on an illustrative model which extends the adult credit in the Working Families Tax Credit to single people and couples with someone over the age of 25, working 30 or more hours, and with a higher rate for couples than for singles. It was estimated using household and income data from the Family Expenditure Survey and the Family Resources Survey.

It is not possible to provide a breakdown of expenditure in the Working Families Tax Credit by type of credit. The amount of award payable is reduced for families whose incomes are above the threshold, and this reduction is applied to the total value of all credits taken together.

Tax Returns

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was spent on issuing incorrect penalties for people who had filled in and sent off their tax returns on time for the 1998–99 tax year. [119737]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer from which budget the money was found to cover the cost of wrongly-issued penalties for 1998–99 tax returns. [119736]

Dawn Primarolo: The cost of incorrectly issuing around 5,000 penalty notices in respect of 1998–99 tax returns has been met out of the Inland Revenue's budget.

Smuggling

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when x-ray detectors for the use of customs officers will be introduced to combat smuggling. [119742]

Dawn Primarolo: It is expected the first scanner will be operational in November 2000. Additional scanners will be installed in the following months.

Small Businesses

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to stimulate investment in and expansion of small businesses; and what proposals he has to remove disincentives to the retention of profits for the purpose of reinvestment in small unincorporated businesses. [119779]

Dawn Primarolo: The recent Budget 2000 took further steps to boost investment in and expansion of small business. These measures form part of the Government's drive to raise productivity across the economy by encouraging enterprise development.

The measures to stimulate investment in small businesses included:

cuts in capital gains tax to create the most favourable environment Britain has ever seen for encouraging entrepreneurs and investment in small business;

an extra £100 million for a new £1 billion target "umbrella fund" for small scale venture capital investment across the regions over the next three to five years;

a new corporate venturing tax relief, designed to promote investment by larger companies in smaller enterprises, which can play a vital role in providing finance and other benefits to innovative small firms; and changes to the Enterprise Investment Scheme and Venture Capital Trusts will make the schemes more attractive to investors and boost the availability of venture capital for small higher risk trading companies.

The measures to encourage expansion of small businesses by reinvesting their own resources include:

reductions of the small company corporation tax rate from 23 to 20 per cent., and introduction this year of a new starting rate of corporation tax of 10 per cent. for the first £10,000 of taxable profits, with the benefit tapering away as profits rise to £50,000;

a new R&D tax credit designed to encourage investment in R&D by small and medium-sized companies; extending permanent enhanced first year capital allowances (at 40 per cent.) for small and medium-sized firms to encourage investment in plant and machinery;

introducing 100 per cent. capital allowances for small enterprises investing in IT equipment over the next three years.

The Government have no specific proposals to encourage the retention of profits for the purpose of reinvestment in small unincorporated businesses. However, reductions in income tax rates introduced in the 1999 Budget and the changes to capital allowances for small businesses in the Budget 2000 combine to boost the post-tax revenues of small unincorporated businesses, enabling them to invest more in their future growth.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his Department's policy is on (a) advertising and (b) acknowledging company sponsorship on the websites of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies; which companies (i) have placed advertisements and (ii) are acknowledged as sponsors on those websites; how much revenue has been received for each financial year since 1997 from such advertisements and sponsorship; and if that revenue has been retained within the budget of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies. [119544]

Mr. Timms: The Chancellor of the Exchequer's Department have not accepted advertising on, nor sponsorship for, their websites. Therefore, the Departments have not received income to retain.

However, if they were to accept advertising or sponsorship they would follow the practice laid down in the Government website standards and the standards that are applied to all other forms of publicity.

Euro

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 20 March 2000, Official Report, column 451W, on the euro, for what reason he did not refer to the "EuroTour" CD Rom; and what is his policy thereon. [119837]

Mr. Timms: The "Euro Tour" CD Rom was not produced by the UK Government nor was it funded by the Commission in the UK.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Mr. Tharcisse Muvunvi and Captain Valentine Strasser have been granted asylum within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [113142]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 7 March 2000]: I will write to the right hon. Member shortly.

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been relocated to Morecambe in the last 12 months. [120014]

Mrs. Roche: Local authorities have been responsible for accommodating destitute asylum seekers in the last 12 months. Therefore, we do not know the number of asylum seekers who may have been relocated to Morecambe in the last 12 months.

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy regarding the relocation of asylum seekers to seaside resorts through (a) voluntary and (b) compulsory dispersal schemes; and if he will make a statement. [120017]

Mrs. Roche: The Home Office has not dispersed any asylum seekers under the voluntary dispersal arrangements. This is an arrangement between local authorities.

Under the New Asylum Support Service arrangements, brought in on 3 April 2000, all areas of the United Kingdom will be expected to share the responsibilities of destitute asylum seekers. Those asylum seekers who are eligible for support are being dispersed on a fair and rational basis around the country. On this basis, destinations may include seaside resorts. However, it is our clear intention that no local authority should have a disproportionate share of the responsibility.

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his policy on consulting hon. Members on the relocation of asylum seekers to their constituencies; [120016]

(2) what information is provided to hon. Members representing constituencies in the North West of England from the National Asylum Support Service and the North West Regional Consortium about proposals for relocating asylum seekers in their constituencies. [120019]

Mrs. Roche: A letter will shortly be sent to Members of Parliament advising of the likely cluster areas for dispersal during the first three months of the new arrangements.

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans the National Asylum Support Service has to use the Grosvenor Hotel in Morecambe to house asylum seekers; [120015]

(2) what visits have been made by his Department's officials to Morecambe to look at potential properties to house asylum seekers. [120018]

Mrs. Roche: The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) has no plans to use the Grosvenor Hotel to house asylum seekers. NASS officials have not visited Morecambe to look at potential properties.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what means it is possible for a person with a well-founded fear of persecution in another country legally to enter the United Kingdom (a) when holding valid travel documents from the regime which they are fleeing and (b) in the absence of such documents. [120052]

Mrs. Roche: All asylum applications, irrespective of the applicant's method of entry, are considered in accordance with the criteria set out in the 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees. To be recognised as a refugee, a person must be outside his or her country of nationality and have a well-founded fear of persecution for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion.

As a matter of law, any asylum applicant who gains entry by material deception having presented a valid travel document or who enters without any documents or using false documents is an illegal entrant.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Maldon and East Chelmsford will receive a reply to his letter of 24 January to the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), concerning the proposal to house asylum seekers in the Maldon district. [119953]

Mrs. Roche: The information necessary to provide the answer has been subject to protracted inquiries. I apologise for the delay and a reply will be sent to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the amount (a) spent, (b) claimed and (c) reimbursed to each local authority in the United Kingdom, and in total, in relation to expenditure on asylum support in each six month period since 1 April 1999; how many payments to local authorities are (i) outstanding and (ii) in dispute; and if he will make a statement. [120055]

Mrs. Roche: Tables showing the amount spent, claimed and reimbursed to each local authority in the United Kingdom have been placed in the Library. It is not shown in six month periods; for the first eight months from 1 April 1999 to 5 December 1999, these costs were covered by a special grant report, for the four months from then until 31 March 2000, the costs were covered by grant paid under the Asylum Support (Interim Provisions) Regulations 1999. These are shown separately. In each case, the amount claimed is the amount that has been paid.

All claims received by the National Asylum Support Service so far have been paid, but all are still subject to audit.

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria must be met by those wishing to provide accommodation to the National Asylum Support Service. [120057]

Mrs. Roche: The accommodation provider will have a contract with the National Asylum Support Service. They will ensure that the accommodation is "suitable" in that it will be of an adequate standard; the relevant standard. The relevant standards are the same as those applied by local authorities when re-housing any homeless residents.

Private Security Industry

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to implement his proposals for regulation of the private security industry. [119566]

Mr. Charles Clarke: As we indicated in our White Paper last year, we intend to introduce legislation as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring forward proposals for better regulation of private investigators. [119567]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Our White Paper of last year, "The Government's Proposals for Regulation of the Private Security Industry in England and Wales", proposed that a new authority should be established to set and improve standards in the industry and to license those who work in the private security field. The White Paper proposed that licensing should apply to private investigators in due course.

Custody (Vulnerable Adults)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specialist training and standard protocols are made available to custody officers for handling persons with learning difficulties and other vulnerable adults. [119996]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Codes of Practice under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 require the presence of an appropriate adult whenever a mentally disordered person (including a person with learning difficulties) is being detained or questioned.

National Police Training (NPT) has developed a two-week training course for Custody Officers which is available for delivery by forces. The course, which includes the content of the provisions of the Codes of Practice, is regularly updated and revised. It is, however, essentially for Chief Officers to decide on the training to be undergone by their officers.

The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) recognise the value and importance of the custody officer training package, and continue to work with NPT in promoting the use of this course by police forces.

Regeneration-related Initiatives

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the number and value of (a) bids and (b) grants made in each of the last three financial years for which figures are available, for each (i) area-based and (ii) other regeneration-related initiative for which his Department is responsible; [119796]

(2) if he will list for each (a) area-based and (b) other regeneration-related initiative for which his Department is responsible (i) the amount budgeted and (ii) the total expended in each financial year for the planned lifetime of each initiative. [119788]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office is responsible for a number of initiatives which although not directly aimed at regeneration, contribute indirectly to the regeneration of deprived areas. The information requested on the sums already expended and planned budgets for the current and next financial years in respect of these initiatives is given in the table. Expenditure plans beyond March 2002 will be determined by the current spending review.

£ million

Initiative	Expended so far	Planned expenditure 2000–01	2001–02
Active Community Demonstration Projects	0.5	1.36	1.36
Drug Treatment Testing Orders[1]	1.75	20	40
Youth Justice Pilots[2]	1.3	0.1	n/a
Reducing Burglary[3]	12	4	Up to 42
Targeted Policing[3]	6.7	15.6	Up to 10.7
CCTV[3]	57.2	0.98	90
Locks for pensioners[3]	n/a	4.5	6.5

[1] Funding added to probation grant. Y1 figures is for pilot areas. Y2 figure is for pilot areas to continue until October when the programme will be rolled out nationally subject to ministerial decision.

[2] £22 million annually has been built into local funding settlements from April 2000 onwards to resource national rollout from June 2000 of the new youth justice measures under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. This figure reflects estimates in the November 1997 White Paper and the Financial Memorandum to the Crime and Disorder Bill.

[3] These initiatives are part of the Crime Reduction Programme, which has a three year budget including evaluation, development running and other overhead costs. Figures shown are what has been committed so far. Total available over three years to 2002 is £62 million for Reducing Burglary, £33 million for targeted policing, £153 for CCTV and up to £11 million for locks for pensioners (depending on take up). Figures of £4 million for targeted policing and 6 million for reducing burglary have been earmarked for evaluation.

[4] There is potential for a further £5 million spend on deferred bids.

The information requested on bids for and grants made in each of the last three financial years for each initiative, could not be collected in the time available. I will write to the hon. Member with the information shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Prohibited Weapons

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prohibited weapons are held by private individuals in England by permission of the Secretary of State. [119870]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Secretary of State's authority to possess prohibited weapons is only granted to those people who can show they have a genuine need to possess them, almost always to allow them to follow their trade or profession. Authorities are conditioned to limit holdings of prohibited firearms to the minimum number required and specify stringent security conditions under which the weapons are to be kept.

The vast majority of authorities are held by companies who either manufacture, sell or transport such weapons or who need them for research, development or testing purposes.

There are only five private individuals in England authorised by the Secretary of State to possess a total of 1,282 prohibited weapons. The vast majority of these are held by one person in one of the most comprehensive private collections of historic firearms in the world. The remaining firearms are held by a forensic firearms expert; a lecturer and technical consultant; the owner of a private museum; and a professional trapper of dangerous animals who is called in by the police to deal with such animals as escaped big cats.

PRIME MINISTER

Royal Prerogative

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions in the last three months when powers under the Royal Prerogative were exercised on advice from him. [118412]

The Prime Minister: As Prime Minister and Minister for the Civil Service, a number of powers under the Royal Prerogative are exercised on my advice. These include a range of public appointments, the conduct of foreign affairs and defence, and the management and regulation of the Civil Service. Records are not kept of the individual occasions on which such powers are exercised.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the use his Office, its agencies and public bodies will make of the powers relating to the authorised obtaining of communications data in Part I, Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill once the Bill is enacted. [119505]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 19 April 2000, Official Report, column 509W.

British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make it his policy in answering questions tabled by hon. Members to indicate in each case whether British Nuclear Fuels assisted in the preparation of the reply; [120047]

(2) if he will list each of the (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary answers he has provided since May 1997 which were based on information provided by British Nuclear Fuels. [120049]

The Prime Minister: Internal advice and the source of such advice is not made public in line with exemption 2 of the "Code of Practice on Access to Government Information".

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Bug

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a final statement on the impact of the Millennium Bug on Government Departments and Agencies. [120545]

Mrs. Beckett: I am pleased to report that, as I predicted in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington (Mr. Plaskitt) on 28 February 2000, Official Report, columns 135–36W, thanks to the hard work carried out in Government Departments and Agencies, the Leap Year date change had a negligible impact on them. Very few incidents were reported, and none of them had any impact on the public. Completed questionnaires will be placed, as usual, in the Libraries of the House and published on the internet, as had been the Government's practice throughout. This degree of openness and transparency has been one of the distinguishing features of the Year 2000 programme.

These will be the last questionnaires. My assessment of the impact of the Bug is that is has been very slight, both for central Government and for all the essential services in the national infrastructure. As I have said before, and repeat now, this success was not a matter of chance. Many people worked long and hard to bring it about. Government and businesses will continue to be vigilant throughout the year; but there is no longer any need for systematic monitoring.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal for Schools

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will announce the funding available following bids under the most recent phase of the New Deal for Schools; and if he will make a statement. [118336]

Jacqui Smith: Allocations to local education authorities were announced on 11 April 2000.

Pupil Behaviour

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what new measures he will make available to the city academies to help ensure high standards of behaviour by pupils; and if he will make a statement. [118679]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 11 April 2000]: The first City Academies to be established under the Education Act 1996 will be operating under funding arrangements agreed with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. They are due to be set up in the autumn of 2001. Detailed arrangements for managing behaviour will be for the schools themselves to determine, but they will have access to my Department's guidance on a range of behaviour issues.

School Sixth Forms

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the schools in England and Wales with sixth forms and the relevant LEA giving the number of pupils in year (a) 12, (b) 13 and (c) 14+ for each of the past three years and the cost per full-time student in each of these schools. [119690]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department does not publish information on maintained schools with a sixth form in England at individual school level. Information held at local education authority area is contained in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

The Department is currently collecting information on sixth forms in maintained secondary schools for January 2000 and this data will be published in a statistical volume in September.

For information on sixth forms in Wales, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Special Schools

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) maintained and (b) independent special schools there were in (a) 1970 and (b) 1999; how many children attending those schools came from broken homes; and what was the cost of the maintained special schools in both years. [119769]

Jacqui Smith: In 1999 there were 1,148 maintained special schools and 84 independent approved schools. Latest expenditure available for costs in relation to maintained special schools is for 1998–99 and shows a unit cost of £10,350 per pupil. We do not have comparable figures for 1970 and we do not collect information on the domestic arrangements for children who attend these schools.

Exclusions

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools were excluded in (i) 1970, (ii) 1980 and (iii) 1999; and if he will estimate how many of those came from broken homes. [119768]

Ms Estelle Morris: The number of permanent exclusions from maintained schools (except special schools) submitting returns under the voluntary national exclusions reporting system which covered the period from April 1990 to April 1992 was 2,910 in year one and 3,833 in year two.

Figures on permanent exclusions were first collected by my Department in January 1996 in respect of the academic year 1994–95 and have since been collected annually. Data on permanently excluded pupils' family background have not been collected. The figures currently available are shown in the following table.

Information on permanent exclusions for the academic year 1994–95, and academic years 1995–96 to 1997–98, were also published in two separate statistical releases, entitled "Permanent Exclusions from schools in England" on the 30 September 1998 and 16 June 1999, respectively. Both releases are available in the Library.

Provisional figures for permanent exclusions from schools in England for the academic year 1998–99 will be published in a statistical first release in May.

Maintained primary and secondary schools: Number of permanent exclusions in each academic year

	Primary	Secondary
1994–95[1]	1,365	9,197
1995–96	1,068	10,344
1996–97	1,575	10,463
1997–98	1,539	10,187

[1] The number of permanent exclusions was estimated to take account of a small number of schools that did not provide any information on their permanent exclusions

Statemented Children

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children were statemented in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1999; and how many came from broken homes. [119767]

Jacqui Smith: There are no figures available for 1970 and 1980; statements of special educational needs were only introduced after the implementation of the 1981 Education Act, in 1983. In 1999, 255,584 children had statements. We do not collect information on the domestic arrangements of children who have statements.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the education standard spending assessments per pupil for (a) England, (b) Devon, (c) Torbay and (d) Plymouth for the current financial year. [119855]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the education standard spending assessment (SSA) per pupil and the DfEE special and specific grant allocations per pupils for the areas requested for 2000–01. The special and specific grant totals includes the money for schools announced in the Budget on 21 March.

	SSA per pupil	Special/specific grants per pupil
England	2,782	145
Devon	2,649	160
Torbay	2,712	141
Plymouth	2,695	145

Performance and Assessment

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the mechanism used to calculate a school's improvement since its last inspection as reported in the Performance and Assessment report using a 7-point scale. [119920]

Ms Estelle Morris: PANDA (Performance and Assessment) reports are a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, Chris Woodhead. I have asked him therefore to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Websites

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what his Department's policy is on (a) advertising and (b) acknowledging company sponsorship on the websites of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies; which companies (i) have placed advertisements and (ii) are acknowledged as sponsors on those websites; how much revenue has been received for each financial year since 1997 from such advertisements and sponsorship; and if that revenue has been retained within the budget of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies. [119547]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 19 April 2000]: My Department follows the guidance on advertising given in the "Framework policy and guidelines for the use, management and design of public sector websites" published by the Cabinet Office, which recommend that:

> Government sites are permitted to carry advertising. In designing pages, Departments and agencies should ensure that advertisers' branding does not detract from the effectiveness and appearance of their own branding or that of the Government as a whole. Particular attention should be given to avoid any implication of endorsement of products or services or of contradiction between Government messages and those of advertisers.

My Department does not currently carry advertising or receive sponsorship for its websites and as a consequence no revenue has been received or retained within the budget of the Department. That is also the position, to the best of my knowledge, in relation to the websites of my Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies.

Local Information Availability

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps his Department is taking to improve the availability of local labour market, learning and skills information. [120484]

Ms Jowell: I am pleased to announce that we are funding an increase in the sample size of the Labour Force Survey in England of approximately 40,000 households per year to improve the availability of local labour market, learning and skills data in partnership with the Office for National Statistics. This was recommended in the second report of the Skills Taskforce and, in addition, will aid in the monitoring of adult learning targets and the monitoring of equal opportunities issues at the local level.

Teacher Training Agency

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the recently completed Financial Management Survey of the Teacher Training Agency. [120483]

Ms Estelle Morris: In accordance with the Government's policy of conducting quinquennial reviews of all non-departmental public bodies, my Department has undertaken a review of the Teacher Training Agency. I am today publishing the results of stage two of the quinquennial review, which comprised a financial management survey of the agency.

The survey report states that the agency has good levels of financial control and has in place effective organisation, finance and management structures and systems. The report's recommendations will help the agency to address the areas for relatively minor improvement which have been identified, and make best use of resources in taking forward its corporate objectives.

Copies of the financial management survey report are being placed in the Library of both Houses.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire will receive a substantive response to his letter of 16 February on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Holmes. [120020]

Mr. Wills: A reply was issued on Wednesday 19 April 2000.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many former grant maintained schools have (a) used and (b) exhausted their reserves since 1998. [120259]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on the public balances held by former GM schools at the beginning and end of the 1999–2000 financial year will not be published by LEAs until 30 September 2000. Information on their private balances is not collected by local authorities or central government.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many former grant-maintained schools have sought financial contributions from the parents; and how much has thereby been raised since 1998. [120260]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on this is not collected by central or local government.

School Meals

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to make regulations and issue guidelines about minimum nutritional standards in school meals; and if he will make a statement. [119465]

Jacqui Smith: We intend to lay regulations setting minimum nutritional standards for school lunches before the summer recess, and to make available guidance to school caterers this autumn. The regulations will come into effect in all maintained schools in April 2001. The standards have been developed in a practical non-prescriptive manner to ensure pupils receive good quality meals. Headteachers are now free to choose different suppliers for meals as a result of the Government's fair funding arrangements and these standards will help to ensure they are of consistent quality.

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which foodstuffs listed in the guidelines for minimum nutritional standards in schools contain iron, zinc, selenium and protein. [119502]

Jacqui Smith: We intend that the regulations setting minimum nutritional standards for school lunches will set food—rather than nutrient—based standards. We shall aim for workable standards which will not contain compulsory food items. Schools and local education authorities will be required to offer options from the four main food groups.

Supplementary guidance for caterers will offer advice and list those food items which best provide the nutrients which are particularly important in a young person's diet, such as iron.

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures he plans to put in place to monitor the operation of, and enforce the guidelines for, minimum nutritional standards in schools. [119501]

Jacqui Smith: Schools and local education authorities will be under a duty to comply with the regulations which will set out the new nutritional standards for school lunches. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will investigate any complaints that the standards are not being met and will if necessary issue a direction to ensure compliance with the statutory duties. Guidance on the regulations will include advice on monitoring of nutritional standards. Finally, the Department will be evaluating the impact of the nutritional standards over time.

SOCIAL SECURITY

MIRAS

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of the abolition of MIRAS on unemployed people with endowment mortgages; [119966]

(2) what plans he has to increase income support, or other state assistance, following the abolition of MIRAS, for unemployed people who are paying increased mortgage repayments as a result of mis-selling of endowment mortgages. [119965]

Mr. Bayley: There should not be any effect due to the loss of MIRAS. Benefit was recalculated from 6 April automatically, and customers received a notification from the Benefits Agency, informing them of the change to their benefit. An endowment mortgage does not affect the recalculation of benefit. The mortgage scheme only makes payments on the interest element of the mortgage.

Benefit Fraud Inspectorate

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the report on the Contributions Agency by the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate was published; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [119821]

Mr. Rooker: The BFI report on the then Contributions Agency was published in July 1999. A copy was placed in the Library and can also be found on the Department's internet site at www.dss.gov.uk/

State Pension

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of increasing the basic state pension in line with average earnings over the next five years in (a) Scotland and (b) the UK. [119868]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Estimate for Great Britain and Scotland

£ million

	Great Britain		Scotland
Year	Gross cost	Net cost	Gross cost
2000–01	350	250	50
2001–02	900	700	100
2002–03	1,650	1,250	150
2003–04	2,450	1,900	250
2004–05	3,300	2,600	300

Notes:

1. Costs are rounded to the nearest £50 million and are in 200 -01 benefit rates.

2. Costs include benefits whose rates are linked by statute to the rate of basic Retirement Pension.

3. Gross costs are estimated by the Government Actuary's Department. Costs net of means-tested benefit savings have been estimated using the Policy Simulation Model and PENSIM.

4. Net costs are not available for Scotland.

5. UK figures are not available.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time that (a) male pensioners, (b) female pensioners and (c) all pensioners have drawn the basic state retirement pension at five yearly intervals since 1970. [120053]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

The mean and median length of time in years since reaching pensionable age for the population of pensionable age

	Men aged 65+		Women aged 60+		Men and women aged 65+/60+

1998	9.2	8.1	13.4	12.4	11.9	10.6

Notes:

1. Estimates are supplied by the Government Actuary's Department and are based on population estimates supplied by the Office for National Statistics.

2. Figures relate to Great Britain.

3. Estimates are likely to overestimate average durations of State Retirement Pension claims, due to those who claim their pension after State pension age.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual cost in (a) Scotland and (b) the UK of raising the basic state pension to the level of the minimum income guarantee for (i) all pensioners, (ii) pensioners aged over 70 years and (iii) pensioners aged over 80 years. [119867]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Estimates for Great Britain and Scotland of the cost of raising the basic state pension to the level of the MIG in the year 2001–02

£ million

	All pensioners	Pensioners over 70	Pensioners over 80
Great Britain
Gross cost	5650	3750	1450
Net cost	4500	2850	950
Scotland
Gross cost	500	300	100

Notes:

1. Costs are rounded to the nearest to the £50 million and are 2000/1 benefit rates.

2. Costs do not include benefits whose rates are linked to the rate of basic Retirement Pension as the question asked for the pensioner costs only.

3. Gross costs are estimated by the Government Actuary's Department. Costs net of means-tested benefit savings have been estimated using the Policy Simulation Model.

4. Net costs are not available for Scotland.

5. UK figures are not available.

Reviews, Task Forces and Advisory Groups

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what (a) Reviews, (b) Task Forces and (c) Advisory Groups have been established by his Department since 22 February 1999; what is their membership; and what reports have (i) been published and (ii) are due to be published by (1) them and (2) other such bodies established before 22 February 1999. [119949]

Mr. Rooker: A table containing the information requested on Task Forces, Reviews and Advisory Groups has been placed in the Library.

Full lists detailing Government Task Forces and Review Groups will be published every six months. The next list covering the period to the end of April will be published in due course.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what performance targets he has set the Benefits Agency for 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [120588]

Angela Eagle: The targets we have set BA for 2000–01 are as follows.

They reflect our determination to reform the welfare state and to modernise the Social Security system to encourage work for those who can and provide security for those who cannot.

They underpin the Departmental Aim and Objectives set out in our Public Service Agreement.

Further information on BA plans for 2000–01 is contained in their business plan, which will be published on 5 May. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Targets for 2000–01 are:

Benefits Agency Secretary of State Targets 2000–01

Active Customer Focused Service Delivery

1. By March 2001 extend the scope of electronic service offered to the public, namely by providing a wider range of services available via the internet.

2. Seek to improve key customer services, set out in Benefits Agency Customer Charter, namely by providing:

   easy access to accurate benefit information; accurate and timely payments; and effective complaints handling.

3. Implement an action plan to establish a Performance Management Unit to reduce variations in performance within the Agency specifically, by March 2001:

   Improving the performance of the lowest performing offices;

   Improving the management information to underpin performance improvements.

4. Continue to work with the Employment Service, Local Authorities and private and voluntary sectors in 12 locations to pilot ONE.

5. From May 2000, introduce a take-up campaign, contacting at least two million pensioners and encouraging them to claim the pensioner Minimum Income Guarantee in order to make inroads into pensioner poverty.

6. By October 2000, deliver a national Retirement Pensions telephone claims service.

7. From November 2000, deliver improvements in computer produced notifications to Income Support customers.

8. By March 2001, work with others in the Department to develop, pilot and evaluate broad based measures of consumer focus and satisfaction, so we can introduce new arrangements during 2001.

Secure and Accurate Services

9. Reduce by 30 per cent. losses from fraud and errors in Income Support and Jobseekers Allowance by March 2007, with at least a 10 per cent. reduction by March 2002.

10. By March 2001, work with others in the Department to prepare the way for extending ACT as the normal method of payment in a programme starting from 2003 and concluding in 2005, so that a programme of customer research can be conducted; payment processes can be improved to better support Automated Credit Transfers.

Investing in our People

11. By December 2000, contribute to the reduction in public sector sickness by reducing absences by 10 per cent. from 1998 Public Service Agreement baseline levels.

12. By 31 March 2001, work with others in the Department to develop, pilot and evaluate new ways of measuring staff perception of the organisation to improve satisfaction and motivation.

Effective Management of Money

13. To recover £135 million in cases where benefit has been overpaid, contributing to the Department's overall target of £175 million.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the effect on housing benefit expenditure will be if social rents in (a) Scotland and (b) the UK were reduced by (i) 5 per cent. (ii) 10 per cent. and (iii) 15 per cent. [119978]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Estimated savings in Housing Benefit expenditure[1] for percentagereductions in social rents[2] at 2000–01 prices[3]

£ million

	5 per cent.	10 per cent.	15 per cent.
Scotland	40	90	130
Great Britain	420	830	1,240

[1] Estimates relate to gross Housing Benefit expenditure (the amounts actually paid to claimants) in respect of the current financial year 2000–01

[2] 'Social' rents are taken to refer to Local Authority and Registered Social Landlords

[3] Estimated results are based on a combination of information from the Family Resources Survey 1997–98, uprated to 2000–01 prices and benefit levels, along with the forecasts underlying the Departmental Report 2000.

Notes:

1. The information relates to Scotland and Great Britain. The Department forecasts only apply to Great Britain, therefore it has not been possible to supply corresponding data for the UK.
2. Figures are rounded to £10 million

Pensioners

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners have been entitled to means-tested benefits in each of the past five years; how many are expected to be entitled to be means-tested benefits in each of the following five years; and what proportion those represent of total pensioners in each year. [119944]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the following tables.

Total of number of pensioner benefit units receiving and number entitled but not receiving means tested benefits in 1996–97

	Number in millions	As percentage of all pensioner benefit units
Income Support	2.0 to 2.3	26 to 29
Housing Benefit	1.9 to 2.1	24 to 27
Council Tax Benefit	3.4 to 3.9	43 to 50

Total of number of pensioner benefit units receiving and number entitled but not receiving means tested benefits in 1997–98

	Number in millions	As percentage of all pensioner benefit units
Income Support	2.0 to 2.3	25 to 29
Housing Benefit	1.8 to 2.1	23 to 26
Council Tax Benefit	3.2 to 3.8	41 to 48

Notes:

1. Estimates refer to pensioners in private households, in Great Britain
2. Self-employed pensioners are excluded from counts of benefit recipients and entitled non-recipients
3. Pensioner benefit units here include couples where either member is over 60
4. Estimates are presented as ranges because estimates of entitled non-recipients are in ranges.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual cost of (a) removing the means test for benefits for pensioners and (b) keeping SERPS in (i) Scotland and (ii) the UK. [119869]

Mr. Rooker: The cost of removing the means test for benefits for pensioners depends on what assumptions are made. The net cost of uprating the basic State Pension to the level of the Minimum Income Guarantee is around £4.5 billion, excluding the effect on linked benefits. Retaining SERPS in preference to the State Second Pension would result in a cost saving because the State Second Pension will be more generous to some 18 million low and moderate earners, carers and long-term disabled people with broken work records. Estimates apply to Great Britain. Separate costs for Scotland are not available.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the proposed pensioners tax credit; and when it will come into force. [119971]

Mr. Rooker: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his Budget Statement, proposed that the pensioner credit should be introduced in the next Parliament.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) of 17 April 2000, Official Report, columns 401–02W, on pensions, if he will estimate his Department's expenditure on pensioners as a proportion of GDP in each year from 1979–80 to 1990–91. [120239]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Expenditure on people over 60 as a percentage of all social security benefit expenditure and as a percentage of GDP

		Expenditure as a percentage of:
Year	Expenditure (cash £ million)	All expenditure	GDP
1979–80	10,138	53.99	4.91
1989–81	12,134	53.55	5.15
1981–82	14,357	51.83	5.56
1982–83	16,105	50.92	5.70
1983–84	17,456	49.41	5.70
1984–85	18,496	48.39	5.61
1985–86	20,172	48.38	5.58
1986–87	21,697	48.31	5.58
1987–88	22,866	48.97	5.32
1988–89	23,652	49.97	4.94

Expenditure on people over 60 as a percentage of all social security benefit expenditure and as a percentage of GDP

Year	Expenditure (cash £ million)	Expenditure as a percentage of: All expenditure	GDP
1989–90	25,715	51.25	4.92
1990–91	28,490	50.42	5.06

Notes:
1. Expenditure figures are consistent with Table 3 of the 2000 Departmental Report (Cm 4614) and earlier equivalents.
2. Social Security benefit expenditure includes non-Departmental funded expenditure on Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit and earlier equivalents.

Combined Pension Statement

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of the combined pension statement launched on 12 April, referred to in departmental press release 00/114. [119945]

Mr. Rooker: I have placed in the Library an example of the combined pension statement issued by the Prudential, which includes details of both state and private pension rights.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much it has cost to administer the winter fuel payments in each year since their introduction; and what the projected costs are for the forthcoming year. [119938]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Cost to administer the winter fuel payments since their introduction

£ million

Year	Cost
1997–98	13.7
1998–99	13.1
1999–2000	14.3

Notes:
1. Administration costs for 2000–01 are not yet finalised.
2. A provisional estimate of £10.2 million was anticipated; however, this does not include publicity costs or the extra costs resulting from the ECJ ruling.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the additional cost to his Department's wage bill would be (a) in Scotland and (b) the UK if the minimum wage for all age groups was raised to (i) £4, (ii) £4.20 and (iii) £4.50 per hour. [119980]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

The additional pay bill cost for the Department of Social Security of rises in the minimum wage

Rate of minimum wage	Additional costs: All DSS staff (including Scotland)	DSS staff based in Scotland
4.00	2,634,176	308,366
4.20	7,398,281	869,668
4.50	15,260,259	1,803,400

Data Matching

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department has completed checking the individual payroll items against the departmental central index; and if he will make a statement. [119860]

Mr. Rooker: This Department does not at present match its payroll data against the departmental central index (DCI). To do so would involve a change of conditions of service of its staff and would have implications in respect of data protection legislation.

However, the large employers unit of the Contributions Agency, now part of the Inland Revenue, does carry out a reconciliation of National Insurance contributions paid by employees of companies against its records. In common with other large employers, this Department has been examined by this unit.

There is no evidence of widespread benefit fraud by staff: the last payroll cleansing exercise conducted by the Contributions Agency of the Department's payroll identified only one member of staff claiming benefit using their own national insurance number.

Company Pension Schemes

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pension schemes of companies that have (a) gone into liquidation and (b) otherwise ceased to exist are awaiting regulatory approval for their winding-up. [119950]

Mr. Rooker: There is no system of regulatory approval for pension schemes that wind-up. The Inland Revenue gives approval in respect of arrangements made by the trustees to secure the pension rights when a scheme ceases to be contracted-out of the State Earnings Related Pension Schemes (SERPS). There are about 24,000 schemes in the process of ceasing to contract out. Many of them will also be winding-up. No information is available about schemes winding up because the sponsoring employer is insolvent.

Government Pensions Liability

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 21 March 2000, Official Report, columns 477–78W, on Government pensions liability, what is the Government's liability in each case in each of the years referred to as a percentage of estimated gross domestic product assuming that gross domestic product increases in real terms at (a) 1.5 per cent. per annum and (b) 2 per cent. per annum. [120066]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

With real GDP growth of 1.5 per cent. per year pension expenditure is estimated to increase as a proportion of GDP between 2000–01 and 2030–31, from 4.3 per cent. to 4.7 per cent. After 2030–31 the proportion of GDP represented by pension expenditure falls, from 4.7 per cent. to 3.8 per cent. by 2050–51.

With real GDP growth at 2.0 per cent. per year pension expenditure as a proportion of GDP follows a more general pattern of decline, from 4.3 per cent. in 2000/01 to 3.0 per cent. in 2050–51. This more general pattern of decline is wholly attributable to the faster increase in GDP.

Government's pensions liability as a proportion of GDP assuming real growth of 1.5 per cent. per annum, 2.0 per cent. per annum in GDP

Percentage

Year	Real GDP growth of 1.5 per cent.	Real GDP growth of 2.0 per cent.
2000–01	4.3	4.3
2005–06	4.3	4.2
2010–11	4.5	4.2

Notes:

1. The figures have been calculated using the following assumptions:
Total pension expenditure is the sum of expenditure on SERPS, State Second Pension, and the Basic State Pension.
SERPS expenditure is based on the assumption that State Second Pension is introduced in 2002 and so any SERPS expenditure after that date is on earlier accruals.
SERPS expenditure does not include the effects of the Inherited SERPS scheme and accompanying deferral announced on 15 March 2000.
State Second Pension expenditure assumes the scheme becomes flat rate from 2006 onwards, when Stakeholder pensions are established. From 2006 everyone aged under 40, and earning over £9,500 (in 1999 earnings terms) chooses to contract out of State Second Pensions. Contracting out is based on the proposals contained in the current Bill.
Increases in contracted out rebates as a result of introducing State Second Pension and Stakeholder pensions are not included in expenditure figures.
2. Expenditure figures are consistent with those in the Government Actuary Department's report on the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill 1999.
3. GDP for future years is estimated by taking the figure for 1999–2000 and uprating it. GDP figures are often subject to revision in later years, and because of the long time horizon over which projection is undertaken the effects of any error corrected in a subsequent revision will be magnified.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the use his Department, its agencies and public bodies will make of the powers relating to the authorised obtaining of communications data in Part I, Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill once the Bill is enacted. [119515]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer from my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 19 April 2000, Official Report, column 509W.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Lawyers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many lawyers are employed by his Department; and how many were employed in 1995. [117813]

Ms Beverley Hughes: On 31 March 2000, 82 lawyers were employed by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, including its Agencies.

It is not possible to make strict comparisons with the situation that existed prior to the formation of the Department in 1997. The organisational changes that accompanied the merger of the former Department of Environment and the Department of Transport included new responsibilities for the regions. However, on 31 March 1995 the former Department of the Environment employed 39 lawyers and the former Department of Transport obtained its legal services from the Treasury Solicitors Department, who allocated 29 lawyers for the purpose.

The increase in legal activity over the last five years is due to a variety of factors, including additional work on legislation, human rights and devolution.

Legal Alcohol Limit

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 430W, on alcohol limits for drivers in EU member states, what were (a) the nature and conclusions of the Council of Ministers' discussions on 28 March, concerning the Commission Communications, and (b) the Treaty Article on which any such harmonisation proposal would be based. [118840]

Mr. Hill: At the Transport Council meeting of 28 March 2000, the European Commission presented its recently adopted Communication on road safety. The United Kingdom strongly welcomed the Communication and other member states also responded positively. The Commission indicated that blood alcohol levels would be the subject of a Recommendation. However, the Commission pointed out that the proposal for a Directive which was first presented in 1988 remains on the table if the Council wishes to debate it. It was concluded that there should be a discussion of the Communication at the Council meeting in June.

Any harmonisation proposal would be based on Article 75 of the Treaty of Rome which, as amended by the Maastricht Treaty, covers the competence of the Union to act in the field of road safety.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will name the board member for each regional development agency with responsibility for environmental issues. [118955]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Members are appointed by the Secretary of State on the basis of their experience and capacity and are not allocated responsibility for particular issues. However, some RDAs, as noted, have given responsibility for environmental matters to one or more of their members.

Agency	Members
East of England Development Agency	Richard Powell

Japan (Visit)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the (a) itinerary, (b) purpose and (c) cost of his visit to Japan. [119532]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 17 April 2000]: I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of G8 Environment Ministers from Friday 7 to Sunday 9 April in Otsu, Japan. I then travelled to Tokyo where on 10 April I had meetings with Prime Minister Mori, Foreign Minister Kono and the honorary Chairman of Toyota. I also visited the Tokyo traffic control centre and met UK and Japanese businessmen. I returned to the UK on Tuesday 11 April. All travel was in accordance with the Ministerial Code and my costs for the trip were approximately £7,500.

Parking Charges

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his Department's policy is on use by local authorities of the revenue generated from charges for on-street car parking to pay for heritage projects and tourist facilities; and if he will make a statement. [119998]

Mr. Hill: The use by local authorities of on-street parking revenue surpluses is governed by section 55 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984. Briefly, this provides that local authorities may use surpluses for the provision and maintenance of off-street parking facilities but if it appears to the local authority that the provision of further off-street parking provision in their area is unnecessary or undesirable, surpluses may be used for the purpose of meeting the costs of public transport services and highway or road improvement projects. Local authorities may not therefore spend revenue from on-street car parking to pay for heritage projects and tourist facilities.

Croydon Tramlink

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the passenger projections for Croydon Tramlink. [119839]

Mr. Hill: This is a commercial matter for Tramtrack Croydon Ltd., the private sector consortium which holds the concession to build, operate and maintain Croydon Tramlink.

Parliamentary Answers (BNFL)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list each of the (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary answers Ministers in his Department have provided since May 1997 which were based on (a) information and (b) a draft provided by British Nuclear Fuels. [120044]

Mr. Mullin: Internal advice and the source of such advice is not made public in line with exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Best Value Inspection Regime

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those private sector companies involved in the best value inspection regime. [119990]

Ms Armstrong: No private sector companies are yet involved in carrying out best value inspections. However, both the Audit Commission and some of the other Inspectorates intend to use teams which include staff with private sector experience, either on secondment or as consultants. The Audit Commission are also in discussion with a number of potential private sector providers with a view to their use on future occasions.

Departmental Initiatives

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number and value of (a) bids for and (b) grants made in each of the last three financial years for which figures are available, for each (i) area-based and (ii) other regeneration-related initiative for which his Department is responsible. [119798]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be collected in the time available. I will write shortly with the information to the hon. Member.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each (a) area-based and (b) other regeneration-related initiative for which his Department is responsible (i) the amount budgeted and (ii) the total expended in each financial year for the planned lifetime of each initiative. [119793]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Expenditure since 1997 and the amounts budgeted for this financial year and for 2001–02, for the area-based and other regeneration-related initiatives for which my Department is responsible are set out as follows. The level of funding for each of these initiatives beyond March 2002 is being considered in the current spending review. Information on planned budgets and the total expenditure in previous years for other regeneration programmes may be found in the departmental Annual Report.

[1] Provisional outturn

Severance Payments

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his policy relating to monitoring severance payments made to council officials. [119859]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Local Government (Discretionary Payments)(Amendment) Regulations 1999 introduced provisions which require local authorities in England and Wales to formulate and publish a written statement of their policy in connection with the exercise of their discretion to pay compensation, including severance payments, under parts II, III and IV of the Local Government (Discretionary Payments) Regulations 1996.

The 1999 regulations require each employing authority to be satisfied that their policy is workable, affordable and reasonable having regard to the foreseeable costs. In that way, elected members have direct responsibility for the decisions taken within the terms of their published policy statement and are locally and legally accountable for them to local council taxpayers and to the District Auditor.

My Department does not monitor individual severance payments made by local authorities, nor would it be appropriate to intervene in the way such authorities exercise these statutory functions. We do, however, remain in close touch with the Audit Commission, the Employers' Organisation and other interested parties on the continuing effectiveness of these regulations.

High Hedges

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many submissions he received in response to the consultation paper on high hedges; and if he will make a statement. [119861]

Mr. Mullin: We have received some 3,000 responses to this consultation, which we are currently analysing. We hope to make a statement, setting out our decisions on the way forward on this issue, and the reasons for them, by the summer.

Rough Sleeping

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the Government have done to implement the findings of reports of the Social Exclusion Unit on rough sleeping. [119976]

Ms Armstrong: Following the publication of the Social Exclusion Unit report, the Rough Sleepers Unit was established in April 1999 to deliver the Prime Minister's target of reducing rough sleeping by two-thirds by 2002. On 15 December 1999 the Government published their strategy on rough sleeping, "Coming in from the Cold", which set out in detail how we intend to meet the target. The Rough Sleepers Unit is working across Whitehall and beyond to implement the strategy and reduce rough sleeping.

Water Abstraction

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what scope he plans for the use of economic instruments in relation to water abstraction. [120589]

Mr. Meacher: Within the next two weeks, my Department will publish "Economic Instruments in Relation to Water Abstraction: a consultation paper". Copies will be placed in the Library of the House on the day of publication. The paper will say that the Government take the view that economic instruments may be applied to water abstraction in the following way:

(a) abstraction charges should remain limited to recovery of the Environment Agency's water resources management costs, but should be increased to the extent necessary to meet licence curtailment compensation costs when, but not before, these are incurred, thereby providing incentive for low-value users of water to reduce their licences voluntarily;

(b) trading in licences should be encouraged in such a way that it delivers environmental benefits together with economic gains, within the regulatory requirements of the abstraction licensing system as it will be following the changes which the Government announced on 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 756–57, and which it will bring forward in a forthcoming Water Bill;

(c) the Environment Agency should actively encourage abstraction licence trading with a general presumption that trading may be possible in most areas, and in particular by:

ensuring that its licensing administrative processes operate speedily and efficiently, making full use of e-mail and other electronic means;

clearly identifying, within its Abstraction Management Strategies, the scope for trading and any unavoidable limitations to particular types of trades; establishing an Internet site on which prospective buyers and sellers can record their interest in trading; and by requiring trading prices and other details of completed trades to be placed on the same Internet site.

The Government will consider this view further in the light of responses to the consultation paper and will announce their firm intentions in due course.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Correspondence

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the hon. Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale will receive a reply to her letter to him dated 3 January regarding farming issues in Morecambe and Lunesdale. [119741]

Ms Quin: I replied to the letter from my hon. Friend the Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale on 19 April 2000.

WALES

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the percentage change compared to 1990–91 in his Department's energy efficiency in each year since 1990–91; and if he will make a statement. [118996]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 22 July 1999, Official Report, columns 580–84W, which reported progress for all central government Departments to 31 March 1998.

Figures for the Wales Office are currently included within the data for the National Assembly for Wales.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's energy efficiency performance target, expressed as a percentage change in comparison to 1990–91, for each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [118997]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 22 March 2000, Official Report, columns 548–49W.

Birth Certificates

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what purposes his Department requires a birth certificate to be furnished by (a) employees, (b) contractors, (c) those applying for employment and contracts and (d) other persons. [120310]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My Department requires those applying for employment to provide either a birth certificate, passport, or driving licence in order to prove identity. Contractors, potential contractors, and other persons are not required to provide their birth certificates.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Pest Control

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee how many reports of (a) mice and (b) other vermin in the Palace of Westminster he has received in each of the last five years. [119557]

Sir Sydney Chapman: Reports of mice and other vermin in the last five years have been as follows:

Year	Mice	Other vermin
1995	113	32
1996	187	34
1997	135	20
1998	53	30
1999	102	29

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what action is being taken to reduce the numbers of (a) mice and (b) other vermin within the Palace of Westminster. [119556]

Sir Sydney Chapman: A specialist pest control contractor is employed regularly to set and check bait boxes in all areas, particularly in Refreshment Department areas and other places where mice are seen. Further specialist advice is obtained from the MAFF expert. Apart from mice, the only other vermin generally found in the Palace of Westminster are insects; these are treated with insecticides appropriate to the type of pest and situation.

CABINET OFFICE

Public Appointments

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what contracts are let with KPMG relating to public appointments. [118295]

Marjorie Mowlam: The information is not held centrally. However, in respect of public bodies sponsored by the Cabinet Office, no contracts are held with KPMG relating to public appointments.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on her policy in respect of the use her Department, its agencies and public bodies will make of the powers relating to the authorised obtaining of communications data in Part I, Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill once the Bill is enacted. [119513]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer to the answer my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary gave on 19 April 2000, Official Report, column 509W.

Drug Action Teams

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what financial and logistical support the Cabinet Office has provided for Drug Action Teams. [119960]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Drug Action Teams (DATs) are a partnership of local agencies such as health and local authorities, police, probation and local eduction authorities. Funding for their activities is channelled for the most part through these agencies. However, they receive a grant from the Home Office Drug Prevention Advisory Service (DPAS) to fund the running costs for DATs, namely the post of the co-ordinator and administration costs. That grant is set to rise from some £5 million to some £6.7 million over this year to fund the creation of additional DATs, bringing the total up to some 150.

DATs are supported by DPAS in partnership with the UK Anti Drugs Co-ordinator and Cabinet Office UK Anti Drugs Co-ordination Unit (UKADCU). DPAS provides the link between central government and local delivery and has nine regional offices providing advice and support to the DATs in their area in driving forward the Co-ordinator's Strategy. The Co-ordinator and staff of UKADCU also visit DATs and, in partnership with DPAS, organise conferences for DATs to discuss current and future issues.

National Farmers Union

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what meetings she has had with the National Farmers Union as part of her duties as Chair of the Ministerial Group on Rural Affairs. [119937]

Marjorie Mowlam: None. I am currently arranging a mutually convenient date for a meeting with the President of the NFU, Ben Gill.

Special Advisers

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what public speaking engagements have been undertaken by special advisers within her Department in each of the last three years. [119968]

Marjorie Mowlam: The UK Anti-Drugs Coordinator and his Deputy have undertaken a large number of public speaking engagements in support of the Government's strategy to combat illegal drugs.

Other special advisers within the Cabinet Office have not undertaken any official public speaking engagements over the last three years.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the foreign visits taken by Ministers on which they were accompanied by a special adviser since May 1997. [119933]

Marjorie Mowlam: Information in the form requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. A list of Cabinet Ministers' visits overseas, and information on spend by all Ministers on travel overseas for the period 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2000 is currently being assembled, and will be published as soon as possible. The overall figure on spend on Ministers' travel overseas will include the cost of travel of any Special Advisers accompanying Ministers.

Drugs (Prisons)

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what targets are to be set for reducing the use of drugs in prisons; and what specific measures relate to those targets. [119930]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department has agreed the following targets with the Prison Service:

By March 2000

Have established CARATs, (Counselling, Assessment, Referral, Advice and Throughcare) the basic treatment framework to improve the assessment, advice throughcare and support of prisoners; and put in place more and better quality treatment programmes.

Put in place more dogs trained to detect drugs; more CCTV in visits areas; obtain better information about supply routes and availability of drugs to prisoners; and discourage families from smuggling drugs.

By March 2002

Ensure that the CARATs annual caseload reached 20,000; that there are 30 new prison-based rehabilitation programmes and that 5,000 prisoners per year go through treatment programmes.

Have developed and implemented a model to assess the levels and routes of supply of drugs within prisons.

To reduce the rate of positive tests from prison random drug tests from 20 per cent. (in 1998–99) to 16 per cent.

The targets for March 2000 have been met through the introduction of CARATs in all prisons and twenty-one new treatment programmes. A further eight treatment programmes and four new therapeutic communities will start this year. There are 60 new passive and twelve new active drug dogs, bringing the totals to 121 and 196 respectively. CCTV is available in visits areas in 118 prisons. Improving intelligence is an ongoing task. New sanctions for visitors caught smuggling drugs were introduced in April 1999. They include a ban on the visitors concerned and the imposition of closed visits for three months.

The Prison Service is on course to meet these targets.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what meetings she has had in the last year with prison governors on the reduction of drug use in prisons. [119961]

Mr. Ian McCartney: None. My right hon. Friend the Minster for the Cabinet Office visited HMP Kirklevington Grange at Yarm, Cleveland, on Friday 11 February. This visit was to launch the Learning Labs initiative and to meet participants on the Prisoners' Passport project. On this occasion the prison governor was unable to be present.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will give details of the financial support provided by her Department for programmes designed to reduce the use of drugs in prisons. [119959]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Prison Service receives no financial support from the Cabinet Office to support its drugs strategy.

The Prison Service received an additional £76 million from HM Treasury for the three year period 1999–2000 to 2001–02 for its drugs strategy as a result of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Online Services

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what proportion of Government services are currently available online through the internet. [119934]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department is currently preparing the spring 2000 report monitoring progress towards the targets for electronic service delivery, which will identify the information requested by the hon. Member. I will be placing the report in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the targets she has set concerning the online availability of Government services. [119967]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Angela Smith) on 30 March 2000, Official Report, column 203W.

People's Panel

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will publish the 3, 4 and 5 waves of quantitative research carried out through the People's Panel. [120009]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government are committed to publishing the results of research carried out using the People's Panel. The results of the third wave of research were published on 15 July 1999, and the fourth wave of research on 3 April 2000. On 17 January 2000 we also published the results of a re-analysis of the first three waves of research which looked at the attitudes of older people. On each occasion, publication was announced by issue of a press release and copies of summaries placed in the House Libraries and on the People's Panel website at www.servicefirst.gov.uk/index/pphome.htm.

The fifth wave of research, examining people's satisfaction with, and expectations of, public services is currently under way. We plan to publish the results in July.

Executive Agencies and NDPBs

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the timetable is for future option studies for executive agencies and NDPBs. [120008]

Mr. Stringer: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Tamworth (Mr. Jenkins) on 7 March 2000, Official Report, columns 608–09W. The Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies 1999 Report, Cm 4657, and the Executive Agencies 1999 Report, Cm 4658, which were published and laid in both Houses on that day listed the current position regarding the quinquennial review of the non-departmental public bodies and the agencies included in each report.

Performance and Innovation Unit

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what meetings she has had with the Prime Minister to discuss the work of the Performance and Innovation Unit on management of cross-cutting policies. [119953]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have not had any meetings with the Prime Minister specifically to discuss the work of the Performance and Innovation Unit on management of cross-cutting policies, but this subject does come up from time to time in our frequent discussions across a range of subjects.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what meetings she has had with the Prime Minister in the current year to discuss the work of the Social Exclusion Unit. [119956]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have not had any meetings with the Prime Minister in the current year specifically to discuss the work of the Social Exclusion Unit, but this subject does come up from time to time in our frequent discussions across the range of my responsibilities.

Press Officers

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many times press officers have accompanied Ministers on foreign visits in each of the past three years. [119931]

Marjorie Mowlam: Details of press officers accompanying Ministers on foreign visits are not held centrally. I can, however, respond regarding foreign visits of Cabinet Office Ministers since May 1997.

As Minister for the Cabinet Office I have not been accompanied by a press officer on any of my foreign visits, nor was my predecessor. Records indicate that, since May 1997, press officers have accompanied other Cabinet Office Ministers as follows: my right hon. Friend the Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on five occasions and my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle) on two occasions.

Government Car Service

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list gross expenditure on the Government Car Service in 1999–2000. [120058]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Government Car and Despatch Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson, to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Letter from Nick Matheson to Mr. Andrew Lansley, dated April 2000:

The Minister of State, Cabinet Office has asked me in my capacity as the Chief Executive responsible for the Government Car Service to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the gross expenditure for the Agency in 1999–2000.

The estimated gross expenditure for the Government Car Service for 1999–2000 is £7.7 million. The accounts for the full year are currently being finalised and will be audited by the NAO.

Regulatory Impact Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has to review the operation of regulatory impact assessments. [119936]

Mr. Stringer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas) on 10 April 2000, Official Report, column 53W.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many Departments have reported on their regulatory performance in departmental reports published in April 2000 in terms agreed with the Regulatory Impact Unit. [120011]

Mr. Stringer: All of the key regulatory Departments have published Regulatory Reporting sections in their Annual Departmental Reports. The key Departments are:

Department of Trade and Industry, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Treasury, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, Inland Revenue, Department of Health, Home Office, Health and Safety Executive, Department for Education and Employment, Customs and Excise.

Social Exclusion Funds

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will introduce new arrangements for providing funds to deprived communities to tackle social exclusion that do not rely on matched funding from the communities concerned; and if she will make a statement. [119577]

Marjorie Mowlam: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister launched consultation on 12 April on the Social Exclusion Unit's framework National Strategy for Neighbourhood Renewal. This includes analysis of the obstacles to securing funding in deprived communities and proposals to overcome them.

In addition, this Government have already committed £800 million over 10 years to the New Deal for Communities programme which is being used to regenerate some of England's poorest neighbourhoods.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Museums and Galleries (London)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which national museums and galleries in London are funded by his Department. [119806]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The national museums and galleries in London sponsored by my Department are as follows: the British Museum; the Imperial War Museum, including its branches at the Cabinet War Rooms and HMS Belfast; the National Gallery; the National Maritime Museum, encompassing the Royal Observatory, Greenwich; the National Portrait Gallery; the Natural History Museum; the National Museum of Science and industry (the Science Museum); the Tate Gallery, encompassing Tate Britain and Tate Modern; the Victoria and Albert Museum, including its branches at the Bethnal Green Museum of Childhood and the Theatre Museum, Covent Garden and the Wallace Collection. The Royal Armouries, which has a major museum at Leeds, and the Museum of Artillery at Fort Nelson near Portsmouth, also has a site within the Tower of London.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the use his Department, its agencies and public bodies will make of the powers relating to the authorised obtaining of communications data in Part I, Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill once the Bill is enacted. [119512]

Mr. Chris Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 19 April 2000, Official Report, column 509W.

Online Services

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the services which (a) his Department and (b) the executive agencies responsible to his Department (i) provide online and (ii) expect to be deliverable online by 2002. [119445]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department is currently collecting data as input into the Cabinet Office spring 2000 report on the progress towards the delivery of all Government services electronically by 2005. I do not want to pre-empt that report but I can say that we are looking very closely at the opportunities arising from electronic service delivery. My Department relaunched its website a month ago providing access to a range of departmental information and services as well as linking out to our wider sectors who are already creating a range of exciting online services such as the 24 Hour Museum and the BTA's "VisitBritain" tourist information site. These are already proving very popular and provide an indication of how service delivery will develop over the coming years.

This is an area that is fundamental to my Department's aims of quality, access, education and developing the creative economy, and our service delivery plans will reflect this.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire will receive a substantive response to his letter of 28 January on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Aylin. [120021]

Mr. Chris Smith: I give my sincere apologies to the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire for the delay in responding to his letter of 28 January on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Aylin. I replied to his letter on 19 April.

Stonehenge

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will announce the preferred developer of the Stonehenge visitor centre; and if he will make a statement. [119786]

Mr. Alan Howarth: A further statement will be made as soon as it is appropriate.

Countess Road, Amesbury

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the properties in Countess Road, Amesbury (a) which have been purchased on behalf of English Heritage and (b) on which there is an option to purchase on behalf of English Heritage; and if he will make a statement. [119787]

Mr. Alan Howarth: English Heritage owns 18 Countess Road and a small paddock which is accessed from Countess Road and has an option to acquire land at Countess East which includes 14 and 16 Countess Road.

HEALTH

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department spent (i) directly and (ii) indirectly on asylum seekers in (a) 1995, (b) 1996, (c) 1997, (d) 1998 and (e) 1999; and what estimate has been made of expenditure in 2000. [119487]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 17 April 2000]: The Home Office will be responding to this Question on behalf of Government as a whole, using information that we have provided to them.

NHS Treatment Guidelines

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to review the NHS guidelines for the treatment of people from abroad. The Under-Secretary of State for Health, [120003]

Ms Stuart: Policy on overseas visitors is kept under continuous review. New regulations were recently introduced which require the new primary care trusts to identify and charge overseas visitors where necessary and which also clarified the removal of Hong Kong from the list of countries with which we hold reciprocal healthcare agreements. (The National Health Service (Charges to Overseas Visitors) Amendment Regulations 2000. SI 2000 No.602).

In addition, we are looking at the current guidance available to hospitals and the public with a view to producing revised versions which are more user friendly.

Medicines Control Agency

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the high level targets for the Medicines Control Agency for 2000–01. [120348]

Yvette Cooper: The high level targets for the Medicines Control Agency are included in its Annual Business Plan, copies of which have been placed in the Library today.

Physical Punishment

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his Department's consultation document "Protecting Children, Supporting Parents", if he will list the eight countries in which there are explicit bans on physical punishment by parents, citing the documentary evidence for the existence of the ban in each country. [119817]

Mr. Hutton: The countries concerned are listed in the document. They are: Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Norway, Austria, Cyprus, Croatia and Latvia.

The documentary sources are the Acts and Statutes of the relevant countries.

Circular HSC 1999/162: LAC (99) 28

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many reports he has received from the Social Services Inspectorate about the implementation of circular HSC 1999/162: LAC (99) 28; and how many of these reports indicate that the circular is not being properly implemented. [119862]

Mr. Hutton: No formal reports have been received. However, the Social Services Inspectorate regularly undertakes detailed assessment of local social service authorities' performance including services for learning disabled people. In addition, a survey of the use of the Direction on Choice to which the circular refers was carried out in 1998 and this was followed up by a series of regional seminars in the summer of 1999 to disseminate the lessons learned. We are also developing a national learning disability strategy to be launched later this year which will aim to eliminate inconsistencies in service delivery.

Regeneration Initiatives

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list for each (a) area-based and (b) other regeneration-related initiative for which his Department is responsible (i) the amount budgeted and (ii) the total expended in each financial year for the planned lifetime of each initiative; [119789]

(2) if he will list the number and value of (a) bids and (b) grants made in each of the last three financial years for which figures are available, for each (i) area-based and (ii) other regeneration-related initiative for which his Department is responsible. [119795]

Ms Stuart: Health action zones (HAZs) are the only area-based initiative for which the Department is responsible. Most of the additional resources available to health authorities in HAZs are allocated on the basis of a NHS weighted capitation formula rather than through a bidding process. Health Authorities that are HAZs received and spent an additional £5.6 million in the first year of the initiative (1998–99) and £89.4 million in 1999–2000 (£3 million less than budgeted for). Resources for 2000–01 and beyond have yet to be finalised.

Other initiatives classified as regeneration-related initiatives are the Healthy Schools Initiative, Personal Medical Services (PMS) Pilots and the Primary Care and Primary School Partnership pilots.

The resources budgeted for and allocated to the Healthy Schools Initiative, which has now been rolled out across England, were £1.2 million in 1998–99 and £2.9 million in 1999–2000. £5.7 million will be available in 2000–01. No decisions have been made about resources for future years. The cost of the initiative is shared equally between the Department of Health and the Department for Education and Employment.

PMS pilots receive a "fair share" of the resources that would have been available from the general medical services non-cash limited pool. The only additional resources they receive are for preparation costs. The preparation costs for the first two waves of PMS pilots were £2 million in 1997–98, £2 million in 1998–99 and £3 million in 1999–2000. No decisions have yet been made on a third wave.

The Primary Care and Primary School Partnership pilots were budgeted to receive £350,000 in 1999–2000 and 2000–01. £100,000 was carried forward from 1999–2000. No decisions have yet been made about further expenditure.

Slimming Drugs

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to implement the ruling of the European Court on the reinstatement of slimming drugs proscribed by the Medicines Control Agency on 9 April. [119995]

Ms Stuart: The United Kingdom Licensing Authority has today rescinded the ban on the marketing of amfepramone, following the European Court's decision to suspend the European ban. Although there are no new safety concerns with this product, in the interests of public health and reassurance to patients, the urgent advice of the Committee on the Safety of Medicines has been sought. The European Court has not given any decision in relation to the European ban on phentermine—another anorectic substance previously on the UK market.

PFI Projects

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the annual revenue cost is for each of the next 20 years of the PFI projects approved to date. [118861]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is shown in the following table, and represents private finance initiative schemes which have reached financial close.

£ million

Financial year	Annual revenue cost[1]
2000–01	114.67
2001–02	204.41

Royal Commission on Long-Term Care

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate of the cost of full implementation of the report of the Royal Commission on Long-Term Care in (a) Scotland and (b) the UK. [119858]

Mr. Hutton: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 2 December 1999, Official Report, columns 444–45. The pro rata costs for Scotland are normally estimated to be 10 per cent. of the United Kingdom total.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will direct the Governor of St. Helena to establish a minimum wage on St. Helena. [119807]

Mr. Battle: The St. Helena Government is committed to reviewing the feasibility of introducing a minimum wage this financial year, against the background of a 10 per cent. increase in salaries and wages for civil servants (70 per cent. of the workforce) from 1 April 2000 and a reduction in income tax and raising of tax thresholds in the Appropriation Bill passed in March.

Iran

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent developments there have been in the trial of the 13 Jews detained in Iran for espionage; and if he will make a statement. [120481]

Mr. Hain: Since my statement to the House on 11 April, we have learned that, despite earlier announcements the majority were accused of lesser charges, 10 of the 13 defendants are being tried for espionage and that the trial is being held in closed session. We continue to press our deep concern at these developments on the Iranian authorities, in consultation with our EU partners, stressing the need for a transparent and fair trial.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he plans to take with respect to the granting of export licences for military materials to Zimbabwe. [119864]

Mr. Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 9 February 2000, Official Report, columns 184–85W to the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge).

We are deeply concerned by the continuing violence in Zimbabwe resulting in the death of another farmer on 18 April and the continued attacks and killings of members of the opposition. We continue to monitor developments closely. We take the internal situation into account when considering applications for licences for the export of any goods controlled for strategic reasons. All export licence applications are considered against the UK national criteria and those in the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports. If there is a clearly identifiable risk that the proposed export might be used for internal repression or external aggression the licence is refused.

SCOTLAND

Works of Art

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent on (a) the upkeep and (b) the purchase of works of art in his Department for each financial year since 1992. [117474]

Dr. Reid: Details relating to the Government Art Collection were given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 392W.

The costs of the upkeep and the purchase of works of art in the then Scottish Office for each financial year since 1992 are given in the table. Figures for 1999–2000 include Scottish Office expenditure up to 1 July 1999 and for the Scotland Office for the remainder of the year.

Year	Upkeep	Purchase	Total
1993–94	0	653.65	653.65
1994–95	0	621.36	621.36
1995–96	0	92,920.27	92,920.27

Year	Upkeep	Purchase	Total
1997–98	475.88	0	475.88
1998–99	0	3,435.37	3,435.37
1999–2000	0	3,062.75	3,062.75

Expenditure in 1995–96 includes costs relating to the completion of the new Scottish Office headquarters building at Victoria Quay, Edinburgh. These items totalled £73,927.00.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the percentage change compared to 1990–91 in his Department's energy efficiency in each year since 1990–91; and if he will make a statement. [119000]

Dr. Reid: Information from the former Scottish Office is only available from 1991–92. Details of the percentage change in energy consumption from that date are:

Year	Percentage change
1992–93	+6
1993–94	+8
1994–95	+13
1995–96	+19
1996–97	+13
1997–98	+4
1998–99	−4
1999–2000	[1]-10

[1] Estimated

The percentage change figures indicate that, until 1996, energy consumption was increasing. This was largely because the period in question coincided with the rapid expansion of information technology and, in particular, the growth of desktop computing and associated equipment. Since then, significant improvements have been made.

These figures do not include the Scottish Prisons Service and the Scottish Courts Service.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's energy efficiency performance target, expressed as a percentage change in comparison to 1990–91, for each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [119001]

Dr. Reid: My Department took on its present form on 1 July 1999, following devolution in Scotland. We have not yet set energy efficiency targets for the next five years but any targets set will be in line with the Government's environment and climate change commitments.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the use his Department, its agencies and public bodies will make of the powers relating to the authorised obtaining of communications data in Part I, Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill once the Bill is enacted. [119519]

Dr. Reid: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 19 April 2000, Official Report, column 509W.

Prohibited Weapons

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prohibited weapons are held by private individuals in Scotland by the permission of the Secretary of State. [119871]

Dr. Reid: No prohibited weapons are currently held by private individuals in Scotland by the permission that was previously granted by the Secretary of State and is now granted by Scottish Ministers.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the use his Department, its agencies and public bodies will make of the powers relating to the authorised obtaining of communications data in Part I, Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill once the Bill is enacted. [119509]

Jane Kennedy: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him on 19 April 2000, Official Report, column 509W, by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Legal Aid

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the potential for conflict of interest when legal aid managers award legal aid to clients of solicitors' firms in which their spouses are partners. [119698]

Mr. Lock: Before the establishment of the Legal Services Commission on 1 April 2000, the Legal Aid Board was responsible for granting applications for legal aid. In 1998, the Board introduced a Code of Conduct for its staff. All key members of staff were required to ensure that any possible conflicts of interest were identified at an early stage and that appropriate action was taken to resolve them.

The requirements under the Staff Code of Conduct continue to apply to all staff of the Legal Services Commission, which is the successor to the Legal Aid Board. Where a conflict of interest is reported, the Senior Manager will make arrangements to ensure that the staff member concerned is not involved in any decision relating to the award or management of legal aid, or funding under the Access to Justice Act 1999, to the firm or organisation in which he or she has an interest.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what has been the total cost of (a) civil and (b) criminal legal aid in Northern Ireland in each year since 1990. [119696]

Mr. Lock: Net expenditure in relation to civil legal aid, advice by way of representation, legal advice and assistance and criminal legal aid in Northern Ireland since 1990–91 is as follows:

£ million

	Civil	ABWOR	LAA	Criminal	Total
1990–91	2.89	1.30	2.20	5.80	12.19
1991–92	3.45	1.37	2.83	7.17	14.82
1992–93	3.73	1.64	4.93	9.61	19.91
1993–94	3.62	1.49	5.21	6.68	17.00
1994–95	4.38	1.29	4.67	9.59	19.93
1995–96	4.64	1.28	5.68	14.18	25.78
1996–97	5.68	1.46	4.60	14.33	26.07
1997–98	5.75	1.87	3.68	17.55	28.85
1998–99	6.47	1.45	6.24	15.93	30.09

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the firms of solicitors in Northern Ireland with clients who have received (a) civil and (b) criminal legal aid each year since 1990; and how much (i) civil and (ii) criminal legal aid they received. [119697]

Mr. Lock: The administration of the legal aid scheme in Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the Law Society of Northern Ireland under the Legal Aid, Advice and Assistance (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. This function is exercised through the Legal Aid Committee which is a Committee of the Council of the Law Society of Northern Ireland and the Legal Aid Department which is a Department of the Law Society. The Legal Aid Department is also responsible for the administration of criminal legal aid on the Lord Chancellor's behalf.

The number of firms of solicitors in Northern Ireland with clients who have received civil legal aid since 1997, excluding advice by way of representation and legal advice and assistance, is 484. For the same period the number of firms of solicitors in Northern Ireland with clients who have received criminal legal aid is 452. Copies of the lists have been laid in the Library of the House of Commons.

The amounts received by these firms of solicitors for civil legal aid and criminal legal aid in 1997–98 and 1998–99 were as follows:

£ million

	Civil	Criminal
1997–98	2.99	8.10
1998–99	3.37	6.71

A breakdown of the amount paid to each firm in each year since 1990 could only be determined by undertaking a vast amount of work on the Legal Aid Department's former and now obsolete computer, checking manual records and extracting information of part of a year for the new computer system, which is currently being installed. This work would disrupt the implementation of the new computer system and divert staff from their tasks of processing legal aid applications. Accordingly the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mediation and Reconciliation

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much was spent by governmental departments in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1999 on mediation and reconciliation schemes to support marriages. [119766]

Jane Kennedy: The figures for 1970 and 1980 are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. In the financial year 1999–2000 the Lord Chancellor's Department spent £3.2 million on marriage and relationship support. In line with Sir Graham Hart's recommendations in his report on Marriage Support Funding (November 1999), the allocation is being increased to £4 million in 2000–01; £4.5 million in 2002–02; and to £5 million in 2002–03.

Divorce Cases

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of the Legal Aid Fund was spent on divorce cases in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1999; and how much was spent in each of those years in 1999 prices. [119764]

Mr. Lock: Legal Aid is not normally available for divorce proceedings. It is available however for matters ancillary to divorce, such as spousal maintenance and property issues, and for residence and contact matters relating to children.

In 1979–80 and 1998–99, expenditure on all proceedings relating to divorce and ancillary matters represented 30 per cent. and 18 per cent. of the total Legal Aid Fund respectively.

At 1999 prices, the amounts spent on matrimonial proceedings were:

1999: £175.5 million

1980: £65.0 million

Comparable figures for the year 1969–70 are not available.

Libel Actions (Financial Backers)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in how many failed libel actions brought since 1995 the litigant has refused to disclose to the court the identities of those who helped finance the action so that costs could be recovered; what steps the court took in each case; and if he will make a statement. [120002]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor's Department does not keep statistics of libel cases which fail and in which the litigant has refused to disclose to the court the source of those who helped to finance the action. It is not possible to keep records of the costs outcomes of libel cases because many cases do not reach trial but are settled by agreement. In settled cases the court will not be privy to the arrangement on costs.

The question of financial support for defamation proceedings will be addressed in a consultation paper to be issued by my Department in the near future.

Public Records

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on progress made since March 1999 on allowing access to documents over 30 years old to which s.3(4) of the Public Records Act 1958 applies. [119835]

Mr. Lock: It is now normal procedure, when government departments and agencies make applications for the Lord Chancellor's permission to retain records over 30 years old, for officers of the Public Record Office to encourage them to allow public access. Such applications are further scrutinised by the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Council on Public Records. The Advisory Council may request access for the public as a condition of an application proceeding to receive the Lord Chancellor's approval.

As a result, the public will be granted access to the great majority of the records retained under s.3(4) since March 1999. The commonest reason for access to be refused is that the retained records remain sensitive. In such cases access would undermine the reason for retention.

Judicial Appointments

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the implications for judicial appointment procedures in England and Wales of the proposals for judicial appointments commissions for Scotland and for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [119803]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor is aware of the proposals for Scotland and Northern Ireland. He has decided to appoint a Commissioner for Judicial Appointments in England and Wales as recommended by Sir Leonard Peach following his scrutiny of the appointments procedures and to take forward his other recommendations for change. The Commissioner, as recommended by Sir Leonard, will give the Lord Chancellor independent and impartial advice on the full range of appointments matters. Further reform is not ruled out for the future, but not immediately planned, now that the existing system has been investigated and endorsed subject to certain changes which will be implemented and evaluated.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many Queen's Counsel are from ethnic minority communities, broken down between (a) men and (b) women. [120082]

Mr. Lock: The information is not available in the form requested.

Before 1989, applicants for appointment as Queen's Counsel were not invited to declare their ethnic origin. Since that year, applicants have been invited to declare their ethnic origin, but they are not obliged to do so. There is, therefore, no definitive record of the number of Queen's Counsel of ethnic minority origin.

Sine 1989 (and including this year), 22 applicants who chose to declare an ethnic minority origin have been appointed as Queen's Counsel; of these, 19 are men and 3 are women.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many of the Queen's Counsel to be appointed on Maundy Thursday are (a) women, (b) from ethnic minority backgrounds, (c) solicitors and (d) (i) below the age of 45 and (ii) above the age of 60 years; and what was the (A) highest, (B) lowest, (C) average and (D) mean declared fee income of (x) successful and (y) unsuccessful candidates. [119819]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor's Department's press notice number 134/00, issued for publication on Maundy Thursday, announces the names of those to be appointed Queen's Counsel on Wednesday 3 May, and I refer my hon. Friend to that notice.

That press notice includes, as it has in previous years, statistical information on the numbers of female, ethnic minority and solicitor applicants and successful applicants. Following a recommendation in Sir Leonard Peach's report into the appointment processes of judges and Queen's Counsel, it also includes for the first time a table indicating the averages and quartile distributions of the average declared fees for all applicants, unsuccessful applicants and successful applicants.

The additional information requested by my hon. Friend is that 41 of the successful applicants are under 45; and none is over 60 years of age.

Regeneration-related Initiatives

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number and value of (a) bids for and (b) grants made in each of the last three financial years for which figures are available, for each (i) area-based and (ii) other regeneration-related initiative for which his Department is responsible. [119797]

Mr. Lock: This Department has not received any bids or made grants for area-based or other regeneration-related initiatives in any of the last three financial years.

TREASURY

Married Couple's Allowance

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of households which will lose entitlement to married couple's allowance in 2001–02 who will not become entitled to the children's tax credit; and what (a) the average loss per household will be in such cases and (b) the total saving will be for the Treasury from this group. [116577]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 28 March 2000]: We are replacing the married couple's allowance with the children's tax credit, which is worth more than twice as much and is better targeted on the families who most need support—those with growing children. As a result of the measures we have taken, including the introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit and record increases in Child Benefit, families with children will be on average £850 a year better off from April 2001. Estimates of the total expected cost and yield of the abolition of MCA and the introduction of children's tax credit have been published in Table A2.1 of the FSBR.

Tobacco Taxation

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount of money he estimates the increased tobacco taxation will raise for expenditure on the NHS; and if the expenditure projections for the NHS will be sustained irrespective of the yield from tobacco taxation. [117036]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The projected exchequer yield from the increased tobacco duty of £235 million in the full year, as set out in Table A13 in the FSBR, is taken into account in the commitment of the extra £2 billion to the NHS in 2000–01, which we are guaranteeing to meet.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the use his Department, its agencies and public bodies will make of the powers relating to the authorised obtaining of communications data in Part I, Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill once the Bill is enacted. [119507]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer to my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 19 April 2000, Official Report, column 509W.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Departments have submitted environmental appraisals with their draft public service agreements for the second comprehensive spending review; and if he will make a statement. [118859]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 17 April 2000]: It was a requirement that the analysis submitted by all Departments to inform the spending review include consideration of the impact of their proposals and programmes on sustainable development.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the objectives of the second comprehensive spending review. [118860]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 17 April 2000]: The aim of the 2000 spending review is to determine how best Departments' programmes can contribute to the achievement of the Government's objectives, in particular their aims of:

- opportunity for everyone to fulfil their potential through education and employment;
- a fair and inclusive society in which communities are healthy and secure;
- higher productivity, sustainable growth and effective co-operation with our European and international partners.

The review will entail a rigorous scrutiny of Departments' performance in delivering effective and responsive services, improving efficiency and managing assets and other resources. It will also consider a range of issues which cross departmental boundaries.

The review will set new departmental spending plans within the firm overall limits for public spending announced in the Budget.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations his Department received in relation to this year's comprehensive spending review before 31 March; and if he will continue to accept representations from both public and private sector bodies. [119584]

Mr. Andrew Smith: No formal count is made, but the Treasury had received a number of representations in relation to the 2000 spending review by 31 March. Treasury Ministers will continue to accept representations from both public and private bodies while the review continues, either directly or through our colleagues in other Departments.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the additional cost to his Department's salary bill if the minimum wage for all age groups was raised to (a) £4, (b) £4.20 and (c) £4.50 an hour. [119973]

Mr. Andrew Smith: There would be no additional cost to the Treasury's salary bill under any of the scenarios.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the additional personal tax revenue if the minimum wage was set for all age groups at (a) £4, (b) £4.20 and (c) £4.50 per hour in (i) Scotland and (ii) the UK. [119972]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not possible to estimate the potential impact of raising the minimum wage on the labour market, so an accurate costing is not possible.

Inflation Figures

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis he has estimated that the inflation rate will be 3.4 per cent. in September 2000. [119994]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The basis for the projection that inflation will be 3.4 per cent. in September 2000 is set out in appendix A1 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons the inflation rate he has assumed for September 2000 differs from the target inflation rate he has set for the Monetary Policy Committee of the Bank of England. [119993]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The forecast of inflation in September 2000 referred to in the Budget is a forecast of the annual increase in the retail prices index (RPI), whereas the target inflation rate for the Monetary Policy Committee is the annual increase in retail prices excluding mortgage interest payments (RPIX).

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the forecast additional spending on Working Families Tax Credit will be spent on recipients who would have (a) been entitled and (b) not been entitled to Family Credit in (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (ii) 2001–02. [119947]

Dawn Primarolo: Figures for the projected expenditure on the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) and Disabled Person's Tax Credit are given in Table C12 of the March 2000 Financial Statement and Budget Report. In 1998–99, the last full year for Family Credit and Disability Working Allowance, the outturn expenditure on these was £2.6 billion.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been spent to date on the childcare tax credit of the Working Families Tax Credit; and what is his latest estimate of expenditure in (a) this financial year and (b) in each of the next two financial years. [108761]

Dawn Primarolo [pursuant to her reply, 10 March 2000, c. 852W]: The extra amounts of Working Families Tax Credit arising from the childcare tax credit in awards made by the end of January 2000 will result in expenditure of about £60 million during the 26-week period of award. It is estimated that for 2000–01, the first full year of the credit, the extra expenditure due to the childcare tax credits will be about £200 million. I very much regret that the figures given in my earlier reply were based on the average amounts of eligible child care costs, rather than the average extra award received as a result of the childcare tax credit.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many parents are claiming the childcare tax credit in respect of children (a) aged under eight years and (b) over eight years; and what is the average payment per (i) family and (ii) child. [108760]

Dawn Primarolo [pursuant to her reply, 10 March 2000, c. 853W]: Families in receipt of the childcare tax credit received on average an extra £31 per week as a result of this credit, or £25 per week per child receiving the child care. I very much regret that the figures given in my earlier reply were the average amounts of eligible child care costs.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many calls have been made to the WFTC helpline in each month since it was established. [119946]

Dawn Primarolo: Monthly figures on the number of calls handled by working families' tax credit helpline and response line are given in the table:

Month	Helpline[1]	Response Line[2]
September[3]	389,300	316,800
October	449,300	322,700
November	384,900	141,500
December	242,400	42,900
January	406,800	15,400
February	387,400	—
March	502,800	—

[1] The helpline has been in operation since the campaign launch of WFTC on the 8 September 1999.

[2] The response line has only been in operation during the first advertising campaign.

[3] The helpline and the response line were made operational on the 8 September 1999.

Combined Heat and Power Plant

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action has been taken as a result of the study by property advisers to the Civil Estate concerning the case for installation of a combined heat and power plant for central Government Departments. [120024]

Mr. Timms: A combined heat and power plant was installed in 1997–98 as part of the replacement of the central plant of the Whitehall district heating system. Generation of electricity commenced in July 1998.

Debt Relief

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which aspects of the Cologne G7 Summit agreement on debt relief have not been implemented by (a) the IMF, (b) the World bank and (c) individual countries. [118982]

Mr. Timms: The World bank, the IMF and all individual creditor countries signed up to implementation of the enhanced HIPC Initiative at the IMF/World bank annual meetings last September.

Some individual countries, including the UK, have now gone further than last September's agreement, by committing to provide 100 per cent. relief on the commercial debts of countries qualifying under the HIPC initiative. The UK Government welcome these developments as a further step along the road to providing faster, wider and deeper debt relief, and encourages other countries to follow suit.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on establishing the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Trust Fund; and what contributions have been made by (a) national and (b) international donors. [118983]

Mr. Timms: The HIPC Trust Fund was set up last year to assist multilateral creditors meet the cost falling to them from the enhanced HIPC framework.

The total amounts pledged and contributed to the Trust Fund are equal to roughly $2.4 billion. (Australia has pledged $12 million; Austria $19 million; Belgium $40 million; Canada $104 million; Denmark $42 million; Finland $25 million; France $199 million; Germany $252 million; Greece $10 million; Ireland $20 million; Italy $162 million; Japan $200 million; Luxembourg $3 million; Netherlands $169 million; Norway $41 million; Portugal $22 million; Spain $128 million; Sweden $49 million; Switzerland $28 million; United Kingdom $359 million; US $600 million.)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) which countries have already received debt relief through the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries 2 programme; how much they have received; what progress is being made to relieve debt; and when the debt relief will be received; [118981]

(2) what proposals he has for improving the speed and performance of the IMF implementation process of the heavily indebted poor countries initiatives. [118984]

Mr. Timms: Bolivia, Mauritania, Uganda, Tanzania and Mozambique have all reached their decision points under the enhanced HIPC initiative and are receiving debt relief. Bolivia will receive over $2 billion in relief: a 30 per cent. reduction in the net present value of its debt (additional to the relief already granted under the first HIPC initiative); Mauritania will receive $1.2 billion debt relief: a 50 per cent. reduction; Uganda $4.4 billion, or a 72 per cent. reduction; Tanzania $3 billion, or a reduction of 54 per cent.; and Mozambique £2 billion in debt relief, or a 40 per cent. reduction.

The UK was disappointed that, to date, only these five countries have started to receive relief under the enhanced HIPC initiative. In Washington, at the spring meetings of the IMF and World bank, shareholders re-affirmed their wish to see countries coming forward to decision point quickly.

The Chancellor and the Secretary of State for International Development recently wrote to the Acting Managing Director of the IMF and Chairman of the World bank, setting out their concerns over progress and urging them to consider the introduction of a HIPC Implementation Unit. The UK therefore welcomed the announcement by the Bank and Fund that they will be setting up a joint committee on HIPC implementation, as well as providing monthly briefing sessions to both Boards on the progress of individual countries under the initiative.

National Insurance

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the additional revenue to the UK from (a) raising the ceiling on national insurance for employers to £1,000 a week and (b) charging national insurance at a rate of 5 per cent. for earnings over this level. [119969]

Dawn Primarolo: There is no ceiling for employer national insurance contributions.

UK Debt Management Office

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish the UK Debt Management Office's targets for 2000–01. [120349]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The DMO's targets for 2000–01 are set out as follows, together with the outturn against the equivalent targets for 1999–2000. The range of targets has been extended somewhat to reflect the taking over of responsibility by the DMO for Exchequer cash management on 3 April 2000. The DMO is today also publishing its Business Plan for 2000–01. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Targets for the Debt Management Office 2000–01

1. To ensure full compliance with the Government's remit for the DMO as set out in the Debt Management Report, within the tolerances and subject to the review triggers notified separately to the Office and consistently with the objectives of monetary policy. [Target fully met in 1999–2000]
2. To ensure that the maximum time taken to issue the results of gilt auctions and structured Treasury Bill tenders does not exceed 40 minutes while achieving complete accuracy. [Target met in 1999–2000, with the exception of the auction in May 1999 when there was an unusually high number of bids]
3. To ensure that the maximum time taken to issue the results of ad hoc Treasury Bill or other tenders does not exceed 15 minutes. [New target]
4. To achieve complete accuracy, within agreed accounting tolerances, in the recording and reporting of transactions through the Debt Management Account, and in delivering money (and reconciling payments) to the NLF. [The DMA came into operation in November 1999 since when the targeted requirements have been met]
5. To acknowledge all letters and e-mail inquiries from the public within eight working days and for at least 95 per cent. to be sent a substantive reply within three weeks. [Equivalent target in 1999–2000 fully met]
6. To achieve less than 10 breaches of the Operational Market Notices (excluding any breaches that the Treasury accept were beyond control of the Office). [There was one breach of the gilts Operational Notice in 1999–2000]
7. To ensure that the qualifications that the NAO have made in respect of the GOOA are satisfactorily addressed in the running and presentation of the DMA. [See target 4—The first DMA accounts will not be available until 2001–02]
8. To ensure that the statutory constraint on DMO market borrowing (not to exceed its deposits with the NLF and Bank of England) is always met. [New target]
9. To ensure that, where there is a late change in the forecast, any necessary use of end of day borrowing or lending facilities is notified by the due time. [New target]
10. To achieve a minimum of 99 per cent. (by value) successful settlement of agreed trades on the due date. [New target]
11. To achieve a minimum of 99 per cent. (by value) successful settlement of agreed trades on the due date. [New target]

Central Government Audit

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in taking forward the review of central Government audit announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 28 February. [120482]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I am pleased to announce that Lord Sharman, a former senior partner at KPMG International, has agreed to lead this review. Lord Sharman will report to (as well as being a member of) a Steering Group chaired by the Chief Secretary. Arrangements are being made to provide him with appropriate support. The full membership of the Steering Group will be announced in due course.

Fuel Duty

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason he raised fuel duty by 3.4 per cent. in his recent budget. [119992]

Mr. Timms: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Angus (Mr. Welsh) on 5 April 2000, Official Report, column 497W.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the increase in the overall running costs of Government departments. [119962]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The recently published figures for the running costs of Government Departments show that the final spend for 1998–99, the latest year for which final data are available, is £110 million less in cash terms than the previously published estimated outturn for that year.

Spending plans published by the previous Administration were higher overall for the three years 1997–98 to 1999–2000 than this Government have achieved.

In real terms, administrative expenditure totalled £15,014 million in 1994–95, £14,737 million in 1995–96 and £14,323 million in 1996–97. This Government spent £13,725 million in 1997–98 and £14,003 million in 1998–99—the last year for which final figures are available.

DEFENCE

Royal Fleet Auxiliary

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he will let the contracts for the two new Royal Fleet Auxiliary ships; what is his estimate of the cost of the contracts; and if he will make a statement; [118061]

(2) which British yards have tendered for the contract to build (a) one and (b) both of the new Royal Fleet Auxiliary ships; and if he will make a statement. [118058]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Warmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 20 April 2000:

I am replying to your questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about the procurement of two new Royal Fleet Auxiliary ships. I assume that you are referring to the Alternative Landing Ships Logistic (ALSL) Programme. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of Defence Procurement Agency.

Five UK shipyards have expressed an interest in the ALSL project and each is being invited to tender for their design and build. The five companies are:

Appledore Shipbuilders Ltd.

BAE SYSTEMS Marine Ltd.

Cammell Laird Shipyard

Harland and Wolff Shipbuilding and Heavy Industries Ltd.

Swan Hunter (Tyneside) Ltd.

The contract will be awarded to the shipyard that offers the best whole life value for money.

An invitation to tender (ITT) was issued on 14 April. Contract placement for the design and build of two new ALSLs is planned to occur in late 2000. The estimated cost for the construction of the two vessels is £138M.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what foreign yards his Department has contacted with regard to the construction of the two new Royal Fleet Auxiliary ships; and if he will make a statement. [118660]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Warmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 20 April 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the procurement of two new Royal Fleet Auxiliary ships. I assume that you are referring to the Alternative Landing Ships Logistic (ALSLs) Programme. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

No foreign yards have been contacted about the construction of the two ALSLs.

ALSLs are classed as "warlike" and will be built in the UK. Five UK shipyards have expressed an interest in the ALSL project and have been invited to tender for design and build.

Naval Procurement (Roll on/Roll off Ferries)

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect of his decision to finance the Royal Navy's requirement for roll on/roll off ferries by means of a public private partnership, on the protection of the relevant contracts from the Public Procurement Directive available to military procurement contracts under the Treaty of European Union. [118663]

Mr. Hoon: The Ministry of Defence's requirement for a strategic sealift capability is defined as non-warlike and ships providing the service will not be warships. Rather, they will be commercial standard ro/ros. The competition for the requirement has, therefore, to be conducted under European Community and World Trade Organisation public procurement rules. In such circumstances, a MOD requirement that stipulates that service providers or suppliers provide British built ships would be contrary to our EC obligations prohibiting discrimination on the grounds of nationality.

The requirement to compete in this way is not, therefore, influenced by whether the service is provided through PFI or more traditional procurement methods. We are, of course, doing all we can within the bounds of fair competition to give UK industry the best opportunity to participate in the programme.

Sandown-class Minehunters

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the contract for the last two of the Sandown-class minehunters will be completed. [118903]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 20 April 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when the contract for the last two of the Sandown Class Mine Hunters will be completed. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

HMS Blythe is due to be delivered to the Ministry of Defence on 31 March 2001.

HMS Shoreland is due to be delivered to the Ministry of Defence on 31 December 2001.

The contract also covers a 2 year warranty period for the completion of any outstanding work or defects after the delivery of each ship.

Aircraft Carriers

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with bringing into service the two new aircraft carriers; whether the target set in the Strategic Defence Review has been adhered to; and if he will make a statement. [119168]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Ilford, North (Ms Perham) and for Plymouth, Sutton (Mrs. Gilroy) on 17 April 2000, Official Report, columns 678–80.

Online Services

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the services which (a) his Department and (b) the executive agencies responsible to his Department (i) provide online and (ii) expect to be deliverable online by 2002. [119444]

Dr. Moonie: So that the Cabinet Office can publish the spring 2000 report monitoring progress towards delivery of all Government services electronically by 2005, we are currently collecting data which will include our progress on delivering 25 per cent. of Government services electronically by 2002. I do not want to pre-empt that report, but I can say that we currently provide a range of services electronically that include receiving recruitment applications and providing general and specialist information.

British Meat (Armed Services)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of (a) lamb, (b) pork, (c) chicken and (d) turkey purchased for the armed services was of British origin in the last 12 months. [119702]

Dr. Moonie: The supply of food to the armed forces is contracted out to 3663. Our policy is aimed at sourcing British products wherever these are competitively priced. Our contractor advises that over the last 12 months the following percentages of meat were sourced in the UK—2 per cent. lamb; 100 per cent. pork; 50 per cent. bacon and gammon; and 30 per cent. chicken. No turkey was sourced in the UK.

Meteorological Office

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Meteorological Office for 2000–01. [120296]

Dr. Moonie: The Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office is responsible for providing meteorological and related environmental services, including climate change prediction, to a wide range of customers, including the armed forces, Government, civil aviation, shipping, emergency services, media, commerce, industry and general public. It also undertakes research related to meteorology and climate. During 2000–01, the Meteorological Office will be set the following challenging targets:

Key Target 1:

To achieve a value for the Numerical Weather Prediction Index of at least 101.6 index points on 31 March 2001, from a baseline of 100.0 on 31 March 2000;

Key Target 2:

To achieve a value for the Service Quality Index of at least 107.1 index points on 31 March 2001, from a baseline of 100.0 on 31 March 1997, in line with customer requirements. The Index covers representative services and products for defence, civil aviation, public and business customers;

Key Target 3:

To achieve a value for the Efficiency Index of at least 103.7 index points on 31 March 2001, from a baseline of 100.00 on 31 March 2000;

Key Target 4:

To achieve an overall return on capital employed in 2000–01 of not less than 0 per cent., while returning an operating profit of at least £13.7 million before strategic investments;

Key Target 5:

To achieve strategic investments in 2000–01 of at least £13.5 million.

Key Target 6:

To achieve a total contribution from commercial activities in 2000–01 of not less than £3.575 million.

In addition, a new Staff Skills Index will be developed during 2000–01. The aim will be to establish a baseline of staff competency levels, derived from the Meteorological Office's new competency-based method of staff appraisal, so that sensible targets can be set and announced for subsequent years.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he plans to take in respect of (a) British military personnel serving in Zimbabwe and (b) Zimbabwean military personnel receiving training in the UK. [119866]

Mr. Spellar: There are no plans to change the position of British military personnel based in Zimbabwe or Zimbabwean military personnel currently receiving training in the UK. Nevertheless, we continue to keep the situation under review.

DERA

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many posts at the DERA establishment in Aberporth, Ceredigion will (a) transfer to NewDERA and (b) be retained within his Department as a result of his proposals in the public/private partnership consultation document. [119984]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman), 17 April 2000, Official Report, columns 366–67W, which outlined our proposals for the DERA public-private partnership. These are described in more detail in the consultation document, a copy of which can be found in the Library of the House, and on the Internet at www.mod.uk/commercial/ppp/dera/.

Under our current proposals, we envisage that the capabilities provided by Aberporth will form part of the NewDERA company. It is, therefore, likely that posts at Aberporth would transfer. However, no final decisions will be taken until the current consultation exercise comes to an end. We will of course listen carefully to views and comments received during this process.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Lord Levy

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 20 March 2000, Official Report, column 413W, if he will list the meetings between Lord Levy and (a) ministers and (b) officials within his Department on Government business other than in his capacity as the Prime Minister's personal envoy delivering messages in the Middle East. [117782]

Mr. Byers: Neither I nor any of my Ministers has met Lord Levy on Government business.

Gas and Electricity Bills

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the annual amount spent by the average consumer on (a) gas and (b) electricity where payment is by (i) a pre-payment meter and (ii) direct debit. [118913]

Mrs. Liddell: Provisional estimates of average domestic gas and electricity bills for domestic consumers in 1999 are as follows:

Average UK domestic fuel bills[1]—1999 provisional estimates

Payment method	Standard Quarterly credit	Monthly direct debit	Pre-payment meter
Gas[2]	305	267	318
Electricity[3]	265	256	282

[1] Averages weighted by customer numbers
[2] An annual consumption level of 18,000kWh has been assumed
[3] An annual consumption level of 3,300kWh has been assumed. Customers with electric central heating are likely to consume considerably more electricity

These figures are published annually in the Department's annual "Digest of UK Energy Statistics" and in the "Energy Report".

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when a calculation was made of the total amount of the increase of emissions which would result from the moratorium on gas-fired power stations; and what it was. [119286]

Mr. Byers: Our White Paper, "Conclusions of The Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation and Government response to fourth and fifth Reports of the Trade and Industry Committee", Cm 4071, stated that it was not possible to quantify the impact of the new energy framework on emissions. This is because the aim of the policy is not to achieve any particular outcome in terms of fuel mix in generation but to create a level playing field so that all forms of generation can compete equally and as a temporary precautionary measure to ensure the artificial encouragement for new gas plant that has arisen from distortions to the electricity market does not artificially undermine security and diversity of supply.

I announced on Monday 17 April that I would be lifting the stricter consents policy in October 2000 as soon as the new electricity trading arrangements were in place. The Government are determined to meet the UK commitment to reduce greenhouse gas emissions to 12½ per cent. below 1990 levels in 2008–12. The stricter consents policy and the timetable for its lifting is entirely consistent with meeting that target, and with moving towards our goal of reducing carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. on 1990 levels.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the use his Department, its agencies and public bodies will make of the powers relating to the authorised obtaining of communications data in Part I, Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill once the Bill is enacted. [119517]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department on 19 April 2000, Official Report, column 509W.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria the Towers Consortium need to fulfil to be eligible for regional selective assistance. [120094]

Mr. Byers: The criteria are set out in the booklet on the scheme, which is freely available. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Rover

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how quickly he could pay regional selective assistance to Rover following receipt of a valid application. [120093]

Mr. Byers: No such application has been received.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress the Steering Group on Electricity Security and Stability Issues has made in following up the recommendations made by the Consultants Merz and McLellan in the White Paper, Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation and Government Response to the fourth and fifth reports of the Trade and Industry Committee (Cm 4071), published in October 1998. [120544]

Mrs. Liddell: In the White Paper, the Government proposed a two-tier approach: an open consultancy group open to all interested parties, and a smaller steering group which would carry out most of the detailed work. The Steering Group, chaired by my Department, has published its findings today in the form of a consultation document. The group has concluded that the further work recommended by Merz and McLellan has been undertaken or is in hand and that there do not appear to be any immediate problems for the security and stability of the electricity grid system arising from the possible high levels of gas-fired generation. They have recommended that the Regulator should keep system security under review since the industry is undergoing a period of enormous change. The consultation document also addresses the individual recommendations by Merz and McLellan. Comments have been invited by Friday 16 June.

Copies of the consultation report are being circulated, in the first instance, to all those who responded to the consultation document on the Review of Energy Sources (listed in Annex G of Cm 4071). I am placing copies in the Libraries of the House. The document is also available on the DTI website at http://www.dti.gov.uk/energy/ and on request from Natalia Hill, EPTAC1b, DTI, 1 Victoria Street, London SW1H OET (Phone: 020 7215 6488).

Regeneration

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the number and value of (a) bids for and (b) grants made in each of the last three financial years for which figures are available, for each (i) area-based and (ii) other regeneration-related initiative for which his Department is responsible. [119800]

Mr. Caborn: I refer the hon. Member to the Annual report presented to Parliament pursuant to sections 11 and 15 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 and published on 26 July 1999.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for each (a) area-based and (b) other regeneration-related initiative for which his Department is responsible (i) the amount budgeted and (ii) the total expended in each financial year for the planned lifetime of each initiative. [119790]

Mr. Caborn: I refer the hon. Member to my Department's expenditure plans, Command 4611, published earlier this month.

Homeowner Compensation (Mining Areas)

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what compensation has been paid to homeowners whose properties (a) are rendered unsaleable and (b) have suffered undue financial loss in value due to their proximity to disused mineshafts in the last five years. [119782]

Mrs. Liddell: No compensation has been paid in these circumstances.

Radiocommunications Agency

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what targets he has set his Department's Radiocommunications Agency for 2000–01. [120543]

Mr. Byers: I have set the Radiocommunications Agency the following quality of service targets for 2000–01 in respect of its licensing and enforcement activities and correspondence. These are in addition to achieving an overall efficiency improvement of five per cent. over 1999–2000.

Licensing Targets

Category A

Licences that involve no frequency assignment site clearance or international co-ordination: 100 per cent. of applications for new or varied services to be awarded or rejected (with explanation) within five working days.

Category B

Licences that involve frequency assignment but no site clearance or international co-ordination: 90 per cent. of applications for new or varied services to be awarded or rejected (with explanation) within 15 working days; the remainder to be awarded or rejected within 25 working days or an explanation of the delay to be given.

Category C

Licences that require frequency assignment and site clearance and/or international co-ordination: 90 per cent. of applications for new or varied services to be awarded or rejected (with explanation) within 40 working days; the remainder to be awarded or rejected within 60 working days or an explanation of the delay to be given.

Enforcement

100 per cent. of safety of life services reports of interference to be investigated within 24 hours.

98 per cent. of business customers reports of interference to be investigated within five working days; the remainder within a further five days.

98 per cent. of domestic customers reports of interference to be investigated within one month; the remainder within a further month.

Correspondence

I also expect all correspondence from hon. Members delegated to the Chief Executive by Ministers or otherwise for reply, and all written complaints addressed to him about agency services, to be answered within 10 working days of receipt; the agency's inquiry point to respond to 95 per cent. of calls within 30 seconds; and 100 per cent. of valid invoices to be paid within 30 days of receipt (or as agreed with the supplier).

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES — VOLUME 348

SESSION 1999–2000

10th April—20th April 2000

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volumes of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The fortnightly index to Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references are to the column numbering in the daily parts and weekly edition of Hansard.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Fortnightly, volume and sessional indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings and written questions:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - Debates etc. (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
  - Sittings in Westminster Hall (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings); and
  - Questions (which includes written, oral and private notice questions).

ABBREVIATIONS

The following abbreviations are used in connection with the progress of bills:

- 1R=First reading
- 2R=Second reading
- Com=Committee stage
- Rep=Report stage
- 3R=Third reading
- res=resolution
- amendt(s)=amendment(s)
- *=matter taken formally without debate or division.

Parliamentary background

- The Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk contains a range of information about Parliament and the full text of some Parliamentary papers and proceedings including Hansard.
- Information on current Parliamentary business is provided in the House of Commons Information Office Weekly Information Bulletin, available on the website and from The Stationery Office (020 7873 8499).
- Further information on Parliamentary proceedings and procedures is available from the House of Commons Information Office (020 7219 4272).
